One has to wonder daily, and semi-daily, why it is that all the accepted rules for good manners and courteous behavior are suspended on the street cars; especially, why women appear to consider themselves exempt from all regulations. Those who are polite and obliging on other occasions will act as though they imagined that their nickel paid for the privilege of displaying all the rudeness and lack of consideration for others which they may care to show. They will seat themselves sideways, and spread their draperies as far as the exigencies of fashion will permit; they will refuse to move an inch though by doing so some poor strap-hanger may be accommodated with a seat; they will spread their packages and parcels around them, and above all, give their children public lessons in selfishness. But the most surprising matter is the way that mothers will calmly and deliberately lie, and reiterate their lies for the sake of saving five cents. If one may conclude anything from their apparel and general air of comfort, a paltry nickel must be an insignificant matter in the economy of their housekeeping, yet they will asseverate, for the sake of the miserable economy, that children of nine or ten are but five and entitled to ride free. On all occasions when there are half-fare rates for children the same process is gone through and the children, who know the number of their own years, and who are perfectly aware that it is all done to save a few pennies, are given practical lessons in falsehood and deception. The street car is an institution that has a demoralizing influence on women. It affects her poise, disturbs her equanimity, and brings into bold relief all her shortcomings. Woman, we know, is a little lower than the angels, but we also know that there are sometimes flaws in the jewel, specks on the peach, stains in the marble, and when a woman gets on a street car she enters the regions of the commonplace. She leaves her graces behind; especially when she is getting off. Her demonstrative method of stopping a car is sometimes positively vulgar. Some women make as much disturbance in attracting the attention of the man on the platform as they would in trying to prevent a catastrophe. They will wave their arms, or anything they happen to have in hand, prod the conductor with their parasols, or come ambling out on the platform two or three blocks before their destination to talk about it, and one would be inclined to think, from the elaboration of their instructions, that stopping a street car at a given point is as delicate a performance as a surgical operation. Just when or why women took to standing on the platform it would be hard to say. Possibly the pleasure of being very much in the way is the only reason for it, but the idea is one which appears to appeal with full force to the mannerless sex. It would be unchivalrous to deny women the right to enjoy fresh air, but in the exercise of that right they should not arrogate to themselves the privilege of blocking traffic and making other people uncomfortable. With her back to the door, or her body planted in the gangway, there she is rooted, and any one who wishes to pass in or out may do so if he can, for she will not stir hand or foot to aid him. On the contrary, she will mutter execrations if her chiffons and sashes and straggling ends are entangled, and the poor conductor may do nothing. Autocratic indeed is the inconsiderate sex, and we must bear with it ever mindful of its graces and virtues.

Reading Aloud

One cannot pick up a newspaper or a magazine these days without encountering some comment on the subject of reading aloud, which for the nonce, appears to have become one of the greatest of virtues. The pleasures of the family circle around the evening lamp, and the delights of the volume of poems in wood or on sea shore, with the one enchanted listener, are harped on unceasingly, as though all the transgressions of the decalogue were minor matters, provided only one be able and willing to talk out of a book. Reading aloud is all very well in its way, whether as a homely and utilitarian virtue or an accomplishment, but it has its limitations. Omitting the horrors of "elocutionary efforts," and the awful mouthings of the afflicted ones, which render it equally unbearable to listen or to look, there are people, perhaps one-half of the population of the world, who derive neither pleasure nor profit from being read to. They are not necessarily dull or lacking in the power of concentration, but they are so constituted that their capacity for absorbing information is chiefly through sight. They read rapidly, often have the ability to glance down a page or through a book and pick up by some indescribable mental process the essential facts set forth. Frequently without being distinctly aware of it themselves, they paraphrase and take short cuts through what they read, and the subject is fixed in their minds by the map of the page on which it appears, the mental reproduction of the appearance of the print. If asked to read aloud they are apt to read as rapidly as they would to themselves, and if they cannot do so they will gain nothing at all from the perusal, but must read again, in their own way, to themselves in order to collect the ideas. To such as these reading aloud is actual waste of time unless it is done for the sake of vocal exercise or practice in articulation. They are the eye-minded. On the other hand, the remainder of the world's population, being ear-minded, will enjoy reading aloud or being read to, and will absorb meanings through the ear, unaided by sight. They enjoy lectures, readings, recitations and all forms of instruction and entertainment in which the advantage reaches them through the sense of hearing. The printed page is the same hindrance to them that the spoken word is to the eye-minded. It is well to be able to comply with a request, to give pleasure to an invalid or a child, but it is a mistake and a very large one, too, to imagine that all the world is pining to be read to.

Would lay me down, at last, and gladly rest;
No more by sorrow than by joy oppressed,
Nor aught that makes a mockery of life:
Lead me to some lone headland bleak and bare,
Where the wild surge breaks in unceasingly,
And there upon the verge above the sea
Mark me a place where I, bereft of care,
May lay me down to my unbroken sleep.

A Word on Silence

BY HARRY COWELL.

Rest after work is good; and after life death; and after much noise, silence. When a storm that all day long has been shouting at the top of its voice sees fit at sundown to hold its peace, how strangely eloquent is the calm of the night! What unutterable things the stars say to us — and, mayhap, the moon. Or to pass from the hubbub of the street into the hush of some cathedral — what a word in the ear is that! And what lover of sweet sounds but has listened in almost painful ecstasy to that silence that is as the spirit of great dead music haunting the heart of man? Of a truth silence is golden good, from the simplest which is the mere cessation or absence of sound up to the most complex which is the beyond-speech well-known to the religious, the lover, the artist, and the philosopher.

And the silences of literature, how effective they are. We all know and love those rare authors who write so well that what they leave unsaid is ever more exquisitely moving than what they say; who suppress speech until it speaks with the tongue of angels. The words that are not there, how wonderful they are! No one who is fortunate enough to have had for friend one of your ideal talkers, with the perfected gift of graceful expression, with every-ready happy words spoken in happy ways, and unfortunate enough as to lose him by death, but will remember him by his awe-inspiring silences rather than by his astonishing speech. The silences of those who speak well are their masterpieces of expression. Silence is the language of great emotion. And the more perfect the power of utterance, the more significant the silence. Voices there are, too, like sweet silences, not sound at all but, as it were, the memory of music; voices that make you feel as though you were speaking to yourself in some unwonted beautiful way. Whenever God wishes some man to be ineffably happy, he creates a woman with such a voice.

As for me, I am weary of words; more and more I love to listen to smiles and glances of the eye. The mouths of the multitude make a noise and say nothing, and like Schopenhauer, I hate noises and nothingnesses. The day with her interminable gossip drives me frantic, and as a martyred lover in a drawing-roomful of chatter-boxes turns in desperation to his silent mistress, so I turn me to the discreet night who in her esoteric wisdom has learned how to set a seal upon her adorable lips. Great sorrow and great happiness say never a word and leave us who listen as dumbly eloquent as they. Those mute moments in which, after a vain use of speech, friends and lovers come to understand one another, put the unruly member to shame. Not that talk is utterly useless. We have all of us worked all the length of a summer day over some problem which stubbornly resisted what we in our modesty were pleased to call our superhuman efforts to solve it, and then woke up next morning to find that it had solved itself in our sleep. Well, as day-long thinking is to solution by night, so is the vain speech of lovers to their successful silences. The way for our lovers to keep their secrets is to tell them to each other and thereafter refrain from silence.

Many great silences there are, variously eloquent; as when the voice of some Demosthenes has just died away and the audience holds its breath; when mighty music, ceasing, is about to pass into memory; when the loquacious wind has talked itself out and the immeasurable murmurous sea is still; times of hush in the heart of a vast forest; when at night the rain stops pattering on the roof and the eaves drip no more; and others innumerable.

Whenever men, be they friends, enemies, or indifferent strangers, chat together, there is silent converse held between them, soul addressing soul directly and with truth; and it is not the things of the tongue but what things the silence says that are of interest and to which we should learn to give ear. Silence is the great interpreter of sounds. The voiceless voice qualifies or corrects the more or less garbled message of the tongue, that lying servant of the none too veracious intellect. But when the silent word flatly contradicts the word spoken, the "comedy imps" of George Meredith's make them merry at the expense of men, and there are ha-ha's and guffaws in hell. And lo, the sound of their merriment ceases not night nor day. Ah, my fellows, give them to be silent a brief space, I beg of you. What more beautiful or significant than such a silence? See there! I have myself marred the dream thing by speech.

Time and again while straining my inner ear to catch the true word of the soul has my outer ear failed to attend to the false word of the tongue, and I have been soundly berated for my rudeness, or laughingly twitted for my absent-mindedness, or pitied for my deafness with a pity a twin to contempt. Could I but once hear what a roomful of tonguesters were really saying and I would be willing to forego the farce of the theatre for all taciturn time to come. For the philosopher who finds himself "in company," as it is vulgarly called — and no philosopher is fool enough to find himself there very often, I can assure you — there are these alternatives: either to hold forth himself all the time at the top of his voice, thus drowning out the noise and nothingness that nowadays passes for conversation, and giving himself his only chance of listening to aught of interest; or else, to keep perfectly his peace so as to hear, not what men and women were pretending to say, but what they were saying. As a rule, the young lover of wisdom will choose the former alternative, the old lover, the latter.

Were I poet-musician and I would make you a song of the silences, a song without words or music, to be heard of the soul alone. Were I a painter or sculptor, and I would make you of timeless Beauty a picture without color or canvas, or a statue without clay or marble, to be seen of the soul alone. But were I what I am not, I should not be the bundle of desires that is I.

All the world all the while is striving, consciously or unconsciously, in this way or in that, by speech or by silence, to express itself. With man, the struggle for expression is omnipresent, and the spectacles thus afforded are more interesting and full of pathos than are those to be accredited to the struggle for existence proper. To realize self, to give self adequate expression is, so to speak, the Siamese-twin desire of the half-dust, half-divinity — man.

Life is speech surrounded on all sides by silences, and the soul of man would fain discover what these silences have to say. In love, our best speech is but silence; nay, silence is our best speech. Yes, my friends, out of a great silence we come hither, and for a little while make a little noise, or much, as the case may be, and again pass into a great silence.

The Mutiny of '83

BY ARTHUR H. DUTTON.

Twenty-one years ago, there occurred at Annapolis, Maryland, one of the most remarkable events in the military history of the United States, it being nothing else than an open mutiny on the part of the midshipmen of the United States Naval Academy, that place which shares with West Point the distinction of being the home of the most rigid discipline in this or any other country. Beyond a few vague and generally incorrect news despatches in the daily press for a few days after the outbreak, no account of this remarkable occurrence has ever yet appeared in print; in fact, no authentic account of it has ever appeared anywhere, even in the official reports entombed in the archives of the Navy Department.

The mutiny of 1883 was the direct outcome of the peculiar methods of administration adopted by Captain, now Rear-Admiral, Francis M. Ramsay, who relieved Rear-Admiral C. R. P. Rodgers as superintendent of the Naval Academy towards the close of the year 1881. From the time that he assumed the superintendency, Ramsay adopted the bull-in-the-china-shop methods of conducting the school. At the very start he commenced to play havoc with the cherished traditions of the midshipmen — Naval Cadets, as they were then called — and, being more of a martinet than a disciplinarian, it was not long before the once well-ordered institution was a mass of discontent, grumbling and insubordination.

One of Ramsay's first radical steps was to endeavor to break up the old class spirit, the spirit of rivalry between the four different classes by which each sought to outdo the other in scholarship, athletics and other desirable qualities. From being quartered according to classes, he mixed the cadets up and quartered them by "divisions," each division containing representatives of all four classes. He changed the time-honored insignia of rank of the cadet officers, revolutionized the methods of formations, and, above all, undertook to put a stop to the regulation by the cadets themselves of matters of personal honor. Throughout the history of the Naval Academy, whenever a cadet was guilty of falsehood or other dishonorable practice, his classmates immediately held a meeting, investigated the case, and, if the charges were correct, inflicted upon the offender the most severe of punishments, namely, placing him in coventry, which meant that no one but his room-mate would be permitted to speak to him under any circumstances, except officially, for periods varying from one year to the entire four years of the academic course.

Sometimes they would demand his resignation under pain of requesting the Navy Department to expel him. Ramsay did not like this. He wanted to do all the correcting himself. Whatever may be the ethics of this, and whether his position in this particular was right or wrong, he adopted methods for carrying out his ideas which resulted in the worst state of discipline that the Naval Academy has ever seen. Zeal was lost, cadets, as a general thing, exerted themselves in their drills no more than was absolutely required, enthusiasm waned, many resigned, and many who could not get parental permission to resign deliberately "bilged," that is to say, intentionally became deficient in their studies. For a year this state of affairs had continued. The immediate cause of the mutiny was another radical step on Ramsay's part. In the organization of the cadet battalion, cadets of the first class, and a few of the second class, are annually appointed as cadet-officers and cadet-petty-officers, having military command over the others. One of the punishments inflicted upon a cadet-officer is his reduction to the ranks, known as "breaking" him. Sometimes an excellent cadet-officer is broken for an infraction of the regulations. In such cases, the other cadets had for many years been in the habit, after the orders were read "breaking" the cadet-officer, provided he was a popular man, of showing their personal esteem for him by giving him three cheers. Ramsay mistook this for a spirit of defiance instead of testimony of sympathy and good will and recognition of personal worth. He resolved to put a stop to it. His opportunity came in January, 1883. During semi-annual examinations, a brilliant member of the first class, Charles E. Woodruff, now a Major in the Medical Corps of the United States Army.

gave some unauthorized assistance to a classmate who was in danger of bilging. This classmate was Charles J. Gross, now a business man of Baltimore, Maryland. It was discovered, and Woodruff, who was a cadet-gun-captain, was broken. As Woodruff was extremely popular with the entire battalion, the cheers usual in such cases were given for him, being proposed by Cadet-Lieutenant George W. Street, the most popular man at that time in the entire academy. As soon as the cheers were given, all went quietly away to their usual duties and nothing more was thought of the matter.

At dinner formation the following day, to the astonishment of every cadet, an order was read out breaking Cadet-Lieutenant Street for insubordinate conduct in proposing the cheers. No sooner had the words of the order passed the lips of the adjutant who read them than almost the entire battalion, without premeditation, for it was a complete surprise to all, broke forth into hisses, groans and hoots. Such a demonstration was, of course, a grave military offence. It was unheard of. Men drawn up in ranks, members of one of the most strictly disciplined corps in the world, suddenly were guilty, spontaneously and almost unanimously, of one of the gravest military crimes. The commissioned officer in charge and the Commandant of Cadets instantly took action. They went down the line, asked each cadet whether he had groaned or not, and nearly all answered "yes." Their names were taken and the order was then given to march into the mess-hall for dinner. The march was made in perfect silence until all were seated, whereupon pandemonium set in. There were loud cheers and cries for Street and Woodruff. The officer in charge then commanded perfect silence which was maintained for a time. When the meal was finished and the battalion was marched out, scenes surpassing those preceding took place. Cheers for Street and for Woodruff resounded one after the other; groans for Ramsay punctuated them. The bugle was called for the "assembly," the battalion was again formed, and again the commandant went down the line asking each cadet if he was guilty of this, that or the other manifestation. Each cadet answered truthfully as to his participation in the demonstrations. All were then ordered to their quarters.

By this time Ramsay had been notified of the situation. To make a long story short, quiet was not restored for some hours. To have dismissed every man participating would practically have been to have dismissed the entire battalion, for not over twenty or thirty had refrained from any demonstration of revolt. Those of the first class who had indulged in the mutinous conduct, numbering about forty, were placed under arrest and marched down on board the prison ship Santee. Nearly all of the first class, which corresponds to the senior class in the university, were imprisoned under guard on this old hulk for many days. The organization of the battalion was disrupted. Nearly all of the cadet-officers and petty-officers had been mutinous, and all such had been broken. New cadet-officers had to be appointed, and they were taken from the first, second and third classes and confined to the few who had not engaged in the demonstrations. It was seriously thought at that time that nearly the whole first class would be dismissed as ring-leaders. Some extremists even recommended that they all be court-martialed for mutiny, and a few were in favor of having them imprisoned for a long period. Wiser counsels, however, prevailed, and the Navy Department contented itself with dismissing Woodruff and Gross. The others were given heavy punishment in demerits and restrictions. The weekly hops in the gymnasium were suspended, liberty to go into the town of Annapolis was denied, there was no more paying of social visits to the families of officers within the academic grounds, and even the brief afternoon strolls with members of the gentler sex in "Lovers' Lane," were abridged or forbidden altogether. But for the rest of that year discipline at the Naval Academy was at a lower ebb than it has ever reached. There was some slight improvement the following year, but not until Ramsay's detachment in 1885 did conditions improve and the old standards return.

While the excitement was at its height, extreme suggestions were made on both sides. One cadet, for instance, was so hare-brained as to suggest that the armory be seized and that the whole battalion march out of the grounds, ready to defend itself against any one who started to interfere with it, and proceed to Washington on the Coxey-Army style, to lay their grievances before the Secretary of the Navy. This startling suggestion actually received many supporters. On the other hand, a Captain of Marines, a strict disciplinarian, who was at that time on duty at Annapolis, told a friend that he thought the mutinous cadets should have been drawn up in line, before firing squads, and shot down. Of course, between these two amusing extremes there were all manner of opinions, but the fact of their advancement shows the tumult that existed at the time. Happily, no such incident has ever since occurred at the Naval Academy, the superintendents of which since that time, as well as before, having been men who, however their ideas of maintaining discipline might have differed, were at least competent to control a lot of youths in exuberant health and to exercise discretion in the handling of youthful human nature.

To the civilian these manifestations may not seem wonderful, nor to the average college student startling, but to the military man, imbued with the correct notions of discipline, both Ramsay's mal-administration and the naval cadets' demonstrations of disapproval were enormities.

The Knights of the Temple

BY ROBERT MACE.

Though the Knights Templar of the Middle Ages are believed by many to be the prototypes of the members of the Masonic body who are about to hold their Triennial Conclave in this city, there is not the slightest historical connection between them. The original Free Masons were artisans, and it is said that the institution had its inception at the time of the building of the Temple of Solomon. Tradition tells us that the mechanics employed in the construction of the temple organized unions, and that there were three degrees known as Apprenticeship, Comradeship and Mastership. A similar institution existed in the early centuries of Christianity and in the Middle Ages, but it had no connection with the Orders of Chivalry. There is a resemblance between the formal law by which the military and religious knights bound themselves to defend the faith, and the ceremonies of Freemasonry, but it is probably due to the fact that the ritual of both is a blend of the ritualistic practices of pagan societies and the sacraments of the Church of Christ. Freemasonry as it existed through the Middle Ages was in a state of decay in the eighteenth century, and it was revived in England in the year 1717, when people of all crafts and professions were admitted to membership. The present school of Masonry goes no farther back than that year. Its principles are the amelioration, moral and material, of man, and though the modern Knights Templar, by vague suggestion, perpetuate the traditions of the warrior monks who battled around Jerusalem, it would require a great stretch of the imagination to trace characteristics of the mediæval heroes in the panoplied and bedighted citizens who emulate in trappings, if not in deeds, the knights of romantic and poetic memory. The two Orders are linked together, however, in a spectacular sense, and the one cannot be honored without remembering the other.

Though Freemasonry did not grow out of the chivalry of the Middle Ages, its Knights Templar find inspiration in the traditions of that poetic period, and are as a consequence impelled to appreciation of the high ideals that found expression in the exploits of which the troubadours so merrily sang. Chivalry in its first development was an instrument of peace, an agent of morality. It rose to its loftiest expression in the military orders, and sanctioned by the Catholic Church it became a most powerful auxiliary for the advancement of civilization. But in time it became the embodiment of worldly principles and aimed solely at the exaltation of material beauty, and then it was condemned by the Vatican.

The Knights Templars, as they were called before the invention of newspaper English, which is responsible for the present schoolmaster's plural, had their origin in the Holy Wars. About the year 1118 Hugh de Paganis or Payens, Godfrey de St. Omer and seven other knights bound themselves together by vows taken before the Patriarch of Jerusalem. In addition to the obligations of poverty, chastity and obedience they took an oath to wage unceasing warfare upon the heathen, and neither to give nor to ask quarter. Married men were admitted to their ranks, but not until after a period of probation had been passed. They were under obligations to attend mass daily unless their military duties prevented, when they were to recite certain prayers instead. They practiced all the austerities common to monkhood. The rigidity of their discipline was almost equal to that of the Trappists. They received the approval of the Pope, and about that time they adopted the white mantle. Pope Eusebius later added a plain red cross on the left breast. The eight pointed red cross on the shoulder was a still later innovation. The banner of cloth, half black and half white, to intimate that they were candid and fair towards Christians, but black and terrible to infidels, was also adopted at that time. It was called Bausant, or Beausant, and the word was adopted as a battle-cry.

The history of the Crusade is the history of the military achievements of the Knights, and had their discretion equaled their valor and courage, the end of the Holy Wars would have been different from what it was. Little by little luxury crept in, until, instead of a plain, bare barrack, little more than a forwarding station, the Preceptories were transformed into palaces with pleasure grounds, the number of retainers increased, and the knights showed more and more unwillingness to leave a life of ease and plenty for the rigors of uncertain warfare. Says Lucas Beaumanoir, the Grand Master of Sir Walter Scott's romance, "Ivanhoe":

"What say our statutes, and how do our brethren observe them? They should wear no vain or worldly ornament, no crest upon their helmet, no gold upon stirrup or bridle bit; yet who now go pranked out so gaily as the poor soldiers of the Temple? They are forbidden by our statutes to take one bird by means of another, to shoot beasts by bow or arblast, to halloo to a hunting horn, or to spur the horse after game. But now, at hunting and hawking, and each idle sport of wood and river, who so prompt as the Templars in all these fond vanities? They are forbidden to read save what their Superior permitted, or listen to what is read, save such holy things as may be recited aloud during the hours of reflection; but lo! their ears are at the command of idle minstrels and their eyes study empty romances. They were commanded to extirpate magic and heresy. Lo! they are charged with studying the accursed cabalistic secrets of the Jews, and the magic of the Paynim Saracens. Simplicity of diet was prescribed to them, roots, pottage, gruels, eating flesh but thrice a week, because the accustomed eating of flesh is a dishonorable corruption of the body; and behold, their tables groan under delicate fare! Their drink was to be water, and now, to drink like a Templar is the boast of each jolly boon companion. This very garden, filled as it is with herbs and trees sent from the Eastern clime, better becomes the harem of an unbelieving Emir than the plot which Christian monks should devote to raise their homely pot herbs."

In spite of the high aims of their founders the Templars became a turbulent body. Though they were never numerically great according to our ideas, their organization was undoubtedly a menace to the peace of Christendom after the abandonment of the Crusades deprived them of the legitimate outlet for their energy. At the beginning of the fourteenth century, when Philip IV began to compass their downfall, it was estimated that there were about fifteen thousand knights, divided into nine thousand consistories, with an estimated income of thirty million dollars a year. Here was an enormous body of disciplined soldiers, with practically unlimited wealth at their command, yet absolved from military or civic obligations outside of their own order, and with spiritual allegiance to the Pope alone. There was a project under consideration at that time of uniting the Templars and the Hospitallers into one order, and thus increasing the danger. Though Philip IV of France had taken sanctuary amongst them when hard pressed by a Parisian mob, he was not troubled by any scruples of generosity, and the well-filled treasury of the Preceptory was too great a contrast to his own empty coffers for his covetous soul to withstand. For half a century previous to this time rumors had been whispered about concerning the secret practices of the Templars, and at the instigation of Philip, Pope Clement V decreed that the Knights should disband. They were accused of all sorts of crimes but their defenders say that they were the victims of perjury. Many of them were burned at the stake and their property confiscated. The order that was baptized in blood was dissolved in fire. Tragic was the end of a noble institution which contributed to the glories of an age renowned for valor and courtesy. It was an institution that inculcated lessons of morality. Its members succored orphans and widows and were ever on the alert to protect the weak. Their aim was to acquire a character sans peur et sans reproche, but in time, debased by luxury, they forgot the precepts of their Order, and gave themselves up to excesses that imparted color to the accusations of their enemies.

The Saunterer

In the Limelight

Not even the divine powers with which the Hayes brothers of San Jose have been vested can rescue them from the embarrassing plight into which they were plunged at Santa Cruz. Their newspaper influence, their wealth and their confidential relations with God enabled them to boss things in the Garden City. The small-fry politicians of the Santa Clara Valley regarded them with fear and awe. Their supremacy was acknowledged throughout the prune belt, and hearkening to messages from above they resolved to extend their dominion over the State. Exponents of civic righteousness at home, each a self-admitted incarnation of political purity, they seem to have made a combination with that paragon of rectitude, Abe Ruef, for the purpose of enlarging the scope of their political activity. And now rumor sayeth that the highly moral plane upon which they have been performing is not strictly on the level, but rumor often errs. It is possible that the Hayes brothers had only one purpose in view—the shelving of Shortridge. However, developments seem to justify the conclusion that notwithstanding their alleged intimacy with Christ, they had not the strength of character to abjure entangling alliances with the exponents of slum politics. Somebody has defined a political boss to be "a man who started in as a reformer, got onto the game and decided to be on the level." Perhaps the Hayes brothers have "got onto the game."

The Joke on Hayes

The strategists of the "machine" converted the Hayes brothers by handing them out a few political honors, and for no other purpose than to dissuade them from objecting to the nomination of Louis Oneal for State Senator. Charley Shortridge was sacrificed to appease the vindictive wrath of the two Christian gentlemen, but at the same time a practical joke was played on E. A. Hayes; he was nominated for Congress in the Fifth district. His nomination, aside from the humor of it, is regarded as a capital stroke of strategy by the machine politicians who have deluded him into the notion that they are his friends. They know that the Hayes family covets the gubernatorial nomination, and they are confident that after E. A. Hayes gets through running for Congress the futility of seeking to achieve the higher ambition will be apparent. In other words, it is believed that E. A. Hayes hasn't a ghost of a chance of being elected. The principal objection to him is that he is a millionaire newspaper owner. The folly of owning a newspaper and running for office on the strength of it is pretty well understood in California.

Why the Prune-Growers are Sore

When a millionaire newspaper proprietor wants an office in this State he should begin operations by separating himself from his journal. The people of this city are heartily sick of being lectured by the men in "tall towers," and they will readily sympathize with the people of San Jose, where the Hayes brothers own two newspapers which they bought for the purpose of running the town. Congressman Wynn should have a walk-over in this campaign. Not only is he newspaperless but he makes no pretension to divine power, and he never advised the people of the Santa Clara valley to hold their prunes until the price went up. That was what the Hayes brothers did, and the prune growers, having confidence in what they probably regarded as a tip from heaven, held their crops until the market broke.

Ruef's Nemesis

The row between Charley Shortridge and Abe Ruef growing out of the "turning down" of the former at Santa Cruz promises highly interesting developments. Shortridge may be susceptible to pacificatory measures, but he has solemnly vowed to undertake the crushing of Abe Ruef, and to camp on the latter's trail until his purpose is accomplished. From now on Charley Shortridge is to be the Nemesis of one Abraham Ruef. He has been shouting his vows from the housetops and the curbstones, and his manner and tone are those of a man in deadly earnest. He does not wish to be regarded as a reformer intent on purifying the Government, but he has resolved to discourage Ruef methods. He has long been a programmer, and has facetiously admitted that he spent half his time finding out what the program was and the other half in carrying it out. He believes in the expediency of practical politics, but objects to having the Republican party throttled by a man who gave the party the double-cross. He says that his mission is to awaken an honest sentiment in the party against a mongrel boss who cracks the Labor party whip over the heads of Republicans.

Keep Your Eye on Charley

"Watch me," says Shortridge, "and you'll see me going some. I'm going to appeal to the people. I think they are sick and tired of Ruef methods, and I'm going to rouse them." Those who have heard Shortridge on the stump will agree that he is no ordinary spellbinder. His rhetoric is picturesque, and the boldness of his utterances never fails to attract. He has been phrase-making ever since the Santa Cruz convention, and he has coined some very choice sentences descriptive of the Ruef personality. It has been suggested that Abe will send a gang to break up any meeting that Shortridge holds, but the ebullient statesman says that he will be prepared for such tactics. As Shortridge is a hold-over Senator he will have many opportunities to swat the boss at Sacramento, and he has declared his intention to do so. Of course there is a possibility of his being placated meanwhile, but he talks like one who believes that he has a sacred mission. He seems to regard himself as a modern Moses commissioned to lead the children of the G. O. P. out of the clutches of Abe Ruef. At times he wears the aspect of a militant Moses, and talks of pulling Abe's nose.

Opposition At Santa Cruz

Ruef is cunning and resourceful, but he has aroused a man who has had great experience in politics, and who is skilled in all the tricks of the game. Moreover Shortridge is likely to have many sympathizers. Though Ruef has a large following he has also many enemies. His unfortunate personality, and his dictatorial policy have provoked much dissatisfaction in the Republican party. Though he holds the whip-hand in San Francisco he exercises no influence in the interior. Even the machine politicians of the interior could not be swung into line for him at Santa Cruz. On the contrary they worked against him at every opportunity. The proposition to nominate the electors at large was presented by Ruef and it was beaten, though it was approved by the organization. He wanted a man named Burchard, an attorney, who formerly lived in San Jose, nominated for Congress in the Fifth, and the delegates were eager for a chance to whack the Burchard lizard. Now, it is said, he proposes nominating Burchard for Superior Judge, and already the knockers in San Jose are "whispering" his candidate with a vengeance.

The Weakness of The Boss

I heard a reformer who is something of a cynic say, the other day, that Ruef is a wonderfully sagacious politician; that he is a man of brains; that his methods have received the endorsement of the people of this city, and that he has such a strong following of men who say that he "keeps his word," that there is not much likelihood of his being shorn of his power. There is some truth in the reformer's dictum, but I do not believe that Mr. Ruef is destined to enjoy a protracted reign. He has an abundance of cunning but he lacks the poise essential to success in the role of political leader. If he were as smart as his friends say he is he would not have provoked in so short a time, the opposition that is now crystallizing throughout the State. He is skilled in ward politics but he is essaying a task beyond his capacity. He has mixed his law practice up too much with his political business, and he has been too eager to have every body know that he is the "whole thing."

A Demand For Phelan

The "organization" assimilated the Ruef forces after the last municipal campaign. Ruef's friendship was considered important because he had behind him the whole city government. He was taken into camp with the understanding that he should handle the whole works, and he has been handling them, but wherever there was opposition to him at the recent primary he was beaten. The whole organization was concentrated against Senator Dick Welch, and though the latter had to contend against the election officers, the police and the Schmitz-Ruef wing of the Labor Party he was victorious. And now, so great is the dissatisfaction with Ruef rule in this city that a non-partizan movement is being organized by some of our wealthiest citizens. I hear that they expect to hold a convention for the next municipal election, and that they are confident of inducing James D. Phelan to become their nominee for Mayor. It will be remembered that when Mr. Phelan went out of office, some years ago, he did not stand very high in public favor; and yet it is pretty generally believed that he could be elected Mayor next year. There are many flaws in Mr. Phelan's personality; to further his political interests he will do many queer things incompatible with a high sense of honor, but during his administration there were no scandals. It was a clean and dignified administration, and I believe that despite the disfavor in which Phelan was held at its close by reason of his devotion to his political interests, public sentiment is ripe for him once more.

She's "Close Up" to Albert Edward

King Edward, according to newspaper gossip, is taking a very deep interest in the convalescence of Mrs. Arthur Henry Paget, who was injured some weeks ago by falling down the elevator shaft in her home in Belgrave square. It is said that he inquires about her health every morning, and that he instructed Sir Henry Treves, surgeon to royalty, to attend her. Evidently the gossips of London believe that his Royal Highness is sustaining his reputation as a gay dog. But the probability is that the despatches to the American papers are the handiwork of Mrs. Paget's press-agent, for it is said that she contemplates making a trip to Newport as soon as she recovers. Mrs. Paget has been a very unfortunate woman in society ever since she made her debut in the home of her mother, Mrs. Paran Stevens in New York. Mrs. Stevens was the predecessor of Mrs. Astor, and with Ward McAllister she ruled New York society more absolutely than does Mrs. Astor today. Miss Minnie Stevens was far from beautiful, but her pennies attracted a horde of suitors. After a summer in London she married Arthur Henry Paget of the Coldstream Guards, one of the handsomest men in England. He is the second brother of the Marquis of Anglesey, and he is the uncle of the present bankrupt Marquis. Miss Stevens' marriage enabled her to enter the nobility set, and by her intelligence and wit she captivated Prince Albert Edward, through whose offices she became one of the most conspicuous women in England. She has launched many Americans in London society. Being free from snobbishness she is very popular.

A Great Scientists' Plight

It seems a pity that some of our millionaires who pose as patrons of art, literature and the sciences, could not have gone to the rescue of George Washington Dunn, before the aged scientist made his application for admission to the Almshouse. Dunn is ninety-one years of age, and has been a member of the Academy of Sciences for years. It scarcely redounds to the credit of that body that one of its most brilliant members should be reduced to asking public aid in his declining years. Of all the naturalists who have gained favor, Dunn has been the most modest and unpretentious, yet in his specialties he was at the top of the ladder. He is a botanist also, but a specialist in lepidoptera and coloptera. He is an impressive figure from the artist's viewpoint, fully six feet tall, with snow-white hair and beard. He has always been abstemious in his habits, neither drinking nor smoking, and always ate whole wheat or graham bread. When on a search for a specimen he would start off at daylight, with half a loaf in his pocket, and continue his hunt all day on no other food. Absolutely fearless, he said the safeguards college men adopted to avoid snake bites and other dangers were absurdities, and that guides and attendants were of no use, usually abandoning their charges when in a tight place. I remember an incident of which he told that occurred when he was in Arizona. He was up among the rocks, the guide with the mule carrying the provisions and camp paraphernalia, when three Apaches in full war paint came up. The guide rode off and left Dunn alone. He came down from the rocks and the Indians went off without making any demonstration. Later he heard that it was his height and remarkable appearance that impressed them. They took him for a great Medicine Man. It was Dunn who dubbed David Starr Jordan a "bookentist," one who knew more of what others had written than of what he had learned at first hand. He never cared to own property, for he said it would hamper him if he desired to start off on a sudden trip to Arizona or South America.

The Church School

The founder of Irving School, Rev. E. B. Church, died last week. I remember when he started the school it was called Church's, and established in the old Treat house at the corner of Shotwell and Twenty-fourth streets. It was a large house, L-shaped, with porches all around, upstairs and down; it must have contained thirty rooms at least. The building had been the club-house of the old Mission race-track, and there was an immense garden, orchard, etc., covering two blocks. George Treat, the house's original owner, was a rich mining man, but he failed and his house went in the crash. One of his daughters, Mrs. Alexander Morrison, is a clever artist of the Sketch Club clique. Sadie Treat, the youngest girl, attended the Church school, and as she was born there and had spent most of her life under the roof and in the big garden, she knew more about the rambling old house than the new authorities did. Later, the Rev. Church moved his institution to Valencia street, naming it Irving, after Washington Irving, and still later it moved to the other side of town. All of the rich Mission families sent their children to Irving, and the Alumnae association numbers many society women. Maud James, daughter of Jefferson James of diamond stud fame, was one of the star graduates. She married Walter C. Graves.

Contest Over The Cline Fortune

As I prophesied some time ago the will of that eccentric old millionaire, Nicholas O. Cline, has led to a big family contest. The grinning old curmudgeons who hug the corners of clubdom and jibe at their fellow mortals declare that he caught the will contest infection by spending so much of his time in California, for though Cline's business headquarters were in Chicago the old fellow spent the better part of his time meandering between the best hotels of San Francisco and Los Angeles. He had an idea that the climate and the club air here were prolonging his life. But his hopes on that score are all over now; even the hopes he may have entertained of bequeathing his millions as he wished seem to be glimmering. His club mates here will be surprised to learn that criminal charges have been interjected into the contest.

End of An Eccentric Millionaire

When the eccentric millionaire bade his friends here the last farewell he returned to Chicago and took up his quarters all alone in one of his big houses that contained over one hundred rooms. There he lived in seclusion with one servant, his only solace being his violin. All his friends looked forward to an early move to his new purchase, the Schley manor in Frederick, crowded with rare paintings and articles of vertu, among which he had planned to pass his declining years. A few months ago however sickness came upon him and he began to fail rapidly. When he felt his condition was really serious he hurriedly sent for his nearest nephew, Casper Cline, to take him to the Schley mansion. As soon as young Cline saw his uncle's condition he changed the plan and had him at once removed to a hospital. While the millionaire's life was ebbing away in the hospital the Illinois Steel Company wanted thirty acres of his land for a cement mill. They paid him fifty thousand dollars cash for it, and now one wing of the relatives declare that young Casper Cline wheedled this money out of his uncle while he was in a sinking fit.

Embezzlement Charged

Aquila R. Yeakie of San Francisco and George T. Cline of Los Angeles learned of their uncle's condition and at once hastened to his bedside. They discovered the fifty thousand dollar episode and other things, and promptly began proceedings to have their cousin arrested. Casper Cline's answer was to produce witnesses who swore that the uncle had freely given the money to him. And that is the condition of the family fight at present. By the terms of the old gentleman's will, one-fourth of his big fortune goes to his brother, but minus fifty thousand dollars; one-fourth to his sister, Mary L. Yeakie of Frederick, Md.; one-fourth to be divided among George T., William H., Caspar W. and John C. V. Cline of Los Angeles, nephews, and one-fourth to Caspar C. and Isaac C. Crum of Oakland, also nephews.

Raphael Weill returned from Paris last Saturday, and presided over the Sunday Breakfast Club's dejeuner at the Bohemian Club the following day. The Breakfast Club has not held meetings for some time, as both Mr. Weill and Colonel Hawes, who alternately presided, were away, the former in France, the latter in Honolulu.

Because of a Fevered Brow

There was very little excessive gaiety at this year's Bohemian Club Midsummer Jinks. Everyone had a fine time but there was no undue hilarity. One of the picturesque figures was Martinez, the artist, with a large red flowing tie setting off his dark features. Another was Cadenasso, who also wore a flowing cardinal neck-cloth and a Panama hat without any hatband, but with such a beautiful hirsute adornment as Cadenasso has, he can afford to be eccentric in head-gear. The night of the Jinks one of the younger members of the club became so warm that he jumped into the swimming hole with all his clothes on. He swam about in his clothes and then went, dripping, to his tent. He was in too much of a hurry to cool his fevered brow to stop to remove his clothes, he explained afterward.

Loeb's Suggestion

The photographs of the camp and Jinks are now on exhibition at the Bohemian Club and some excellent ones were taken. Among others was a group of the imported savants of the summer school, and very excellent likenesses they are. When they were being taken, Professor Loeb was joking in his odd, broken English. "Ah yes," he was saying, "take pictures of us for the High Jinks, by all means, but if you want a photograph of the Low Jinks, then you must use the Roentgen ray and take our stomachs."

Apropos the Sperry-Carrigan Marriage

The event of the week for all the towns about the bay was the Sperry-Carrigan wedding, as both the contracting parties have relatives by the score living within the radius of a few square miles. The trousseau, selected by Mrs. Will Crocker, is marked by the elegant simplicity that so many strive for but few attain. Though selected in Paris it is not so elaborate as some of our society buds have bought right here at our own little shops. Anna Sperry was one of the members of the Gaiety Club last winter, and I am told was much chagrined that her fiancé was invited but once to the dances given by the club. As all the men invited were chosen by ballot, it seemed as if there was a conspiracy to keep the young lieutenant out. Possibly he was unpopular because it was known that he was engaged, and engaged men are never in favor with debutantes.

Lucky Miss Russell

Charlotte Russell's wedding presents are beginning to arrive in great numbers, and I hear are handsomer than even those given to Mabel Cluff when she married Jack Wilson. Mr. de Sabla gave his wife's daughter a cheque in several ciphers, and the Clarks and the Tobin clan spread themselves considerably on their gifts to "Clem's" bride-to-be.

A new engagement just announced across the bay is that of Dr. Etta Steinegger and Dr. Charles Lund. Miss Steinegger is the daughter of the M. Steineggers of Fruitvale and a sister of Emil Steinegger, the pianist.

"I have just given Missus warnin'," said the butler to the ostensible head of the family.

"I am very sorry that you feel, James, you must leave us."

"I'm sorry for you, sir," returned James, "but I'm thankful I ain't the one that's married to her."

Bertha Smith's Book

Some time ago Galen Clark of the Yosemite wrote an interesting little book about the valley, which is one of our State's chief glories, and now Miss Bertha H. Smith has selected six of the Yosemite's legends that enrich the associations of the valley. In the myths Miss Smith has retained the original Indian names. Florence Lundborg, whose beautiful illuminations of the Rubaiyat won her such high place among the local artists, has made thirteen full-page illustrations for Miss Smith's book, and the pictures are vastly different from the average "landmark" sketch. Paul Elder and Company will have the book on the market very soon.

Another Burgess Freak

The latest expression of the eccentricity of Gelett Burgess is characteristic. He has been spending his summer at Scituate, Mass., and he employed his leisure moments in building a little house out of packing cases, in the corner of an adjacent orchard. This building, which he has named the "Goop Hotel," consists of four rooms, two stories, piazza, doors and windows complete, the whole covering an area of six by eight feet. The rooms are high enough for a child of four to stand erect therein. Burgess, who is something of a dwarf, has spent many hours writing in one of them. The house is an object of interest to children for miles about, and therefore the industrious poseur has achieved his purpose. If affected eccentricity were an index to genius Gelett Burgess would be regarded as the wonder of the age.

Herr X Was a Bad Man

The very latest book to bid for popular favor on the strength of its sensationalism is "The Diary of a Musician." The hero of the story is a certain Herr X, who bears a very strong resemblance to Jan Kubelik. The diary tells the story of his American tour, and Herr X is represented as a most shockingly immoral character, but Kubelik might object to having the parallel pressed between the hero of the book and himself. Herr X tells of his love affairs with women so numerous that he himself cannot remember them all. He relates how the first object of his adoration died heartbroken at his neglect; how a famous Russian countess pursued him until she became a veritable nightmare to him; how an English girl killed herself because he could not return her love; how, when he received word of the birth of his daughter, he was distracted between his insane joy at the news, and his inability to recall the name of her mother.

"Is Binks a professional man?"

"Yes, in an amateurish sort of way."

She Changed Her Mind

Great was the surprise of Chispa Sanborn's friends when they learned of her marriage with Gerald A. Griffin. It was understood that she was engaged to Sanford K. Marsh of Rochester, New York. He met her about a year ago when she was singing at the Doctors' Daughters' Doll Show at the Palace. But evidently that affair was merely in the nature of a passing fancy. Mrs. Griffin is a very attractive young woman, and she loves a dash of romance. The young couple are receiving many felicitations.

He Was Emperor of an Island

Though something over a year ago one of the dailies devoted considerable space to the story of Washington Victor Plise and the island of which he was sole owner and emperor, when he died last week nothing but the bare mention of his death appeared in any of the papers. Washington Victor Plise de Losada de Rocheblare figured largely in the social history of this part of the world in the early seventies. He came here from Panama and cut quite a dash in society at that time. He was the protege of General Frisbie of Vallejo, a son-in-law of General Vallejo, and when engaged as teacher of music for a Miss Murphy fell in love with his pupil and eloped with her. She was a poor girl but pretty and romantic, and Plise captured her fancy with his Monte Cristo tales of his pearl fisheries in Panama. They went to Panama for the honeymoon but disenchantment followed swift on the heels of the romance, which ended in a divorce. Plise married again and at his death left a widow and four children. Though back in the forties he was a rich man, he had been for some years past a modest teacher of piano and voice culture, occupying a little flat in Howard street. He was said to be the owner of the island of Pedro Gonzales, lying near the western outlet of the proposed Panama canal, and perhaps some day his heirs may realize something from the property.

Married in Manila

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sleeper have sent out cards announcing the marriage of their daughter Anita to Mr. Charles C. Cohn. The event, which took place at Manila on June ninth, was the culmination of a romance dating from the college days of the young couple, both of whom are graduates of the State University. Mrs. Sleeper is still at the islands, having accompanied her daughter on her trip. Miss Sleeper is a niece of Frank Chapin, who is well known from his long connection with the California-street road, and who has recently assumed charge of the San Jose street-car system.

Teachers Asked To Become Political Touts

Mr. Roncovieri expects each teacher in the school department to get ten votes for his proposed charter amendment, taking the financial management of the schools out of the hands of the Board of Supervisors. This is taking the schools out of politics with a vengeance. Mr. Roncovieri does not state what penalty awaits the pedagogue who neglects to work up the ten expected votes, but she will probably be "marked" on the books where the semi-annual reports on the efficiency of teachers are preserved. The practice of asking teachers and pupils to use their influence in touting the pet schemes of School Directors is a bad one and should be frowned upon. The matter of the proposed charter amendment is one which should be decided upon by the taxpayers without any influence from the teachers. Neither should the latter be bribed by promises of better school facilities if they succeed, nor threats of reduced salaries if they fail in working for the end desired by Mr. Roncovieri. They should not be forced to become interested parties in the matter.

Mr. Oscar Maurer, "the poet of photography," as Gabrilowtsch, the pianist, calls him, who with his wife, her sister, Mrs. Gray, and her mother, Mrs. Volney D. Moody, has been taking a long honeymoon holiday in Europe, is on his way home to San Francisco—his eyes full of the Alps, his ears full of "Parsifal"—to take up again his chosen work of making poems of the human face. Throughout his extensive wanderings Mr. Maurer made it a point to learn how European cities were progressing in the art of photographic portraiture, and is convinced that, although here and there are to be found amateurs who rank high, nowhere is such good work done professionally as in our own San Francisco, where a few enthusiastic disciples of the great Steiglitz are bent upon proving the interesting theories of the master that photography may be done so as to deserve a place among the fine arts, alongside of painting and sculpture. "In Paris," he writes to a friend, "I visited the Photographic Salon and was truly surprised at the mediocre work displayed there. By far the best work exhibited in this same French salon was a collection of American pictures."

A Stag Dinner

Richard M. Hotaling gave a stag dinner at his country place in Marin county on Monday night, at which several of the more prominent participants in the recent Bohemian Jinks were the guests. The guests remained for the night and the affair was very jolly. Mr. Hotaling leaves for St. Louis next week. He was an exhibitor of fancy livestock of the Holstein persuasion at the recent State Fair at Sacramento and carried off several blue ribbons.

The Versatile Wonkowsky

Brigadier-General Robert Wonkowsky, commanding the First Brigade of the California National Guard, is a good officer, but during the recent encampment at Atascadero he made some kaleidoscopic changes of attitude, which were interesting, to say the least, from a military standpoint. One day there was a hotly-contested game of baseball between the commissioned and the non-commissioned officers of the Seventh California infantry, which hails, like Wonkowsky himself, from Los Angeles. The portly general added lustre to the rank he holds by the skill with which he played third base on the commissioned officers' nine. It was a great sight to see a raw-boned corporal trying to slide under the General's legs at third bag. Whatever may be thought of the dignity of this exhibition, General Wonkowsky is being praised for the good hard sense that he displayed in a short address he made to the National Guard officers on the last day of camp. He made many suggestions that were full of wisdom, not the least of which was to the effect that there would have been less grumbling among the militiamen if the officers had not encouraged it. There is too great an inclination among National Guard officers, who are elected to their offices by vote of the enlisted force, to "bootlick" their men, a practice subversive of discipline.

Our Gracious Naval Men

It is not at all surprising that the navy gets all the money it wants from the taxpayers. While comparatively few of the great public know much about the naval needs of the country, nearly every citizen who has come in contact with the service is at once favorably impressed with its personnel. Unlike the army, which seems to regard with disdain the public which pays it, the navy is ever ready and willing, no matter at what inconvenience, to extend the glad hand. This has been demonstrated during the visit of the Pacific squadron to this port. Visitors have not only been admitted in great numbers on board the warships, but they have been received with genial welcomes, both naval officers and men seeming to have the knack of making their guests feel at their ease. Then, when the attention of the Navy Department was called to the Knights Templar conclave, the sailing orders of the squadron were at once modified, for the purpose of keeping the ships longer in port, that the crowds of visitors from the interior might see them. Up north, the Wyoming has been diverted from her regular itinerary in order that she may participate in a small local celebration. It is these things that popularize the navy and bring it closer to the people.

By Way of Suggestion

I have often wondered that there should be so many non-combatants in the army, and that military experts should not think it worth while to consider the difference between the navy and the army in that respect. On board a man-of-war, every man is a combatant, from the captain down to the lowliest mess attendant. Each has his effective station in action; even the clerical yeomen and the ship's cooks. Those who do not form parts of the fighting guns' crews are employed to pass ammunition, get ranges, tend signals, or act in other belligerent capacity. In the army, on the other hand, there are many men who take no real part in combat. There are civilian teamsters, who never fire a shot, and do not even reach the firing line, and every headquarters has its corps of civilian clerks, who are just so much additional impedimenta. Naval officers not only handle the ship and direct the fire of the guns, but sometimes even do the aiming themselves. It seems strange that these camp-followers are not utilized in a military sense. It would be a manifest gain if every man in an army were furnished with a weapon and given an allotted place in action, as in the navy. There is usually, an officers to every twenty men, sometimes to every fifteen. If each officer, including quartermasters, engineers, paymasters and all, were so armed it would increase the fighting force by about five per cent. The Boers, I believe, armed their officers, with good results. Of course, surgeons, being under the protection of the Red Cross, would be exempted. It is a strange system that hampers an army with men who cannot inflict loss upon the enemy.

Officers who have sailed with Commander Alexander McCrackin, U. S. N., predict that his new command, the cruiser Des Moines, will be a crack ship, for McCrackin is well known for his attention to smartness. It was his abhorrence of anything savoring of slackness that earned for him, years ago, the nickname in the service of "Johnny Haul-taut."

"You say that Dauber is not an artist and yet I know he did these."

"And that's how I found out he was no artist."

The Spectacular Crowleys

The Crowleys are once more contributing to the gayety of Oakland. The story of Mrs. Crowley's jealousy is an old one across the bay. Some years ago she was a pupil of Hugo Mansfield, and he married her. It was a brief and stormy union. They were divorced and the grass widow became the wife of Dr. Crowley of Oakland. Their quarrels have been in the nature of a continuous performance. About five years ago they were divorced and in another twelvemonth they remarried. For awhile their quarrels amused society, but lately they have been coldshouldered by people who did not approve of the notoriety which they had achieved. They are now making a second trip through the divorce mill.

A Greek Play For Berkeley

Sophocles' "Ajax" is to be presented in the Hearst amphitheatre of the University of California about the second week in October. The performance will be under the auspices of the classical department of the college, and will be given in full and in the original Greek, under the direction of Miss Mabel Hay Barrows of New York. This will be the first time that the old play has been attempted by American university students. Miss Barrows has for the last eight years been engaged in reviving the Greek drama. She staged the tragedy twice before, native Greeks taking the parts on both occasions. It is on the invitation of Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the university, that Miss Barrows has come to California.

A Co-Ed Club

The co-ed body of the University of California is preparing to stand together this year and to make an aggressive fight for what the members consider their rights. With that object they have reorganized the first women-student club in the college town. It is to be known as the "Rediviva Club." The old club was disbanded in 1891.

Hazing Endorsed

University of California students are throwing up their hats for Professor Cory, who has expressed himself in favor of hazing in a mild form. For years the upper classmen have endeavored to bring the faculty to look with approval upon a gentle method of "guying" those fortunate enough to enter the charmed circle of the big university. Their efforts were all in vain, until the winning of Professor Cory to their way of thinking. "If you can get a freshy to climb the library flagpole I'll come out and cheer with you at the fun," said the professor. "Freshmen should learn to take care of themselves and this mild joshing makes them feel at home in the college."

In The Interest of Science

Professor Hecker, of the Royal Geodetic Institute, who has been in Berkeley for five weeks, has just completed a series of important observations at the Students' Observatory and at the Lick Observatory and has left for Japan on the steamer Manchuria. The expedition is under the auspices of the International Geodetic Association, which has appropriated twenty thousand marks for expenses. Professor Hecker attracted attention to himself some time ago by the statement that the oceans, instead of being depressed on account of the attraction of the surrounding land masses, followed the curvature of the continents. He hopes soon to prove his theory to the satisfaction of all.

They'll Buy Their Own Luncheons

The Mask and Dagger Society, the women's dramatic association of the University of California, has entered upon the new year with glowing anticipations. Miss Celeste La Coste is to be president, and Florence Parker, secretary. About the end of September the Mask and Dagger will open its season with a vaudeville performance.

Any money that is raised on that occasion will be devoted to furnishing luncheon for college women in Hearst hall. This expense was met formerly by Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, but as she has withdrawn the sum she was wont to give to it annually, the Mask and Dagger Society has assumed the responsibility, thus proving the wisdom of Mrs. Hearst's words, that if left to themselves the co-ed body could do much for itself that it permitted others to do for it in the past.

Application may now be had for the following four scholarships at the recorder's office of the University of California: the Adrienne Cerf, yielding one hundred and fifty dollars; the Hilgard Memorial, yielding one hundred and twenty-five dollars; the James M. Goewey, yielding two hundred and fifty dollars; the Pixley, yielding one hundred and seventy-five dollars. The last named is open only to students in the department of jurisprudence, while the other three scholarships are open to graduate students in all departments.

"But," said the superintendent of the fashionable apartment house, "you said you had no children."

"I know I did," said Blanker. "I married a widow, and I'm not bragging about her achievements."

Alameda Gossip

There is considerable speculation in Alameda as to the outcome of the trip of Mrs. T. C. Allen to Alaska, where her husband, who is connected with the Pioneer Mining Company, is located. Before her marriage Mrs. Allen was Miss Charlotte Bowen, a fashionable belle of the Encinal City. It is said that her mother mildly protested against her marriage, but she was very much in love with the gay young miner, and could not be dissuaded. That was about three years ago. The couple went to the Far North whence the young bride returned after a short stay, and her friends thought that a fatal rupture had occurred. But now she is on her way back to Alaska.

Another De Young Vaudeville

The De Youngs are going to pull off an amateur vaudeville entertainment this Saturday afternoon at Meadowlands, their beautiful summer home just outside of San Rafael. The extensive grounds from which, by the way, those famous cast-iron statues have long since been removed, have been strung with electric lights from end to end, and the tennis court has been converted into an imitation roof garden. The De Youngs have brought back from the East all the latest popular songs, and these will be sung by society people. Mrs. Mark Gerstle, Mrs. Jack Spreckels, Ethyl Hager and the De Young girls will contribute stunts, and Mrs. De Young herself may do something. She has considerable histrionic ability, and has the courage to recite "Lascar." Charlie De Young has inherited much of his mother's talent. He is one of the lights of the "Hasty Pudding Club" at college. About two hundred people are going over to the entertainment, and a special train will be provided.

"She must be a very prosaic and uninteresting girl."
 "Why do you think so?"
 "Nobody ever talks about her."

Oelrichs the Recluse

Herman Oelrichs is living very quietly in Ross Valley with ten servants and a German boar-hound. He (the hound) occupies a Colonial cottage in the rear of his master's domicile, and arouses the wrath of the somnolent valleyites by baying the moon and other things in a hoarse, insistent voice. Somebody has circulated the slanderous rumor that Mr. Oelrichs is living on health foods, but his appearance belies the story. He spends a great deal of his time with the Willie Babcocks in San Rafael. His mother was one of the Baltimore Mays, of which family Mrs. Babcock is a member. Recently he turned his attention to literature and published five hundred copies of a masterly effort in verse entitled "The House that Berg Built." It recites the story of how his chum, Jack Berg, did not build his house in Sausalito. Berg had set aside a fund for the erection of the house, but he blew the money in on a stock deal. Will Wright drew several very amusing illustrations for the brochure.

There is no denying the fact that Mr. James Kendall, importer, in the Starr King building, is showing the finest line of hand woven and embroidered linens ever exhibited in this country. He has also an assortment of those famous French blankets, in pink, blue and white and an exquisite line of laces, table linens, etc.

She Took Them All In

A correspondent writes me that Mrs. Oelrichs' ball at Newport was a big success, literally, for the hostess went down through the entire social register for her guests; everybody was there—the lame, the halt and the blind of society. The Reggie Vanderbilts were the only people of prominence who did not attend. Four hundred people were jammed into a space big enough for only two hundred. In spite of the persuasions of Harry Lehr and the ultimatums of Mrs. Oelrichs, only a few of the men made themselves ridiculous in fancy costumes. Only one man—old Jimmy Wysong—appeared in full white regalia. The others wore half-and-half-fancy and evening dress. Though Mrs. Oelrichs provided favors abundantly, there was a scarcity of them, owing to the fact that the guests helped themselves liberally.

Mentioned for Governor

Mary Crocker may be a Governor's lady before she knows it, as New York politicians are talking about her young husband as available gubernatorial timber. Though only thirty-one years of age, Francis Burton Harrison has made an excellent record in politics, which he entered two years ago. At that time it was thought because of his wealth and social position that he would be turned down by the Thirteenth district, but he was elected to Congress. He went to Washington with his wife, Mary Crocker of California that was, and they set up housekeeping in the Don Cameron house in Scott Circle, making friends in the Capitol and out of it. Frank Harrison is an unassuming young man and he has said his heart's desire is to leave New York and settle down in Burlingame, living a quiet country life. But his wife is ambitious if he is not, and if New York wants him for Governor it is likely she will persuade him to run. It is not known out here, by the way, that there are two other sons of the Burton Harrisons senior. Fairfax Harrison lives in Washington, where he is a Southern Railroad counsel. Archibald, the youngest brother, lately married Miss Wally of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur McEwen intend to return to California next year to live. Their daughter Madge will graduate from Bryn Mawr next year.

Back from the War

Ed Clough is back from the Orient with note-books so full of data that he will be able to supply the magazines with material of interest to the general reader for years. The probability is that he will put some of his work between book-covers, and it is to be hoped that he will decide to do so, for he is capable of high achievement in literature. There are few more virile and graceful writers than Ed Clough, and fewer still as well qualified to enlighten the world about conditions and prospects in the countries which he has recently visited—countries of rare interest at present to the civilized world. Mr. Clough spent eighteen months in the Orient, and by reason of his newspaper and political connections enjoyed access to news channels that no other correspondent was permitted to exploit. He made a study of social, economic and political conditions, and reveled in the romantic atmosphere pregnant with suggestion to the Occidental mind, but which few writers have as yet availed themselves of. I shall await with eagerness the performances of Mr. Clough's facile pen.

The "Lambs" of Oakland

Oakland is very much surprised to discover that snobish instincts have found expression in the "younger social set." There is a secret society of girls in the High School whose members sneer and scoff at those who have not been admitted to the charmed circle. The sentiment fostered in this organization is the same as that which animates women of mature years. In many instances it is a maternal legacy. The institution known as the "Lambs" is one in which young girls develop a taste of exclusiveness and a contempt for the common herd. It inculcates false notions about the importance of social position and it breeds climbers. The society has been in existence many years, and its members are always representative of Oakland's ton. Some very fine Oakland women have been "Lambs" in their day. Jane Crellin, May Coogan, Chris-tie Taft, Ada Kenna, Mrs. Irving Burrell, Anita Oliver, Mrs. Jack Valentine, Ruth Houghton, Letty Barry, Carmen Sutton, Mrs. Philip Clay, Dottie Everson, Noelle De Golia, Marian Walsh, Clarissa Lohse and Lily Reed were "Lambs" of other days.

The Banqueting of Redding

Joe Redding, I hear, has come back to stay. He has grown weary dollar-chasing amid the bustle and nerve-racking turmoil of New York, and he has decided to take up his residence once more in San Francisco. Thursday night he was given a banquet at the Pacific-Union Club. The most notable of the after-dinner speakers were Ned Hamilton, one of the most graceful of post-prandial tonguesters, and D. M. Delmas, spellbinder, late of the St. Louis Convention.

"Doesn't the Schenck-Collins matrimonial fiasco remind you of the case of the Alfred Lammleses in 'Our Mutual Friend'?" asked the society woman who reads.

"The parallel ceases, however, at one point," returned her cynical husband, "for the Lammleses neither squealed nor courted newspaperity. Having 'done' each other so neatly, they turned around and 'did' society, too."

On to New York

Something resembling consternation was created in the offices of Wells, Fargo & Company, not many days ago, when the announcement was officially made that the headquarters of the big corporation were soon to be transferred to New York. Preparations for the removal are now being made. All the executive offices, and the men employed in the fiscal and auditing departments, numbering about one hundred, are to go East. The hegira will take place in December. Wells, Fargo & Company is a Californian institution that was founded in the early fifties. During the gold excitement, Adams & Co., the big Eastern express corporation, established headquarters in this city, and handled all the bullion shipments, but the agent of the company became a defaulter, getting away with so much money as to seriously cripple the institution. Thereupon the company withdrew from business on this coast, and it was succeeded by Wells, Fargo & Co., which was then a small firm engaged in local business exclusively. The growth of the company kept pace with the development of the State, and the history of the corporation is linked with that of the coast. I believe that about one-third of the stock is now controlled by the Harriman syndicate.

Blackguard Collins

The latest "international romance" has turned out to be a tragedy so far as the American girl, Nathalie Schenck, is concerned. It would be scarcely worth while wasting sympathy on her if she had no other grievance than that the man she married was poor. The deception was mutual. She was dazzled by the prospect of a marriage with a rich member of the British aristocracy and he thought she was an American heiress, but he is not merely a penniless fortune-hunter. He is a contemptible blackguard, and it is remarkable that his character was not exposed before the marriage. There are people in New York society who had been defrauded by him in England by means of worthless checks. Though he came to this country with good letters of introduction he was known all over Europe as a blackleg. He was even sailing under false colors, for though he posed as a captain in a crack regiment his rank was that of lieutenant. He was a genuine social highwayman, and it is unfortunate that a respectable young woman should have her name linked with such a scoundrel.

Popular Frenchmen

The new French Consul, M. Lanel, has been staying with the Chabots at their country-place. The Chabot sisters are among the greatest heiresses in California, and their French blood makes them especially chic and attractive. They have been given every educational advantage, and are highly accomplished. One of them was once engaged to Dr. de Marville, who is considered the most brilliant French wit in San Francisco. Dr. de Marville is very popular in the Burlingame set, though as a rule his best mots are wasted upon them, as half the time they don't know what he is talking about.

Only in Oakland

Some of Prescott and Harry Scott's friends fancied they had gone abroad because they were never seen in town. But the explanation of their obscurity is that they have become residents of Oakland. Their father set them up in business over there and they like the place so well that they rarely cross the bay. Harry Scott was working in the Union Iron Works when he was the fiance of Pearl Landers. He was drawing a salary of about eight dollars a week, and his father said that before he could marry he must work his own way up to a better income. Harry Scott was much cut up over the breaking of his engagement.

Mrs. Sands Forman and the Arthur Branders feel as if they were in quarantine, for their neighbors have scarlet fever. Consequently, though Mrs. Forman and Mrs. Brander are very popular, nobody dares to see them.

The Hallmark of Society

It looks now as if in the next generation we shall not admit climbers unless their papas sold champagne. That mode of getting a living seems to place the cachet of approval on a man in society. Ernest la Montagne, Mrs. C. E. Maud's former husband and a big man in the New York swim, was a touter for his father's champagne. Harry Lehr danced into Newport's favor on a champagne cork. Ned Greenway, our local Czar of Society, made the business so popular that young Milton Latham was impelled to take it up. And now Arthur Brander, the husband of Gertrude Forman, has added a champagne agency to his other occupation.

Bellew and Mrs. Potter

Kyrle Bellew, who is coming to town next week, has had a most romantic career and a great part of it was linked with that of Mrs. James Brown Potter. I was reminded of the actor's romance a few weeks ago when I read, in a New York paper, on his return from London, that he had been visiting Mrs. Potter and that their old friendship had been revived. It was Kyrle Bellew who made Mrs. Potter the actress that she is, and today she holds high rank as an artist. It is familiar stage history that Mrs. Potter had nothing but her beauty to score with when she went on the stage. As Cora Urquhart she was one of the most beautiful girls in New Orleans, and when she was little more than a child, to please her parents, she married a man whom she did not love—James Brown Potter, a member of one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic New York families, and a nephew of Bishop Henry C. Potter of saloon fame. After a few years of unhappy married life she left her husband, and under the patronage of the late William C. Whitney, then Secretary of the Navy, she sprung into fame by reciting "Ostler Joe" at a Washington society function. In those polite days the poem was considered indecent, and people were shocked. On the strength of the newspaperieté she received Mrs. Potter went on the stage. Mr. Bellew, then at the height of his fame as an actor, made the inexperienced young woman his co-star, and under his tutelage, and through the opportunities that he unselfishly gave her, she soon entered the first rank of English-speaking actresses.

Their Estrangement

Mr. Bellew and Mrs. Potter made a tour of the world, and so devoted were they to each other that it was frequently reported that they were to be married. On their return to New York at the close of their tour they appeared together in "Romeo and Juliet" at Daly's, and that was the last production in which Mrs. Potter appeared in America. The following season she went to London with Mr. Bellew, and there she became the object of Albert Edward's admiration. So greatly did he admire her that Mrs. Langtry became jealous, and the Lily has more than once taken occasion to say sharp things about her rival. Mrs. Potter's social engagements in the Prince's set were so numerous that she neglected her professional business, and one day it was announced that her business relations with Mr. Bellew had been terminated. Almost immediately the actor disappeared from London, and his friends there knew nothing of his whereabouts for months. When next heard from he was in the gold mines of Australia. It was reported that he had quit the stage because of his dejection caused by his separation from Mrs. Potter. He remained in Australia nearly three years, and amassed a fortune. He declared that his acting days were over, and they probably would have been had not Sir Henry Irving persuaded him to come back to London and create the important role of the son in "Robespierre." One day, after a brief experience with Irving, he threw up his engagement and went back to Australia. The supposition was that he could not bear to be "so near and yet so far" from Mrs. Potter. Three seasons ago he returned to this country and he has been starring ever since. Meanwhile Mrs. Potter has been "queening" it in London. Just before the coronation she was crowded out of the cast in a big production at Beerbohm Tree's theatre, and then the papers told of the snubbing of the show by King Edward. Tree had expected to be knighted, but when the King distributed the titular baubles the actor was overlooked.

A Confusion of Tongues

Of the prominent foreigners who dip into local society none seem to have found it so fascinating as the Russian Consul, Paul Kosakevitch. He is dining and tea-ing continually, and he has completely won the hearts of the ladies. Naturally he has participated in many discussions of the war, for the topic suggests itself whenever he is present. He usually takes the taunts leveled at his country by the gentle sex with good grace, but on one or two occasions, I hear, his patriotic spirit received some severe jolts and he grew quite emotional. When he gets into a hot argument he finds English inadequate for the proper expression of his ideas. Indeed no single tongue seems to suffice, and as a consequence people who are not accomplished linguists find it difficult to follow him. Mr. Kosakevitch gives excellent dinners, and it is reported that he performs some wonderful gastronomic feats in picturesque style. He is a most unconventional gourmet.

"These Schmitz officials are becoming bolder every day."

"What have they been doing?"

"One of the Police Commissioners, a cigar dealer, personally conducted a raid on a Chinese gambling hell the other night."

"Were the men caught gambling?"

"No; they were caught smoking Chinese cigars."

Social Reminiscences

The spirituelle belles of yesterday are the buxom matrons of today. Such was my reflection on seeing Mrs. Will Tevis the other day, sweet and winsome as ever but her avoidupois just about twice what it was when she was the lovely Mabel Pacheco. It seems almost like delving into ancient history to recall the days when she and Frank Deering played in the Tevis theatricals and won laurels with Horace Platt in "A Scrap of Paper." Now Mabel Pacheco is Mrs. Will Tevis, Frank Deering is the husband of Mabel Clare Craft and Horace Platt is brother to the owl. It was before Mrs. Monroe Salisbury essayed the role of society manager or Greenway became prominent as the "society undertaker" that Mabel Pacheco and Ethel Sperry were belles in society, and the recipients of much attention from that then "eligible" young man, Mr. Will Crocker. Who that was there can forget the fancy dress ball at the Bella Vista in the heyday of Mrs. Spalding's fame and fortune? Who does not remember how like wildfire the news spread that Ethel Sperry had accepted Will Crocker? That was shortly after Mabel Pacheco's engagement to Will Tevis was announced.

Literature and Banking

The Will Crockers, by the way, have decided to remain in Burlingame until the very late fall. Mrs. Crocker divides her time between out-of-door exercise and study, but she also gives some attention to banking affairs, and it is said that her interest in the banking business is much greater than is that of her husband. She has lately become a great admirer of the works of the early Italian writers, and she reads them in the original. I hear that she has decided to have her children educated in this country.

The engagement is announced of Miss Hilda Lewald, well known in musical circles, and Mr. Albert Oppenheimer.

The Art of Florence Roberts

One of the sages of the local press, skilled in metaphysical distinctions, reports that Florence Roberts has a fine talent for acting but that genius is not one of her gifts. I sat through a performance of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" the other night, and tried my feeble best to note the line of demarcation, but failed miserably. After the performance I reflected that perhaps histrionic genius is a matter of prestige; that it is to be acquired for provincial exploitation along Broadway, New York, and that it is not to be had at popular prices. It also occurred to me that its subtle influence is felt when it is exercised in original effort, and that it is confounded with mere talent when it is engaged in following in the footsteps of others. Mrs. Fiske appeared here in the role of Tess some years ago, and those who saw her cannot resist the inclination to make comparisons now that Florence Roberts is essaying the part. Yet they are actresses of widely different temperament. And owing to the difference in prices charged they appeal to a widely different clientele. The difference in the character of the audiences affects not only the performers but also individuals in the audience. This is a weird truth. Put a Mrs. Fiske auditor in a Florence Roberts audience, and the environment is bound to influence the sensations produced by the performance, the principal reason being that the emotional expressions of the audience jar upon him. The audience not infremanipulation of the slaughter scene is thrillingly realistic. But Florence Roberts will never come into her own until she creates characters; that is, she will not be given the credit that is her due. But her magnetic personality has won for her a host of admirers. She is the strongest drawing card that the California theatre has had under the present management; indeed, she has restored the California to the theatrical map. The theatre has been crowded to the doors all week. The company supporting the star is one well adapted for the work in hand. Lucius Henderson is a trifle stilted as Angel Clare, but his performance has no serious defects. Hobart Bosworth is an effective villain, and William Yerance does some good character work as John Durbeyfield. The part of his wife is impersonated with breezy fussiness by Louise Royce, formerly prima donna at the Tivoli, who has developed a fine figure as well as talent for character roles.

Theodore Bonnet.

The Orpheum's bill is good this week, but the best things are "left-overs"—the Heinrichs and Williams and Tucker. Eva Williams is one of the most interesting figures that ever adorned a vaudeville sketch, with her picturesque slang and original intonation. "Our Boys in Blue," the Indiana national guardsmen, give a drill that is a lesson to soldiers and civilians as well. The Alfred Keleys are clever, but their sketch is not.

On Friday afternoon of this week, in the ladies' gallery of the St. Francis hotel, Miss Eleanor Connell is presenting her pupil, Miss Grace Boothe, mezzo-soprano, in songs by Schumann, Dvorak, von Fielitz, Nevin, and Beach. Miss Connell has arranged to have Mrs. Fannie Meyer Ellis, pianiste, and Hother Wismer, violinist, assist in the program. For several years Miss Connell directed the Wednesday Morning Choral and at the matinee musicales given by the club introduced several talented pupils.

James Neill will conclude tonight at the Grand an engagement of nine weeks, during which he has given eighty-two consecutive performances. The present program, "Under Two Flags," is drawing crowded houses, and is one of the Neill company's hits. Mr. Neill and Miss Chapman, who appear respectively as Bertie Cecil and Cigarette, are seen to the very best advantage, and there is no doubt that an immense audience will witness the termination of their engagement tonight. Some time will elapse before the reappearance of the Neills in this city.

Next Week's Bills

The theatres will find plenty of patronage next week, and it is safe to say that if standing-room were permitted by the City Fathers, it would be at a premium. Extra Labor Day and Admission Day matinees are announced.

The formal opening of the Majestic theatre tonight will be one of the big events of the dramatic season. Crawford's "In the Palace of the King" will be presented with new scenery and a cast of clever players engaged by Oliver Morosco in the East. Grace Reals, leading woman, J. H. Gilmore, leading man, Richard Thomson, Joseph Callahan, J. D. O'Hare, Margaret Maclyn, Eleanor Gordon, Henry Stockondge and Theodore Marston are the leading members of the new company. quently laugh when they should be in tears. They laugh just to show that they know the people on the stage are merely acting. Even when their sympathies have been deeply stirred they force a giggle by way of evidence of superior intelligence. No actor or actress is immune to the emanations of such an audience. The performance given by Florence Roberts and her company was to me a thoroughly enjoyable one, notwithstanding the bathos of the cheap melodrama. None but a genius could treat the character of Tess more exquisitely in method or more appealingly in effect. Mrs. Fiske clothed the part with tragic pathos by a method peculiarly her own but Florence Roberts, though somewhat more demonstrative, is none the less effective. Her scheme of emotional expression is not so finicky as that of Mrs. Fiske in avoidance of strain, but only in a spirit of captiousness could one pick out details of deficiency. Mrs. Fiske's repression is, to my mind, obvious acting, as obvious as Mrs. Leslie Carter's hysteria. Florence Roberts' art is in the nature of a happy medium. There are many phases of acting, and it is the business of the actor to keep the audience from exercising its thinking faculty consciously. As soon as the audience becomes conscious of the actor's method and reflects on it the illusion is destroyed. There is much impalpable allurements in Florence Roberts's art. Her meek submissiveness to her fate is peculiarly impressive, and her as Mr. Morosco has never played his attractions here for less than a dollar and his Majestic theatre company is admitted to be the best he has yet organized. Next week there will be matinees Monday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The bargain matinee on Thursday is a noteworthy feature from the fact that twenty-five cents will be the price for reservations to all parts of the house. Early comers will have the choice of the first seats.

For her second week at the California Florence Roberts will present one of her old successes, "Sapho." Beginning Sunday night, September eleventh, Miss Roberts will present her second big novelty in "Marta of the Lowlands," a Spanish story of life among the Catalonian peasants, by Angel Guimera. "Marta" was produced for the first time in English in New York last October and scored one of the most sincere successes of the year.

The Columbia's attraction will be "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," the clever comedy of the adventures of the clubman, burglar and champion cricket player, described by E. W. Hornung in his popular stories. E. M. Holland, who is in the cast, will get as warm a welcome as the star. "Raffles" is a study in criminology and heredity and will as such appeal to the moralists. It attempts to answer the question "Is crime a disease?"

At the Alcazar White Whittlesey will appear in the first San Francisco production of the original Brandon Tynan version of "Robert Emmet," Ireland's great national romance. Whittlesey's picturesque personality is well suited for the portrayal of the famous Irish patriot. There will be a strong cast and special scenery. "The Second in Command," Capt. Marshall's pretty comedy in which John Drew starred, comes next.

Next week the Grand Opera House will be given over to the Knights Templar for the entertainment of their visitors, and on Sunday matinee, September eleventh, Bothwell Browne's musical extravaganza, "Princess Fan Tan," will be produced for the first time, with new and magnificent Japanese scenery and costumes, and a cast of three hundred juveniles. "Princess Fan Tan" will be rich in bright and witty dialogue, pretty lyrics and new and original songs, dances, marches and ballets. During this production, special prices, fifteen, twenty-five and fifty cents, will prevail. Seats are now on sale at the box office.

The sixth, and next to the last week of the phenomenal engagement of "The Toreador" at the Tivoli will begin on Monday afternoon with a special Labor Day matinee. There will also be a special holiday matinee on Friday afternoon, September ninth. "The Serenade" comes next.

"The Anheuser Push" is drawing big audiences at Fischer's and will go all next week. "Tommy Rot" and "Miss Mazuma" will follow the present burlesque.

Another of Theodore Kremer's successful melodramas, "Evil that Men Do," goes on at the Central, a play said to be strong in heart interest, with a powerful plot and thrilling climaxes. One of the scenes shows the burning of a church, with a sensational start in the belfry tower.

There will be a matinee every day at the Orpheum next week. "The Great Singing Four," as the members of the Mendelssohn Quartet of Denver, Colorado, are known, will be heard for the first time in San Francisco, in "New Year's Eve in Bohemia." H. D. Martin, first tenor, Robert Slack, second tenor, R. V. Brown, first bass and C. D. Schmidlap, second bass, are the members of the organization. Edward R. Burton and Croney Brooks, who made a hit here three years ago, will return with "A Can of Humor." The three Mitchells, Creole entertainers, will be new to this city. For their third and last week Williams and Tucker will present "Driftwood," an episode in the career of Mary Ellen Poet.

A strong array of attractions has been secured at the Chutes for Conclave week. The Musical Coolmans will present their novel instrumental act; Ralph Post and Essie Clinton, the famous comedy couple, will contribute a few vaudeville ideas, and Nellie Corin, the renowned and fetching comedienne, will make her first appearance here. Andy Lewis will change his songs and stories, Campbell and Johnson, the comedy bicyclists, will continue their act and Mabel Lamson will be heard in illustrated songs. The prismatic electric fountain gives a beautiful display every Saturday night and on the evenings of Monday, Labor Day, and Friday, Admission Day, magnificent fireworks, including appropriate set pieces, will be shown.

It is easy to see why Nat Goodwin had to pigeonhole "Nathan Hale" after a limited season, and why Nanette Comstock and her husband, who bought it from Nat, also failed to make it a go. It is one of Clyde Fitch's worst made-to-order efforts, and except for the accustomed Fitch thrill, that is felt in the second and third acts, it might be a play written by anybody else. However few "historical" dramas amount to anything. The characters are merely dressed-up commonplaces attached to names of historic personages. White Whittlesey does far from the best work of his present engagement as the "martyr-patriot." Hale was a simple, sincere American, if we may believe our school histories. I should like to have seen what Goodwin made of the role. Whittlesey so swamps it with affectations that the simple, sincere American is quite lost sight of beneath the assumed airs and graces, ruffles and gold lace of the star. There are some good things, nevertheless, in the production. Harry Hilliard, as the boy, Tom Adams, is one. Virginia Brissac, as Angelica Knowlton, the spoiled child who weds against her mother's wishes, is another. It is hard to realize that the impersonator of Angelica is the same whose fisher-girl shared honors with Florence Roberts's "Gioconda" last season. Miss Brissac is an actress of rare promise. Miss Lawton's Alice Adams is another character that shines in the Alcazar production of "Nathan Hale." The character is on the order of Janice Meredith, though with an emotional undercurrent with which Janice was not endowed.

The Central's Coup d'Etat

Herschel Mayall scarcely adds a leaf to his laurel wreath of successes by his Chan Wang, in "The First Born" at the Central. His grief over the death of his boy is far too demonstrative for the Oriental article. Anybody who has walked a few times through Chinatown, or made even a casual study of the Chinese, knows that noise is something quite foreign to the character. He is not free from excitement; his feelings can be worked up to a high degree, but the Chinaman, even in his grades of emotion, is always subdued. He is as stolid as the Indian whose prototype he is said to be. Mayall yells his grief, screams his desire for revenge. At least he did on Monday night. He may have modified his transports on Tuesday. Now Francis Powers, who wrote the little drama of Chinese life that in its motif contains the element of a great tragedy, was not an especially good actor. But he knew the Chinese character, and in the Alcazar production of his play, in which he played the bereaved father, there was never a discordant note in his acting. Save Chan Wang, the Central company gives as artistic a performance of "The First Born" as the one that first set the American world talking of the Powers play. Miss Clifton gives a sympathetic version of the slave-girl, Miss Leavy's nurse is accurate in its simplicity, and Miss Buckley does not mar the part of Chan Lee by one false touch. There is something almost uncanny in the intelligence little Baby Martine brings to her acting of Chan Toy. Shumer is the pompous old Pow Len in every intonation. Corrigan as the restaurant man is an artistic detail. Perhaps nearest of all to the real Chinese, however, comes Howell's Hop Kee, the pipe bowl mender, the part Harry Benrimo played in the original production. Mayall might take lessons from Howell in the correct imitation of Chinese bearing and speech. On Monday night a good share of the applause and several bouquets went to Walter Belasco, who acted the tiny role of the rag-picker, but to whom the credit goes for the correct staging of the play.

Josef Hofmann will make one of the longest "jumps" known in the theatrical world—from Berlin to San Francisco. As a rule, the great artists want to begin their tours in the East, as they think that a success there helps them in the West. For that reason we usually get the artists all at about the same time, and at the end of the season. Hofmann's reputation, however, is so great and his success here three years ago so emphatic, that Mr. Wolsohn has determined to change the usual order of things and open his tour in San Francisco, where he will give three concerts during the first week of October, under the management of Will Greenbaum.

London's "Sea Wolf" Dramatized

It is given out that Richard Mansfield has secured for his next season's play a dramatization of Jack London's "Sea Wolf," now running as a serial in the Century and to appear in book form in October. Mr. Mansfield may produce a play bearing the same title as the novel and he may impersonate a character named after Wolf Larsen and displaying his characteristics. Some one else may play Humphrey Van Weyden, and the chorus of hunters and sailors can be appropriately filled in. It is not beyond the art of the scene painter to produce an appropriate background and the property man and the stage manager, between them, can manage the rest, but just there they will stop short. There is plenty of mast-climbing, gun-shooting, and fights and knock-outs, but Wolf Larsen is something more than a powerful muscular brute. His brain capacity, his ability to carry on an argument in which fists and firearms are not concerned, is just as wonderful as his enormous bodily strength. To leave that out of consideration in a dramatization would be to eliminate the better half of the story. But will a modern audience sit still to listen to talk? Will it be necessary to introduce a comic element into what is essentially tragic—sailor's hornpipes, chanteys and other alien didoes—to make it "go"? It is a poor, mean spirit that would grudge Jack London an iota of the success he has earned, but it is more than a question whether he will add to his laurels by permitting his "Sea Wolf" to go on the stage. There would appear to be just as good a chance for "The Kempton-Wace Letters," and a decidedly better one for "The Call of the Wild." Indeed, in this era of humanized animal literature, when one recalls the phenomenal feats of intellect attributed to the brute creation, taken into connection with the wonderful performances of circus animals, the matter for astonishment is that some one has not already produced an impersonator of Buck.

Mr. Arnold Daly's production of George Bernard Shaw's "The Man of Destiny" was too late for review in this department this week.

Her Maternal Press-Agent

Probably the mother of Maude Fealy takes rank as the brightest of all press-agents now doing service in this country. Mrs. Fealy objects to being classed as one of the scheming tribe, but her success in bringing her daughter to public notice marks her as a genius in advertising. Five years ago a story came from Denver that Augustin Daly had chosen Miss Fealy, then fifteen years old, to play Juliet in his company the following season, but as the report, with a full account of the girl's stage experience, was circulated a few days following Mr. Daly's death, it still lacks confirmation. Eighteen months later, when Miss Fealy came here in "Quo Vadis," her mother persistently proclaimed her to be the youngest leading woman in America. Soon after this was the report of William Gillette's refusing to sign the actress when she came to him in short skirts, and an hour later begging her to join his company in "Sherlock Holmes," his change of heart following a quick shift to a trailing gown. After this we had the rumors of an engagement between Gillette and Miss Fealy; confirmed by the actress's family, denied by the actor, and finally time setting its disapproval on the tale after every city had heard of the "beautiful and talented young woman." Last spring there was a report from Denver that Miss Fealy was to head a big company this winter, and a few weeks ago came the statement that she had been engaged by Sir Henry Irving to support him on his farewell American tour. Of course, we know definitely now that Ethel Wynne Matthison will support Irving, but the end in view has been attained, and should we eventually acclaim Miss Fealy as an independent star it will be simple justice to accord some of the credit to her mother. The press-agent is a trickster, who has had much to do with the rise of many of our so-called leading players. It would shock theatre-goers to know the pandering spirit of actors to the man who may be instrumental in sending their names through the length and breadth of the land. Always his mind is at work on new ideas, turning them over and over, weighing the value of them separately, and finally approving of a trifling few. What a fuss was made over "Pinky Panky Poo." To this day it never has been contradicted that this mite of a dog was a present to Mrs. Patrick Campbell from the King of the Belgians, and yet it was presented to the actress by a press-agent when she arrived here for her first American tour.

KYRLE BELLEW.

This noted actor will appear next week at the Columbia theatre after an absence of ten years. Assisted by his original company, including Mr. E. M. Holland, he will present "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," a drama based upon E. W. Hornung's fascinating stories of similar title that the English actor employed with more than ordinary success in the East last season. Mr. Bellew was seen here last in 1894, when he and Mrs. James Brown Potter were touring the world together. Since that time he has added to his varied experiences by spending three years in the mines of Australia. The accompanying likeness of Mr. Bellew shows that he wears evening dress in "Raffles." Although he long has been noted for his grace in the clawhammer he has not before appeared in one professionally in fifteen years, or since he played the leading role in "Moths" with the famous Lester Wallack Stock Company in New York. In the interim he won great success in costume roles.

The Unbeliever

BY OLIVER J. WHITE.

I was reading in my room. The book was one of Voltaire's I think—yes, I know it was one of Voltaire's. I admire him. It was seven o'clock and raining. A fire was burning and I was reading by the light of it. There are some authors that should be read in the dark; there are some thoughts that should be born and pondered on in that way.

My room was small. A book-case went three-quarters of the way round it; it was filled with books, mostly religious and anti-religious. At heart I am an atheist. My mania was books on that subject. A Bible whose cover had been thumbed off, was marked with notes calling attention to the many lies in it. I took pleasure in nailing lies of all sorts, but it was an unspeakable delight to put my pencil on a new religious lie. They say I was insane on the subject, and I suppose I was, and am. It is wise to be crazy on one subject—one can be so eminently sane on the others.

I had been reading for hours and my eyes were smarting from the strain. The heat of the room was oppressive. I laid the book face downwards, on my knees, and leaned back in my chair to think; then it was that I first heard the rain falling against the window. I love rain. It has an air of independence about it, an atmosphere of freedom. The sense of a definite purpose gives it these things. It has a duty to perform, and all the oaths of men and the lamentations of women will not interfere with its performances. It is heartless, mechanical, analytical—like something else I know of. It does good and it does harm, without knowing, without caring—like something else I know of.

I lay back in my chair and listened. As I said before, the heat was oppressive; the rain seemed so cool, I wanted to be close to it, so I rolled my chair to the window and laid my face against the cold glass; I wanted to be closer. I raised the window.

I let the rain fall on my head; let it roll down the side of my face; then I heard a sound; it seemed a mile away. I listened again; it seemed closer. I listened again, more intently; it came from a church a block away, at the end of the street. I could see the spire by straining my eyes; the mist was heavy.

The great bell was ringing in the tower. I had never heard it before, and I had lived in the house for five years. The bell sounded out of tune, and I remember saying, "That sound is hideous enough to keep people away from church." I remember perfectly that I said this and slammed the window down and took up my Voltaire again, reading him by the light of the fire.

I read ten lines of the book five times, before I realized that something was jarring on my mind, and distracting my attention. It was the bells, the church bells; they jangled and gonged and clanged.

I put my fingers in my ears, but it was of no use. I had to listen. When I think that I had lived all those years so close to the church and until that night had never heard the chimes, it seems odd; very odd—almost supernatural. What a word for me to use! It slipped out without my knowing. I will never let it occur again.

I picked up Voltaire and started to read. Unknown to me the fire had died out, and the bells were jangling. I struck a match to light the lamp; my lamp contained no oil, and the bells were jangling. I had to get away from them somehow. They made me nervous. I wanted to get away; I wanted diversion. The theatres were inhabited by mummers, representing saints and sinners in religious plays. The bells were jangling. I must get away from them, so I resolved to go to church.

I laughed at the idea as I went down the steps. A Divinity student in the next room had never heard me laugh. He came out and asked me the cause of my mirth, and the hall was not too dark for me to note his face grow pale, when I told him; it was not too noisy for me to hear his hand tremble as it turned the knob of his door.

Outside on the street, I looked up at the sky; a thing I seldom do, and let the rain splash on my face and in my eyes. I walked down the street; it was shiny with rain, and I chuckled to myself. The bells had ceased ringing, and I was grateful. Even then, I had it in my mind to buy some oil and go back to my room, when an organ commenced playing. I love music of all kinds, and this music was singularly beautiful. It was deep, rich and full of chords, chords within chords. I remember saying, "If that music stops, I shall go back to Voltaire," and I remember as I said it, someone jostled by me. The music continued and I observed the person.

He was an old man; he had lived, probably, eighty years, if one counted the days, but his face had in it a life of ten centuries.

—“A Native Son.”

—Laguna Beach, Southern California, famed the world over for its splendid bathing and rugged scenery.

His hair was white and stringy; his hands were long and bony and marked with little spots—death marks. He was a small man and his clothes were atrocious and specimens of a fashion ten years old. I gave him merely a casual look at first, then seeing that he had stopped at the church steps, and noting that my cigar was out—I had been smoking a cigar; a raindrop had put it out—I asked him for a match. As I lighted it I observed his face with more care. It was the most beautiful face I had ever seen. In it were suffering, hope, dignity, love—all the grander emotions that, by way of jest, life stamps on the face of some poor devil, who hasn't a mirror to admire them in. His eyes sang to me and the song brought tears to mine. His lips trembled as if they longed to utter beautiful things. It was the most beautiful face I ever saw and it had faith in it. Faith: it made me wonder; it put something into my heart, into my mind, something that had never been there before. It made me forget Voltaire, and the music had ceased.

"Where are you going?" I said.

A smile, a beautiful smile, slipped over his face, and vanished somewhere—in the heart of some singing bird, perhaps.

"I am going to church," and he walked slowly up the steps.

I followed him, yes followed him into the church; watched him take his place in the last pew, close to a lady of fashion. He, with his white head bowed and resting on the back of the pew in front. She with her vulgar diamonds, her head high in the air, sat impervious of God and her fellow worshipers.

I moved down the aisle. I wanted to see his face again; the face that could make me forget my Voltaire. Just then the lady took it into her precious head to kneel; she crowded him and he sat far back in the corner, clasping his long, bony, beautiful fingers, murmuring prayers with his beautiful lips. I looked, and instinctively sank to my knees, and bowed my head close to his pew. I saw his long, beautiful, bony fingers unclasp and Oh! My God! I saw two of them descend into the lady's pocket and saw him slip her purse under his coat.

I laughed, laughed out in church, and went out into the night and walked in the rain. It was much cooler in the rain.

The Fog

BY ELWYN HOFFMAN.

The gray wraith-children of the sea
Have come from wastes afar,
To drift, in silent mystery,
Across the grieving bar.

Now past the Cliff House, drear and chill,
They speed like ghostly nuns;
Now storm and take Fort Point's stern hill
With all its sullen guns.

They trail around the headlands bare,
And sweep far up the bay;
Till earth dissolves—blends with the air—
And all is cold and gray;

Till wakes the siren from its sleep
To sound its mournful blast—
Our sad voice calling to the deep,
Our sad voice of the Past!

Voice of the Soul that rises up
Through all the laughter-things,
To lonely drain the bitter cup
Of its rememberings!

Voice of the measureless and vast
That still broods under all;
Laying its cold cheek to the Past,
Stroking an icy pall!

Voice of the ghostly Shapes that keep
A vigil grayer still
Than all these gray, gray wraiths that sweep
In shrouds o'er bay and hill!

—On the Ocean Beach.

Dr. Juilly's Sanitarium

Some time since the writer, noticing that the old home of John D. Spreckels in the Mission was for sale, was wondering what would be its final fate. Its destiny was soon decided. It was bought by Dr. Juilly who has converted it into a sanitarium, including the Mangels home next door. The Spreckelses lived fifteen years in the house at the corner of Twenty-first and Howard streets, and the Juilly sanitarium takes in the beautiful grounds of both the Spreckels and Mangels residences, comprising a whole block from Howard to Capp streets. The Mission is splendidly adapted in its "warm belt" as a location for sanitariums, and the Juilly sanitarium is well worthy the name. The Spreckels house is used as a general hospital, and being a solid building, perfectly constructed, the noise of the streets does not penetrate the walls and complete quiet is assured. Physicians recommend the sanitarium to their patients because of its healthful location and this freedom from noise in its arrangements. Though no longer a home of entertainment and society functions society finds it a delightful place to rest up in between the strenuous seasons. Surgical, medical and obstetrical patients are received. In the Mangels house children only are received. It is reserved for the care of children from birth to ten years of age, and sick children, not suffering from contagious diseases, are also received at the very reasonable rates of twenty-five dollars a month, up, in ward; in room of two beds, thirty-five dollars a month, up. A full corps of trained nurses is in attendance at the Juilly sanitarium, where all physicians in good standing have the privilege of placing their patients and retaining over them entire control.

The Pride of a Fool

How a Name Concealed a Stain.

BY PAUL G. CLARK.

He was a fool.

The most lucid admitted that.

He had the look of it in his eyes, as had King Midas in his ears.

Still, Lewellyn Le Croix was an industrious fool. He began a clerkship in a broker's office on a limited education. He was yet a clerk, on a larger and definite salary, reliable, systematic, persistent; the scene of his activities was a broker's office. But, as everyone who has tried it knows, the true motto of life is: "Pain, if it brings pleasure; eschew pleasure if it brings pain." That comprises a rule for the sportsman and for the discreet.

But who has formulated a rule for fools? Lewellyn seemed to have agreed on this hypothesis: "Work, even if dull, for animals must be fed; pleasure when possible." This is not wise, and certainly unsportsmanlike. It showed the rudimentary limitations of his mind, and justified a verdict of folly.

He did not go at all into society; he allied himself with the small field of ambition and practical jokes common to brokers' clerks. He did not lack the pristine gleam of intelligence; he was almost in the class of a professional fool.

His fellow clerks were daily in the market, with small holdings, on meagre margins, from slender salaries. They saw the continuous spectacle of the public buying; the public, they saw, lost. They bought, too. But they were wise.

However, they remained clerks in brokers' offices.

One day in that delightful transitory time between the end of winter and the dawn of spring, Lewellyn received the benefit of the sale of a small property, of which he had had no expectations. He accepted the two thousand dollars with considerable satisfaction. That was the first strange manifestation. Two thousand makes wisdom a plutocrat. But for a fool —

The next morning he told his counter colleagues that he had handed in his resignation. They were eager for the reason. He told the truth. "I have had two thousand dollars left me, and I am going to speculate."

They winked at one another. They said among themselves: "He is an ass! We keep our jobs, even if we do take chances on a flyer! He will go broke. He'll sell the market short — and it's up this spring. We are making money now — lots of it. He'll be around in thirty days for his job." Then they winked at one another again, those youthful cynics!

They kept up this talk for days after Le Croix had gone; what they said, were variations of the same thing.

Lewellyn had worked in a "consolidated" house. He went to a member of the bigger exchange. He bought a hundred shares of his favorite stock — St. Paul.

Then he sat down in a chair stoically at the back of the broker's office and watched the quotations come out on the board. St. Paul went up. He still sat stoically. The clerks often looked over at him, wondering if he wasn't going to sell out, for since morning he had made five hundred dollars. At two o'clock an aged broker approached.

"Young man, pardon me speaking. I have been down here forty years. I have seen millions made and lost. I happened to observe you as you bought a hundred shares of St. Paul. You have now five points profit. Don't you think you should close your trade?"

"I do not."

"But take the advice of forty years —"

At that moment the price of the stock leaped upward a whole point.

"See! You have six points, young man! Close, close!"

"Why?"

"What goes up, comes down!"

The stock indicated another point rise.

"For heaven's sake — sell, sell!"

"Why?"

The old man turned away in disgust. "He is a fool!"

Lewellyn heard him. The remark was no news. He believed that he was a fool. But he was not convinced of any one's else wisdom. He sat there stoically at the back of the office at three o'clock. St. Paul closed strong.

Next morning his stock opened up with ten points to his credit. Clerks and traders looked at him inquiringly. Would he sell now? "Buy me a hundred more shares of St. Paul." The order was executed with St. Paul up a point.

"Who is that young man?" a customer inquired.

"A fool!" said the man who had traded forty years.

"But he is making money."

"And soon to be parted from it."

St. Paul rose. By night, another nine points. "Buy me another hundred shares," came Le Croix's command. They were his. The office was aghast.

Now, for days, St. Paul did not go up. But it did not go down. For days it was watched by Lewellyn, industriously, perseveringly. He was the wonder of the traders of New York. Loaded to the muzzle, with high profits, he seemed like one committing suicide.

BARON SOLD OUT

A shrewd buyer. That accounts for the success of Mr. H. L. Smith. He has purchased the entire stock of Baron's Suit House, 762 Market Street, a competitor just six doors above. By paying cash he has obtained high-grade stock, consisting of Custom Tailored and Ready-Made Latest Style Novelties at such a low price that will enable him to dispose of the stock at once.

As St. Paul crept up, he bought with his profits. He held all the house would allow him to hold. Already, from his great acquisition of shares, his margins were in defiance of the rules of the firm. But he seemed guided by a splendid destiny, which brokers respect; closely they watched his account, but they let him buy.

And he bought, bought, bought, while higher mounted the price of St. Paul. He leaped from precipice to precipice, each steeper than the last. He seemed preserved by an increasing miracle of good fortune.

One morning, the first of May, Lewellyn stepped up to the desk, and said: "Sell me out."

"Everything?"

"Everything."

The head of the firm came out to see Lewellyn. "Young man, I want to congratulate you. You started in here with two thousand. By sheer nerve you have made a fortune. I could not have done it."

"Because you are not a fool," said Le Croix.

"I suppose you will still speculate?"

"Never in my life again."

"That is foolish."

"That's a matter of opinion."

For several days Le Croix was busy attending to the placing of his investments.

When he had easily secured everything, he bethought himself of his old companions. He found them with long faces. It was the ninth of May. The panic had struck them. They were deeply in debt.

"Here comes Le Croix, the Fool!" cried one. "Well, Lewellyn, we were big fools, too. This is a good day to come around. I guess the old man will give you your job back. We'll all ask him."

"But I'm not working."

"But what will you do?"

He opened a leather case which he drew out from his breast pocket. He displayed two hundred thousand dollars in gold bonds of the Government; two hundred thousand in leading railway securities, and a bank book with a balance of seventy-five thousand. "I sail for Europe tomorrow."

So the man with a fool's label stupefied his friends.

"You are going to speculate?"

"Never again!"

He had ordered himself the finest of outfits and some costly jewels. He took the steamer for Europe as he had planned.

On board, he met some charming people. He fell in love with Eleanor Van Deming. She was beautiful, the heiress of two millions.

When they reached Norway, on the road to the Midnight Sun, they were engaged. The summer was spent cruising with some of Europe's noblest blood.

In the fall, on the return to New York, Lewellyn and Eleanor were married, with tasteful pomp, at St. Thomas' Church.

In a year, the Le Croix's had become the fashion. Society filled their great house on the avenue.

A son was born—a fete and hundreds of choice gifts signalized the event.

Twenty years from the date of his marriage Lewellyn Le Croix was reported a leader in the progressive world of New York. He was known for his taste, his faultless dress, his fast horses, his superb establishment, his beautiful wife. He was reputed great at finance, for men were always telling, ever and over, over and over, the wonderful way he made his money. They kept telling it all of these years, and the echo continually reached to Le Croix.

On the twentieth anniversary of his marriage, a great company came to the house on the avenue. Towards the middle of the evening, Lewellyn's intimate friend, Reginald Van Cortland, scion of one of the richest houses in New York, came in. He voluntarily brought a gentleman whose acquaintance he had made abroad—Ferdinand St. Martin, a man of leisure, in middle life. He was presented to Lewellyn and his wife.

After supper, the new guest asked the unusual privilege of speaking in private with Le Croix. He was readily accommodated, and when the two were alone in Lewellyn's study, the stranger said: "You don't recognize in St. Martin your old school friend; I'm Jesse Dodge. I was ashamed of my folks, too, and made a change, as well as money, outside."

Le Croix grew very pale.

"What was your name in Ridgebank—Smith. You became Le Croix before you went into that broker's office. I've kept track of you. I pretty nearly asked you for cash when you made that strike in St. Paul. Was broke then. Money now—mines did it."

"Well, Lewellyn Le Croix, your wife in Ridgebank told me to give you her love." St. Martin smiled sardonically.

Lewellyn bent his head on the table. "It's all one!" he exclaimed. "I am a fool. I have tried to forget for twenty years. I cannot exist with this in my face. My wife! My son! Ah! St. Martin, spare my son!"

"Why, but I am not here to hurt you!"

He clutched his throat. "Yes, I know. But—my conscience, don't you see? I can't live with my wife, my son, the only beings on this earth I love and honor! I kept it out of my conscience. Now it would stare me in the face." He took a phial from his vest pocket. "This is strychnine. I've carried it twenty years straight. I'm going to take it now."

"If you feel that way, why I would."

Le Croix swallowed the contents. The men let a second pass in silence.

"For your dying satisfaction," said St. Martin, "I may tell you, the first Mrs. Smith has been dead a dozen years. There is no danger for the name of your son. I give you my word I will not expose it. I have let you die this way, because I loved the woman you deserted!"

"Villain!" Le Croix clutched his desk. "I have been a fool!"

Then he fell dead.

The following reliable testimonial speaks for itself:

"I take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful curative powers of Charles Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. For many years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and intestinal catarrh. My California physician brought up my case before the Congress of Homeopathic Physicians held in Chicago in 1901. An eminent specialist in intestinal diseases advised the use of Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. His advice was followed and I have been restored to health.

California Rich in Copper

Many interesting stories have been told of the rapid rise to wealth of the lucky miners throughout California, who have in the past taken immense fortunes from the rich mineral deposits of the mountains and waterways of this State—the richest State of them all—but while these men have taken untold millions out of the gold and silver mines of California they have left millions upon millions yet to be distributed as dividends among those fortunate enough to become interested in the great copper properties which are now attracting the attention of the Kings of Finance and which are fast placing California to the front as a producer of that valuable metal.

Industrial Romance

Senator W. A. Clark, probably the richest man in the world, began life in a small store in Montana, and now has an income of one million dollars per month from a single Pacific Coast copper mine. So great is his wealth derived from his copper mines that he is enabled to build unaided a transcontinental railroad, involving the expenditure of more than a million dollars per month. Not one of his great mines enjoyed the brilliant prospects or was surrounded by the remarkable conveniences which are to be found at the famous Cosumnes Copper Mine, which promises to be the richest of them all.

An immense water power owned by the Rio Vista Gold and Copper Mining Company flows through their property. Valuable timber lands adjoin the mine, and a railroad only a mile away.

Discovery of Cosumnes Mines

Langley's State Register for 1859 recites the discovery of copper ore on the Cosumnes river, in El Dorado county, giving instances of assays yielding over 70 per cent pure metal, which, with the gold and silver values in the ores of the Cosumnes mine, makes the best ores assay several hundred dollars per ton. But it was not until early in the sixties, when the sturdy miners were washing large fortunes every day from the rich placer mines of the California river bottoms, and at a time when very little attention was given to a search for the now valued sister metal, copper, that a party of miners, who were digging a tailrace for the discharge of the debris from the placer claims higher up the stream, cross-cut a well-defined ledge of copper ore above the south bank of the Cosumnes river. Great excitement was created by this discovery as the miners at first thought the copper sulphides to be gold. Specimens of the ore were assayed and found to be rich in copper, gold and silver, some showing a value as high as $2,000 in gold values per ton. Claims were located and a company was incorporated and acquired title to the property, and the claims were from that time on known as the Cosumnes Copper Mine.

State Mineralogist Reports on Cosumnes Mine

The value of the ores found in these mines is described in the Third Biennial (13th) Report of the State Mining Bureau, on page 58, as follows: "The general average of the ore is about 15 per cent copper. Choice specimens are said to yield 19 ounces silver and $6 gold per ton."

The vein, over thirty feet in width, is very large and strong, and has been traced and located a distance of three or four miles. The formation is of the most favorable character. The west wall is in part porphyry and part granite, the east slate and limestone, showing a contact vein lying immediately between the primitive and sedimentary rocks, which indicates permanency and great depth, this being the formation in which the largest and richest copper mines of the Pacific Coast are found.

Thousands of Tons of Ore in Sight

And on the dumps, which we will begin shipping to the smelter when the new railroad is completed in September.

Recent Demands for Sulphide Ores

Only a few years ago these heavy sulphide ores were of no value on account of the lack of smelting facilities. That difficulty has been overcome, like many others, by modern ingenuity, and, as a result, the returns from the California smelters are as certain as the payment of interest on Government bonds, and many times more profitable.

As an instance of the great demand for copper, had the California Wire Works been able to procure the metal in California the Pacific cable, recently laid from San Francisco to Manila, would have been manufactured here instead of in England.

Immense Profits in California Copper Mines

You can easily figure out what the profits from 100 shares of this stock may be when you consider that Calumet and Hecla, a Michigan copper mine, paid to first investors $1,500 for each dollar invested. "Gold Coin" paid a profit of 3,000 per cent. One hundred dollars invested in the Le Roi Copper Company's stock yielded to the owner $49,900. Fifteen hundred dollars purchased the entire Bully Hill copper mine in this State ten years ago, and it produced $3,000,000 during the first fifteen months of the operation of its smelter. A few years ago $10,000 was paid on the Mountain copper property in this State and forfeited. Since then the property has produced $25,000,000, and last year earned a net profit of $1,830,000. Two and a half million dollars in dividends is paid annually by the copper mines of a single county in this State. Hundreds of other similar instances might be mentioned to show the enormous profits that have been enjoyed by investors in the copper mines of California.

A Rare Opportunity

The Rio Vista Gold and Copper Mining Company was organized in January, 1902, under the laws of South Dakota.

The stock is paid up and absolutely non-assessable. Soon after its organization the company acquired the famous Cosumnes Copper Mines, which it has since been developing and which it now owns, free from debt and unincumbered in any way.

In order to increase their crew, enlarge their plant and connect the mine with the new railroad, a mile away, the directors, on July 12th, authorized the sale of 80,000 shares of treasury stock at 50 cents per share.

$5 down and $5 per month for nine months buys 100 shares.

$25 down and $25 per month for 9 months buys 500 shares.

$50 down and $50 per month for 9 months buys 1,000 shares.

In Financial Circles

The week's business falls far behind the previous week's, as far as stock transactions are concerned. Even the present "King Pin" of the market—sugar stocks—failed to further respond to the advancing raw sugar quotation. The only exception was Hawaiian Commercial, for which there seems to be a demand limited only by the capital stock. Makaweli is making a good second. I expect others to follow soon.

Since everybody is talking sugar stocks now, I will state that since the abolition of the bounties paid to producers in Europe the world's consumption has increased over a million tons, on top of which comes the report from Europe of an unprecedented drought; this accounts for the strength of the raw material market.

Transactions in bonds aggregate $280,000, in shares 4,446, divided as follows: 335 lighting, 507 water, 960 miscellaneous, 13 bank and 2,631 sugars.

The first transaction in the lately listed Associated Oil Co.'s bonds took place, $44,000 changing hands at $70.

Changes in quotations were nominal. Cal. Wine Association Co.'s stock seems to have reached bottom at $80.

ARTISTIC INTERIOR DECORATIONS.

Nowadays when a man builds a house he doesn't worry over its interior decorations. If he has no artistic instinct himself, he simply turns over the house to L. Tozer & Son, of 762-764 Mission street, and they furnish the ideas and estimates, attending to all the details of the designing and decorating. The Tozers bear a high reputation for the artistic decorating of homes from original ideas and fabrics. Some of the wall-papers they use run as high in price as thirty-five dollars a roll, but they have others at more modest prices. Whatever they do is of the highest class of work.

Sorosis Shoes for Boys and Girls

The problems involved in making shoes for the younger generation, while the foot is still growing, are wholly different from those prevailing after the foot has fully matured.

Ever since the great success of our Sorosis Shoe for Women we have been solicited by mothers who have worn them with comfort and pleasure, to provide their boys and girls with similar satisfaction.

It has taken all these years to produce a juvenile shoe that we thought worthy to rank with our Women's line.

We have departed from the customary methods of manufacture in these Sorosis Shoes for Boys and Girls, and invite your critical inspection of the result. They at least embody the Sorosis idea of juvenile shoes.

The Pierce Arrow 4 Cylinder Touring Car. 1905 Model.

The Pierce Arrow Touring Car 1905 model will be delivered in San Francisco December 1st. This car embodies all the approved features of the best cars of America and France.

The question is frequently asked, "Why can't Americans build as good an automobile as the French?" The French man says we can, if we will do the same as the French builders. First, to purchase the best material, second, to employ the best mechanics, and third, to take the time.

The builders of the Pierce Arrow accepted this advice and set about to build a car in America which would take the place of the cars bought abroad by Americans. The plan of most American manufacturers has been to make a "popular price" for their classification, and then build a gaudy, tinselled, flimsy concern which could be sold for that price.

The plan of the French man is to build a good car and then establish a price based on the cost. The Arrow is a car of the highest quality as to design, construction, and durability. The 1905 model has the side entrance and King of the Belgians type of body, which accommodates five passengers in the tonneau and two in front.

The tonneau can be provided with a victoria top, which protects it from the rain and sun when up and makes a perfect dust-shield when down. The upholstering and finish is equal to that of the most expensive French car. The wheel base is 104 in., providing ample room for long, easy riding springs, and a comfortable, roomy entrance. The body is of cast aluminum, from 1-4 to 1-2 inch in thickness, which makes it strong, and proof against warping, checking, splitting, or denting. Should the owner wish to change the style of the body, the aluminum can be melted and recast and a new body secured at a small outlay; such a body costs from $250 to $300 more than the sheet steel, sheet aluminum, or wood bodies used on the "popular priced" four-cylinder cars.

The Arrow is propelled by shaft drive, which does away with the friction, stretching insecurity, and noise incident to a chain driven car.

The engine is of the De Dion French type, 4-cylinder 34-38 horse-power (French), mechanically operated valves, and with cylinders cast separately. It has the design, material and workmanship which has made the French De Dion engine famous the world over.

The chassis ranks in importance with the engine. A good running gear is necessary to sustain a good body and a good engine.

The Arrow has a pressed steel frame and forged supports for all the machinery. Every bolt and nut is machined to a perfect fit, every nut is grooved and a cotter pin is passed through the groove of the nut and a hole in the bolt, so that the nut can not move. "Popular priced" cars have no cotter pins, and if used at all, do not come in contact with the nut. They may keep it from falling off after it has unscrewed 1-4 of an inch, but it has no sustaining power whatever. It costs money to do fine machine work.

The Arrow has a full equipment of search light lamps, most expensive electric wiring, coils, and storage batteries. Purchasers of "popular priced" cars in San Francisco are paying out from $200 to $300 for re-wiring for new coils and batteries.

The Arrow "costs more" ($4,150) because it is worth more. It is recognized as the finest American built car on the market. Were it built in France and imported it would cost as much as a French car of the same quality. It will give as good service as any French car costing one and one-half times as much.

At Del Monte.—When we were solicited to take a part in the Del Monte Race Meet, Aug. 26-28, we replied to the committee from the A. C. C. that we were opposing to racing touring cars "geared, stripped and doped," because such cars were not what we were selling and the results would be misleading the public. Besides we could not race the Arrow without extra gears which required much time to secure. The committee insisted that we "come in and help out." We entered the Arrow in eight races as a stock car. It ran over 250 miles on the track at Del Monte, and made a record of 1:13 1-5. During the five days it was running it did not call for a repair or adjustment of any character. To demonstrate its power we "cut out" one cylinder and it made a mile in the same time it did when the 4 cylinders were working.

While the Arrow was not in the classification of racing cars at Del Monte, its record for speed as a stock car (1:13 1-5) is exceptionally fast, and its reliability showing during the week ranks it as a touring car of a high order.

Automobile Topics

An exchange tells how a party of automobilists had a narrow escape from being shipwrecked at sea in an automobile a short time ago at Atlantic City. The driver had run his machine along the beach and into the shallow water for fun, and the party, consisting of ladies, was enjoying the novelty of the sensation when the wheels suddenly sank into a hole in the sands. The first thing they knew the water was a foot deep on the floor, and the tide was rising at a rate that threatened to make the party swim for it. Before this happened, however, a team of horses was brought to the rescue, and the machine with its badly scared crew was hauled safely ashore.

An ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles to eight miles an hour within the fire limits and fifteen miles in other parts of the city, has been passed by the city council of Atlanta, Ga. It also provides for the registration of all such vehicles with the city clerk, for which a fee of one dollar must be paid.

The latest development in autos is an automobile kitchen service which has been instituted at the Juvenile Asylum at Echo Hills, near Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., where the children are segregated in groups of twenty in separate buildings and the food, which is cooked in a central kitchen, is carried to the various homes in an automobile wagon fitted with an asbestos lined body.

The dust nuisance, says The Automobile of New York, will be made a matter of investigation by a committee of the A. C. G. B. I., in so far as the problem relates to automobiles. Considering the data on this subject was obtained from the one thousand miles reliability trials last year, the most important point, probably, being the conclusion arrived at that the form of the under part of the car has a great deal to do with the raising of dust. It has been found that the car with the smoothest under side, higher from the ground at the rear than the front, will raise the least dust, and the new committee will make experiments based on this conclusion. Experiments will also be made with the intention of showing what influence the shape of the body has on dust raising, and manufacturers are invited by the club to co-operate in securing definite information. The experiments will cover the influence not only of the shape and position of the body, but also the size of tires, and size, shape and position of mud-guards.

The Del Monte meet was unquestionably the best automobile meet ever held in this country and every automobile enthusiast owes appreciation to L. P. Lowe, S. G. Buckbee and C. C. Moore, whose personal efforts made possible such an event. The general distribution of trophies took place on Sunday night, representing in the aggregate the finest display of any sporting event in California. Society was present in large numbers, and interest throughout the three days of the meet was always at the enthusiasm point. All the local agencies had representatives in the contests, and I have heard of no ill-feeling engendered because all could not carry off the first prizes. The true sporting spirit was present at all times.

The Pope-Toledo cars easily carried away high honors at the tournament. These regular stock cars showed the fastest time in single and in five miles, breaking coast records and defeating specially built racing cars. George P. Fuller showed marvelous speed in his Pope-Toledo. He has driven his car over five thousand miles and without extra gearing made the fastest time of the Del Monte meet.

It goes without saying that Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Dimond were elated at the wonderful performance of their Pope-Toledo, establishing a record for circular track, doing ten miles in thirteen minutes, thirty-five and two-fifths seconds, the last four miles in six minutes, thirty-three and four-fifths seconds. Mr. Dimond's car carried regular road equipment and four passengers. This car is capable of easily doing a mile a minute on straight away course.

George A. Pope's Toledo made miles under one minute and six seconds, which is very fast. Had this car had the road mileage that Mr. Fuller has driven his Toledo, no doubt there would have been some neck-and-neck finishes. Bert Dingley in a Pope-Toledo made a wonderful exhibition of speed in the hill climbing contest. The skill displayed in this performance was of a high order.

Mr. Boyer, manager of the Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company, states that there were more Pope-Toledos at the tournament than any other make of car. Among the owners of Pope-Toledos were George A. Pope, James L. Flood, L. P. Lowe, E. R. Dimond, M. C. Harris, Col. E. F. Preston, Dr. J. B. Sargent, George P. Fuller, T. H. B. Varney, David A. Walker, H. Dernham, Robert McMullen and E. E. Peabody. All report having no trouble on the trip and having made good time.

The Cadillac won ten trophies at the meet, entering seven races and winning all but one. Cadillac made seventeen entries and in every instance was on the track at the appointed time, and finished all races, with the exception of one, when a tire was punctured. In two instances, the Cadillacs competed out of their class. On Friday, the first race for ten and one-half horse-power machines was run in two heats, the Cadillacs winning. It was then a case of a Cadillac running against a Cadillac for final honors. In the second race on the first day for gasoline cars costing fifteen hundred dollars and under (in touring condition, carrying six hundred pounds) the Cadillac won second honors. In the fourth race for gasoline cars, ten to sixteen horse-power, it was again a case of a Cadillac beating a Cadillac in the final heat. The time made by the winning Cadillac in this race was seven minutes, fourteen and one-half seconds for five miles, which is the fastest time ever made in the United States for cars in the Cadillac's class. In the pursuit race, three Cadillacs were running after their competitors were out and they ran ten miles before one overtook the other two. On Saturday, the Cadillacs again won the opening race and carried first, second and third honors. In the hill climbing contest on Sunday, the last day of the great meet, for cars costing one thousand dollars and under, the Cadillac reached the tape first and was in perfect condition after the rough climb over Carmel Hill, a distance of one and five-eighths miles.

The Winton Quad was very much in evidence at the meet. Messrs. Brinegar, Hunt and Owen ran the machine down on Thursday. No special effort was made for a record trip until San Juan hill was encountered. It was then that time was taken and the hill was climbed in exactly eight minutes. This is unquestionably record time, as the previous time was something like thirteen minutes. A perfect run was made by the car on the return trip from Del Monte to San Francisco. The Pioneer people make all kinds of claims as to the power and reliability of this car as a road touring car, and invite all interested to call and take a demonstration in the machine.

The Mobile Carriage Company was represented officially at the meet by J. A. Marsh, president, F. E. Hartigan, manager, Maj. C. L. Tilden, one of the directors, and H. F. Peart, secretary. In addition to this the company had at the meet six of its salesmen and mechanics.

Though only two White steam automobiles were entered in the meet, they carried off their share of the prizes, and were fortunate enough to win two of the most important events, the open event for cars costing two to four thousand dollars and the free-for-all race Saturday. The remarkable drive of H. D. Ryus in his White in the third race on Friday will long be remembered by the autoists, for in this event he made the best time for five miles of any machine costing less than thirty-five hundred dollars. In the seventh race Saturday for the Hammersmith and Field cup, which was a free-for-all and the big event of the day, Ryus won easily in his White, and but for seven-twentieths of a second would have scored the fastest mile of the meet. To Ryus also belongs the honor of being the only man to defeat George P. Fuller at the races. Among the White owners who drove their machines to the Del Monte races were L. P. Lowe, John D. Spreckels, Fred W. Gregory, Samuel G. Buckbee, Sara Drum, Kate Dillon, E. B. Stone, Return Roberts, John H. Spring and several others prominent in local society circles. The road over which the hill climbing contest was run was in exceedingly poor condition for fast work. No cars ever ought to go over such a road at top speed, and the fact that a number of drivers made the trip speaks well for their courage. The White Ghost made the run within ten feet of the tape with twenty seconds to spare over the fastest record of the course, but owing to the roughness of the road and high speed, it lost a bolt and the machine came to a stop.

The wonderful performance of the Rambler caused much favorable comment at the races, as the little machine fought its way through race after race, running mile after mile in one minute and ten seconds, or better, defeating machines costing more than twice as much. The fact that it entered eight races, won five first and two seconds, proves that it is all that the agents claim for it. The popularity of the Rambler touring cars was shown at Del Monte by the large number of the Ramblers bringing their occupants from every portion of the State. Among the owners of these cars were M. R. Madary, Fresno, W. E. Stephenson, Bakersfield, C. S. Logan, Hollister, Win Hawkins, Hollister, Henry Cousins, Hanford, Wiley B. Allen, San Francisco, J. L. Lind, Monterey, C. Christensen, Watsonville, and Mr. Huntington, Santa Cruz. One great surprise of the hill climbing contest was the Rambler, which defeated every machine with one exception, a large four-cylinder machine of double the power, and for awhile it looked as if the sturdy little machine would eclipse its big rival.

Cleopatra's Chance

BY LIONEL JOSAPHARE.

Celia, it must be admitted, was a real waitress in a mundane restaurant. This is matter of fact, but in sentiment and the deepest channels of her soul, she was a great actress; for pastime, she was a flirt. Her friends called her Cleopatra. This is description enough, perhaps too much, but the chums of a waitress are somewhat hyperbolic; talking with customers makes them so.

This Cleopatra's latest Anthony sat near the red and gilt wall and toyed with an ordinary oyster-fork. Meditatively he lifted one of the half-dozen from its shell as if it stood for a fine idea, and an idea he did have, an idea savory as the oyster with salt and pepper and lemon which at that instant he lay on his epicurish tongue and then swallowed. Cleopatra shared the idea. She was fond of ideas, especially when they came from the brains and the hearts of wealthy men.

Anthony, otherwise known as the fat Mr. Grundel, sat a-thinking and eating. Cleopatra glided out of the kitchen; her queenish proportions were commonplace in black alpaca and a white apron, but her hair was high and imperial, and compensated for humility of her attire.

Celia's co-workers, as they passed one another between the tables, disputed whether Mr. Grundel was fatter than he was bald; each contention had its adherents; but Cleopatra's heart was above such earthly disputations. She knew that Anthony's pocket-book, figuratively speaking, was even more corpulent than his personal corpulency, and his idea, which she shared, even greater than either.

He was going to take her to a Charity Ball; not a dance, not a Waiters' Alliance affair, nor a common benefit, but a social event to take place in the ball-room of one of the largest hotels.

Cleopatra broke four dishes that day. For the sweet, little heart of the tall Cleopatra was breaking with joy, and she was perturbed, poor girl—perturbed. Anthony had promised to send her a dress. It was to arrive just a few hours before dressing time. Cleopatra was on duty that afternoon and didn't know whether or not it had arrived at her home. She continued to be perturbed.

"I say, Cleopatra, isn't that apparatus too fancy for a petticoat? Maybe it's the skirt." The girls were helping her dress.

"Well! where do you think your mortal remains will be buried, Kitty Griffin, if you don't know imported lingerie when you see it? That's for the inside, and that beau of Cleopatra's is a high-toner, all the same, if he is fat, to send her such tricky trimmings. I wonder if he's playing fair, Cleopatra, or is he just jollyng you along?"

Cleopatra extended her bare arm and wriggled her fingers impatiently: "Just hand me that under-waist with the charlotte russe effect. Well! if this is his way of jollyng, it suits me like winning at the races. Lizzie, keep your restaurant fingers off those slippers. You can't handle satin like that."

"Don't try to run wild in front of me," replied Lizzie; "I've sold satin in a store to ladies that were ladies even if they did not make acquaintance of their johnnies by handing them a bill o' fare."

It was without visible or invisible ill-mindedness or memory that Cleopatra came down the stairs from the dressing-room and entered the palmy ball-room. There was an affectation of greater beauty on her set lips and an arrogance on her nostrils in keeping with the stern joy with which she breathed in the fashionable atmosphere, and knew that for the first time in her life she was herself.

"You may have the first and last dance, Mr. Grundel, and if you must have it, the third waltz, but everything else is spoken for. They've been after me. I'm going to do a smashing business in dances." And she did, and Mr. Grundel was almost scared at her success.

If society was to be at her feet, Cleopatra couldn't help it: she had done her part by furnishing the feet beautiful and appropriate for society's adoration.

Men and youths who wore the clothes she had often dreamed and read of were dancing with her, flirting with her, remembering their best jokes and most laughable experiences for her amusement, and took her smiles as if she were a sheltered daughter of a real family.

But Cleopatra's beauty was unsatisfied with what in eating is called an elegant sufficiency. A rich, young club-man escorted her to the punch-bowl.

The most amusing waiter you ever saw was in charge of one of the bowls. He seemed to be quite blase in the presence of the four hundred. Cleopatra winked at him. She had never seen him before, but there is such a thing as professional intuition and ethics. She asked him if there weren't some gorgeous fools floating about.

"They all look alike to me," said the most amusing waiter. They exchanged further confidences and Cleopatra vouchsafed the name of the dance she would attend next Sunday night.

The most amusing waiter grinned in a jiffy and was stoical again. He said he would be there when the door opened. She looked about for her club-man, but club-man had disappeared.

in the restaurant on the following Monday Cleopatra took her lead-pencil from her belt and was translating in financial terms the value of her customers' appetites.

"How's old Fat?" queried Kitty Griffin.

"I must have done something he didn't like," sighed Cleopatra. "But Bill's my life-buoy in the dance now; he does half-time like a prince, gurlies."

"You ought to be doing half-time in jail for letting old Fat evaporate," sniffed Kitty.

"I can't abide being governed, even by fat and bald men," retorted Cleopatra; "anyway I'll see him again."

"But not at a charity ball, Celia."

"Well, Billy will tell me how they look from behind the champagne punch."

"But it was such a chance, Cleopatra."

"Oh! I enjoyed the chance. It's the chance that has all the charm for me," said Cleopatra.

The pluck shown in the hill-climbing contest was the general topic of conversation after the race. It was an interesting exhibition of skill and a lesson in endurance.

Diamond tires, it seems, according to equipment of machines at Del Monte, are taking a very strong lead on the coast, as seventy-five per cent of all the machines on the ground were equipped with Diamond detachable tires.

A carload shipment of St. Louis cars was received by the Pacific Motor Car Company last week. H. B. Larzelere, sales manager of the company, has just returned from Los Angeles after making a very successful canvass in that territory on behalf of the Packard four-cylinder car. William Starr has just completed a very successful trip in his St. Louis car through the Lake Tahoe district. W. W. Everett has returned from San Diego where he spent a very enjoyable time with his St. Louis car, which he purchased from the Pacific Motor Car Company a short time ago. Mrs. H. E. Bothin took her new St. Louis car with her to her country place and from reports received there seems to be putting the car to good use in touring the surrounding country.

The Mobile Carriage Company will receive the first of its 1904 four-cylinder Pierce Arrow touring cars about the latter part of November. These machines will be of the very latest type, side entrance, wheel base one hundred and four degrees, cast aluminum bodies, engine from thirty-four to thirty-eight horse-power. All high-grade four-cylinder automobiles are being built with the side door entrances. The cars will have the King of the Belgians body and the tonneau will be provided with a Victoria top extending to the front seat. This top is a perfect rain protector and when lowered is one of the best dust protectors yet devised. These machines are of the latest design, best material and workmanship and are considered by all experts the finest American built machines on the market. The price in San Francisco will be forty-one hundred and fifty dollars with top.

San Francisco has been taking the lead in the matter of the practical use of automobiles. The Mobile Carriage Company has just closed a contract with the Palace hotel to provide that hostelry with fourteen passenger automobile buses to be used to convey the guests to and from the station.

One of the most enthusiastic of the Stockton automobilists is H. E. Williamson. Mr. Williamson's son Paul, a high school student, has blossomed out to a full blown expert in running an automobile. He recently returned to his home in Stockton after touring for thirty days in Monterey county. Paul had great success on his trip in the White, and stated that he averaged at least fifty miles every day.

Harlan W. Whipple, president of the Automobile Club of America, James L. Breese, a New York millionaire, and John T. Person, president of the Chicago Automobile Club, have all ordered White steamers.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is in receipt of the following from the Winton factory: "We have all along maintained that anybody could successfully operate Winton cars. This fact was proved in an unexpected way at the race meet of the Cleveland Automobile Club at the Glenville track, August twenty-second and twenty-third, as follows: Earl H. Kiser, of Dayton, placed the world's one mile record at fifty-four seconds in the first race he had ever ridden on the Winton Bullet No. 2. Later in the afternoon, still new to his car, he further reduced the world's record to fifty-two and two-fifths seconds. Charles Gornadt, of Cleveland, never rode the Winton Bullet No. 3 in a race until Monday, August twenty-second. On Tuesday, August twenty-third, with this car, he reduced the world's record for cars weighing less than eighteen hundred pounds from fifty-nine and four-fifths to fifty-eight and four-fifths seconds, riding six consecutive miles all under the previous world's record. These miles were done in fifty-nine and two-fifths, sixty-eight and four-fifths, fifty-eight and four-fifths, fifty-nine, fifty-nine and two-fifths, and fifty-nine seconds."

Another carload of Oldsmobile tonneaus was received by the Pioneer Company last week and the machines were distributed throughout the territory.

F. A. Lathe of the Pioneer Company has just returned from the San Joaquin valley, where he has been spending the last two weeks, and reports five sales.

A Conclave Romance

BY LAWRENCE MARTIN.

As Sir Knight Robert Brayton, with the other members of his Commandery, stepped from the special train that had brought them from their Indiana home, and went aboard the ferry boat, his memory slipped back twenty-one years to the occasion of his last visit. The scenery had changed since that period. There were improvements in the old Mole: the Ferry building with its tall clock tower altered the aspect: the boat was larger and more modern in finish: but some things had not changed. The same gray fog hung over the bay. The same harsh cries came from the sea-gulls. And, as the Knights passed from the boat to terra firma, the same cordiality was evidenced in the greetings of the Californian Knights awaiting the visitors from the Middle West.

"I am glad to be in California again," thought Robert Brayton.

His thoughts reverted to the Conclave of 1883. He was a married man then but he had left his wife at home, for she had not cared to take the long journey across the continent. Brayton was glad she had remained in Indiana when he met pretty Emily Todd. Emily was one of the young girls who, during the promenade concerts at the Pavilion, distributed boutonnières every night to the visiting Knights.

"I'm going to subjugate a Knight," she had said to her friends, "and have him for my own during the entire Conclave. We'll have a great flirtation, and then we'll say farewell."

Emily was a beauty and a coquette. Brayton, from one of the other girls' brothers, heard of Miss Todd's intention, and resolved to be her Knight during the Conclave. But he did not intend to be subjugated by her charm. Had he not a wife at home?

They met and flirted, danced and drove together, attended the excursions arranged for the visitors usually in each other's company, and Emily's friends looked on in amused silence. They knew how it would end. Had not Emily said she would make the Knight her slave and then say farewell forever?

It was the night of the ball that wound up the Conclave of 1883. Emily had never looked prettier and never were her wiles more bewitching to Robert Brayton. After several dances, they found themselves in a palm-sheltered nook.

"You're going away tomorrow," said Emily, suddenly. "How can I bear it?"

There were tears in her black eyes, that no longer snapped saucily, but were soft and tender in their gaze.

Brayton forgot his wife at home; forgot that this little coquette was to have been tamed; forgot everything. He caught her in his arms and kissed her. For an instant she was his—he felt the world fade away. Only they two were there, Emily and he. Then—

"Forgive me," he cried, and released her.

Manlike, he told her, brusquely, without thought, the truth.

"I have a wife at home," he said, "God forgive me. I can't ask it of you."

Emily looked up at him, smiling through her tears.

"It's all right," she said, "I, too, am a traitor. I am going to be married next month."

That was twenty-one years ago, and as he rode up on the car to his hotel, Brayton remembered it all as clearly as it had occurred the day before.

Once again he had seen Emily—not then Emily Todd. With her husband she attended the Boston Conclave. They had met at one of the receptions which he had attended with his wife. Though so many years had passed since their first meeting, they had recognized each other. But merely a passing greeting had been possible at the crowded reception.

"I wonder if she lives here now," thought Brayton, "and if I shall see her again?"

That same afternoon with the other Knights of his Commandery he went to the Pavilion. In the reception committee of wives and daughters of Californian Knights, one face drew his attention. The hair above the face was gray, but the eyes were black and brilliant as those of Emily Todd, the "flower-girl" of 1883.

Brayton made his way towards the face he recognized. She saw him coming and held out her hand in welcome.

"I wondered," said Brayton, "if I should see any of the girls I met at the old Conclave."

Spend Your Vacation

A great many San Francisco people are planning to spend the entire summer at Hotel Del Monte. No other resort in California offers such a combination of attractions—sea bathing, golf, automobilism, bowling, tennis, fishing, and all out-of-door sports. Instead of going from place to place seeking comforts, the wise ones of society are planning already to put in several enjoyable weeks down at Del Monte by the sea. Address Geo. P. Snell, manager, Del Monte, California.

"I don't think you'll meet any of the girls," she emphasized, smiling, "they are nearly all matrons now."

"You have not changed much," he said.

"Fie, flatterer!" she returned, "why, my hair is gray—as gray as your own—and I weigh one hundred and sixty-two, while Emily Todd tipped the scales at one-fifteen."

Then she added:

"By the way, is Mrs. Brayton with you?"

"Mrs. Brayton passed away over three years ago," he answered.

She clasped his hand in quick sympathy.

"I am so very sorry," she said.

She looked at him for a few moments in silence. Then she said, pensively, though a dash of the old coquetry sparkled for an instant in her eyes:

"I wonder if you know that I, too, am widowed? My husband died over two years ago."

Mr. Parvenu—What do you want of an automobile? I could never see any pleasure in one of those things.

Mrs. Parvenu—That is just like you; you think of nothing but pleasure.

Mr. Parvenu—Well, why do you want one?

Mrs. Parvenu—To let people know I can afford the luxury, of course.

A MILLINER WHO IS AN ARTIST.

Everybody talks about beauty nowadays, when the beauty doctors guarantee to turn every Katisha into a Venus. But half the women who are ranked as great beauties owe their reputation to their manner of dressing. It is certainly individuality that counts, and every woman who will spend a little thought on her garmenture will be repaid a thousand fold. Especially is this true of millinery. A becoming hat will make the homeliest face attractive if not beautiful. The milliner who studies the faces of her customers is the artist in her line. In a little chat the other day with Miss Olga Widrin, at her millinery parlors, 958 Geary street, the writer learned many things about the art of successful millinery. Miss Widrin has just returned from a trip to New York, St. Louis and Chicago, where she selected the latest things in millinery, which are now on view at her fall opening this week. The styles are vastly different from those of last winter. Chenille is the foundation of most of the new hats, and feathers are seen on nearly all of them. Birds in the most brilliant hues, in spite of the edict of the Audobon Society. One stunning picture hat of black panne velvet has a long plume, placed Cavalier fashion on the side. A Parisian effect in the new green has autumn leaves of the same shade as garniture. A Frenchy thing in brown chenille with ribbon crown in graded shades from orange to deep bronze, and a violet chenille toque with trimmings in harmony are well adapted to a chic face. A large white evening hat has the drooping lace in 1830 style, with long ostrich plume, and an odd black shape has streamers of black ribbon. One fascinating brown velvet turban has only a bit of orange feather for contrast, and a charming toque is of brown fur and brown velvet. A pretty hat for a young girl is of brown chenille with feathers graded in shade from orange to brown. Other hats are in the favorite mushroom modes. Owls' heads are the popular garniture, though cocks' feathers, birds of Paradise, and beetles are seen on some of the hats, and the new bright green is seen as often as the favorite orange. Miss Widrin has the artistic instinct that always places the right hat on the right head, and it is this that has largely gained her the popular place she holds among her modish patrons.

Brown—I hear that Jones has lost his wife.

Smith—Yes, but he isn't kicking. Jones always was a good loser.

"I never understood until I met Mr. Millions," said the Peniless Professor at the club, "what an insignificant consideration a silver dollar is. In his presence I understand, as if I were dissecting the coin for purposes of research in the interests of science, how obscure and infinitesimal, taken as a practical proposition, one dollar is, contrasted with a quantity of its brothers."

The Terrace Garden, which has just been added to San Francisco's high-class amusement resorts, will come nearer the European idea of such institutions than any similar place in this city. In construction it will be more magnificent and more comfortable than cafes and restaurants usually are. The place is modeled after original ideas by Mr. Lux Cooper, who traveled throughout the world in search of material. The structure consists of picturesque terraces which extend from the orchestra platform to the back of the balcony. Beautiful floral decorations, numerous flower pots and hanging baskets give the place a refreshing, picturesque appearance and artistically arranged groups of palm trees lend tropical color to the scene. The interior is finished in old Dutch style. A glass roof covers the main hall, thus enabling the patrons to eat their midday luncheon beneath the cheerful rays of the sun. In the evening thousands of electric lights will give the scene a fairy-like appearance.

Unlike other cafes, the Terrace Garden has no basement. All apartments are above ground, where fresh air and exhilarating breezes are plentiful. The management has taken particular care to set aside a luxurious parlor and dining room exclusively for the ladies. Precious mirrors cover the walls and rich Turkish carpets are placed upon the floor. The kitchen and wine cellar is modeled after that of the St. Francis hotel and the cuisine is the finest that culinary skill can procure. Quick service is one of the features of Terrace Garden. Prosper P. Reiter, the manager, was only recently connected with the St. Francis hotel and his experience in some of the world's most famous hosteleries will aid him in satisfying the taste of the most fastidious gourmet.

Particular attention has been bestowed upon the musical features of this unique establishment. A sound shell built from select violin wood has been constructed at a large expense. The members of the orchestra are clothed in neat uniforms and selected from among the most accomplished artists on this coast. Bernat Jaulus, one of the foremost musical directors of the West, is the leader. The programs will be selected with regard to artistic quality. Music and service will be the best that money can secure.

Mr. Swagger—I don't think your medicine will agree with my wife, doctor."

"I shall be surprised if it doesn't."

"Not half so surprised as I shall be if it does. Nothing that is not superhuman can agree with my wife."

REMOVAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Osteopathic Institute which for the past six years has been located at 204 Sutter street has changed its quarters. Since September first it is occupying the entire sixth floor of the Alto building, at the southeast corner of Kearny and Bush streets, which has been leased for a term of years. This change became necessary to accommodate the large and increasing business which Dr. A. C. Moore and Dr. B. P. Shepherd have built up. The reception room, and treating rooms, rest room, office and laboratory in the Alto building are fitted up according to the requirements of a strictly first-class institution of this kind. Drs. Moore and Shepherd are both pioneer Osteopaths, and have made many remarkable cures in correcting deformities and eradicating chronic ailments from the system. Their skill is attested to by the many they have treated and sent from their establishment cured. Osteopathy is a science that has made rapid strides in favor since it first came into vogue. In the East it is probably the most popular form of medical treatment, and since its introduction here the favor it is held in in the Eastern cities has extended to the West. Patients come from far and near to try the new treatment, which is almost invariably successful, particularly in correcting deformities, something that ordinary medical science scarcely ever attempts with even partial success. Drs. Moore and Shepherd have many thousand friends who will be pleased to learn of their new move, and wish them success.

HIS SHOCKING SPEECH

"Well, I behave myself when I'm intoxicated," said the intemperate husband to his literary wife. "My language is always circumspect."

"That's just the trouble; your language is shocking."

"You amaze me," he ejaculated.

"You use the split infinitive."

He bowed his head in shame.

SCHOOL OF TONE PLACING (PALATAL SYSTEM)

Vocal Phonetics—Besides the "Palatal Tone Placing System"

taught in the Louis Crepau School, another and most important feature is the teaching of the English phonetic sounds. The study of the five vowels is not all that is necessary to sing in a language, and particularly so in English. Very few English-speaking people are able to sing the phonetics of their language exempt from throatiness. Fundamentally, English phonetics cannot be emitted in singing as uttered in speech. From a vocal standpoint and through ten years of experience in teaching English-speaking singers, Mr. Crepau has made a vocal classification of all the English phonetic sounds. This classification enables English-speaking singers to master all the English phonetic sounds and renders them harmonious and easy to sing.

Beringer on Reinecke

When Joseph Beringer, director of the Beringer Conservatory of Music of this city, was in Leipsic this year, he had the pleasure of meeting his old tutor, Carl Reinecke, the composer, whose birthday celebration he attended. Mr. Beringer gives me the following interesting notes of Reinecke's life, which he gathered during his visit in Leipsic: Reinecke, the son of one of the most honored and esteemed piano and theory teachers in Altona, Germany, was born the twenty-third of June, 1824. As a boy he showed great musical talent, receiving lessons from his father in piano and violin, and studying the scores which his father had arranged, thereby learning the secrets of score-playing. There were also weekly musical gatherings at his home where quartet playing was cultivated. At the age of eight he wrote several little strains, which surprised his father, for they showed indisputable talent. His father being the leader of the Altona Apollo Society, the boy had the opportunity to appear for the first time in public. At twelve years he played Hummel's "La Sentinelle" with such success that a few weeks later he again was heard in two movements of Beethoven's C major concerto. He frequently wrote and arranged music for the stage, and in his early youth started to give instruction in piano. He practiced at times thirteen hours a day. After being heard once more in concert in Hamburg he retired from the concert platform and devoted the next two years to his studies, giving one concert in Altona. Encouraged by his triumphs he started on his first concert tour. He went to Lubeck and Eutin and thence to Copenhagen, where he was introduced by the Duchess Plessen to King Christian VIII. In one of the concerts given at the court of the King, he was received with honors and was given a stipend that enabled him to continue his studies. After appearing once more in Stockholm he went to Leipsic, the musical centre of Germany. There Mendelssohn was the leader of the celebrated Gewandhaus concerts, Robert and Clara Schumann resided there, Ferdinand David with his quartet gave many artistic chamber-music concerts, and the Conservatory of Music, that was just founded, had become the central attraction. Reinecke made his debut under Ferd. Hiller's baton in Mendelssohn's Serenade and Allegro giocoso for pianoforte and orchestra with such success that he was immediately engaged to take part in the chamber-music concerts of the Gewandhaus. With the David quartet, Reinecke went to Halle, Bremen and Hanover, and also gave concerts alone in Kiel and Altona, after which he chose Copenhagen for his residence. In 1848 political disturbances drove the artist from Denmark. Returning to Leipsic, where Moscheles, David, Rietz and Hauptmann received him with open arms, he again played in the Gewandhaus, and on an occasional visit to Weimar he was encouraged by Liszt to continue in his musical career. Reinecke made his headquarters in Bremen, and after a few years went to Paris. There he renewed the friendship with Liszt and was asked to teach Liszt's daughters, Blandine and Cosima. Under Berlioz's leadership Reinecke played as soloist in the Philharmonic concerts. In Paris he received an offer from Hiller to go to Cologne to teach at the Conservatory. While there he wrote a great many compositions and became widely known as a concert pianist. Thence he went to Barmen as musical director, six years later going to Breslau, where the concerts of the Sing academy had a great instructing influence over all of Germany. He founded the Symphony Concerts in order to further instrumental music. These concerts are still given with great success. From Breslau he went to Leipsic, where he has remained ever since, being called there in 1860 as successor to Rietz. He took the leadership of the famous Gewandhaus orchestra and joined the staff of teachers at the Conservatory of Music. He held the position of leader of the Gewandhaus concerts for thirty-five years, and resigned after he had conducted once more Handel's "Jubilate" and Beethoven's Ninth symphony. He filled the position as director of the Conservatory of Music from 1897 to 1902, when he retired from public affairs to private life. As a conductor Reinecke always gave a true reproduction of the works he interpreted, being free from mannerisms and never trying to gain effects only to surprise, nor did he ever try to draw attention to his own personality. Especially in the rendition of Schumann's works, Reinecke was successful. He never tried to come in closer musical relationship with the works of Wagner, Liszt or Berlioz, but on the other hand it must be said that a number of new compositions and the names of new authors found through him the way to the Gewandhaus. Reinecke, who gained his fame under Mendelssohn and Schumann, was during the struggle between the old melody and the new, a true apostle of his masters. Although the time had changed and the progressive music had won the battle, Reinecke remained at all times consistent to his artistic principles. After the death of Hiller, Reinecke was the best Mozart player of his time. He also was a great exponent of R. Schumann, whose compositions were rarely omitted from his concert programs. In Reinecke's book, "The Art to Accompany," he mentions how necessary it is to be able to transpose, and gives many examples from lyrical composers. His writings on the revival of Mozart's Pianoforte-Concerto, and his book on Beethoven's Sonatas, are of great merit. His letters regarding the question "What shall we play?" are instructive and treat the matter in a scholarly manner. Reinecke's instrumental works comprise three symphonies, a serenade for string orchestra, and several concert overtures, concertos for pianoforte, violin, violoncello and the harp. Besides numerous songs he wrote five operas. Reinecke is one of those musicians who care nothing for outside admiration. At one time Robert Schumann had dedicated to Reinecke a pianoforte composition. The young man was standing in front of a music store when he saw the work of Schumann, which had just appeared in print. Reinecke read, to his astonishment, the words: "Dedicated to Carl Reinecke." The eccentric Schumann had quite forgotten to inform Reinecke about it, or to send him a copy. This was one of the honors which affected Reinecke more than titles or decorations. Reinecke always spoke with affection of Mozart, as a lover speaks of his beloved. Once, as he opened a large manuscript of Mozart, which he prized as his rarest treasure, his eyes were fixed on the old yellow papers which once the hand of Mozart had touched, and on the faded notes which Mozart's hand had written. "See here—what is this? An ink-blot, a real ink-blot, made by Mozart one century ago. But you see," said Reinecke with shining eyes, "Mozart surely had no blotter at hand. What did he do? He licked it off." There was no doubt of it. If not his lips, Mozart's tongue had surely touched the paper.

Off for the East

Another San Francisco vocalist has left us, and it will probably be some time before she returns to her old home. When Elena Roeckel married Hamilton Smith of St. Louis on June twenty-fifth, the young people expected after their wedding-tour to make this city their home. But Mr. Smith was called suddenly East, to the bedside of his dying mother, who was at the Smiths' country-place in Vermont. His mother died before he had proceeded far on his journey, and last week his bride left to join her husband and his family. Elena Roeckel had a very bright future before her. Though only just out of her teens, she had accomplished a great deal in a musical way here. She had just been awarded the position of contralto of Calvary church choir, in a contest between twenty-two voices. However, as her husband shares her ambition, her early marriage may not prove a bar to her fulfilling the career her parents had marked out for her.

Signor P. La Villa has resumed his vocal lessons. Some of his advanced pupils will soon be heard in a public "Evening of Music." On this occasion two of Professor La Villa's new songs will be rendered by professional singers. "If Love Were Dead" has a violin obligato, and the other composition is an adaptation of a Sinding chanson. Both are to be published by Curtaz & Son.

Two grand operatic concerts will be given here by Fannie Francisca, prima donna soprano of the Opera Royal, Amsterdam, on Wednesday night, September twenty-first, and Saturday afternoon, September twenty-fourth, at the Alhambra. Fannie Francisca, under the name of Fannie Michelson, will be remembered here, her birthplace. She will come here direct from New York city, giving San Franciscans the first opportunity to hear her since Europe took up the California singer. From this city she goes to Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Fresno, San Jose, Sacramento, Portland, Seattle, Denver and Chicago. Her first concert here will bring out a very large and fashionable audience. The prices will be two dollars, one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents.

Mr. Dunbar (toastmaster)—As I said before, I know that you will all join with me in the heartiest of felicitations, for I know we are all his sincere friends, and that he feels toward us as we do toward him.

Bill Richards (softly, to his friend Hank Morton)—Dunbar is a good jollier. I heard him say last night that he sympathized with Spender's fiancée.

Hank Morton—Well, so do I; so does everybody at this table. You know how Spender treated his first wife, don't you?

Bill Richards—Of course I do, but what is the use of talking about it tonight? You know we are all his friends.

Charley Stone (leaning over to Richards)—What are you fellows whispering about?

Bill Richards (with a broad smile on his face)—Morton is talking about Spender's first marriage; deucedly malapropos, I think, don't you?

Charley Stone—Yes, but I guess everybody is thinking about it tonight, and also about his numerous love affairs since. I sympathize with the poor girl who is going to marry him, for Tom is surely a bad one with women, and he's a kind of snob, too. He has done some—

Morton—Hold on; what is that Dunbar is saying?

Charley Stone—Oh, he's just pumping in a little more hot air.

Bill Richards—And Spender seems to be swallowing it, too. It's funny how a worldly-wise fellow can be jollied on such an occasion as this. Of course we are all Spender's friends. His most intimate friends only were invited tonight.

Charley Stone—And we wouldn't knock on the outside for the world.

Morton—Of course we wouldn't. We have just been talking among friends. We all like Tom down in our hearts, for he is a good fellow in the club.

Bill Richards—Sure; and though I've been wondering how long it will be before he is divorced, I really hope that it will prove a very happy match.

Charley Stone—And so do I.

Hank Morton—Poor girl!

Presently they were all singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow." And Tom Spender was overcome with emotion, so deeply touched was he by the evidence of sincere friendship.

—The Clubman.

THE POPULAR LOUVRE.

About eight months since, Mr. Jesse Meyerfeld succeeded the former proprietor of the Louvre, the restaurant that for many years has been located at Eddy and Powell streets. Always popular, since Mr. Meyerfeld came into charge the Louvre has assumed the role of reigning favorite among restaurants. Every night after the theatre one sees a throng of smartly attired women and men gathered about the tables, discussing the play and the delightful menu provided by the chef who presides over the Louvre's cuisine. In its new dress the restaurant is scarcely recognizable. The Moorish decorations have transformed the interior until it is a veritable fairy palace. Flowers on the tables add to the artistic appearance and give the air of a continual fiesta. The music discoursed is a delightful aid to digestion. Herr Franz Adelman is now the orchestral leader and the programs given under his direction combine classical and popular selections, with the latest novelties. The service is unsurpassed, perfection being insisted upon in this branch by the proprietor. The liquors served at this restaurant have no superiors. The Louvre's German beers and wines are celebrated even east of the Rockies. Their Pilsener beer has just been awarded the "Golden State Prize" at the International Pure Food Exposition at Vienna. The Louvre imports directly from Europe and Pilsener, Wuerzburger and Culmbacher are always on draught.

"I hear that Royster is beginning to lead a most exemplary life."

"Naturally; he has just begun paying alimony."

THE PLEASANTON HOTEL.

Twenty thousand dollars has been spent on improvements in the Pleasanton Hotel since Mr. de Wolfe took charge a year ago. The large public parlor has been refurnished in three shades of green, imported draperies, furniture and carpets made especially for this room in the East. The woodwork is enameled in white, with electric light fixtures in old iron and a particularly beautiful mosaic lamp decorates the mahogany centre table. This and the mahogany grand piano are the only pieces of furniture in the room, aside from the chairs. The spacious dining room is newly decorated in red and gold while the halls present the welcome warm red in carpets and draperies. A novel feature inaugurated by Mr. de Wolfe is the private dining rooms for guests in which they can give lunches and dinners the same as in their own homes. These are used by the smart set extensively as they have used the University Club. A room to be seen nowhere else in San Francisco is the "Jap Room." Mr. de Wolfe has here many valuable draperies, and an artistic frieze designed by a native Japanese, a Chinese lamp and many things taken from the joss-houses or obtained from denizens of the Orient. Mr. de Wolfe deserves credit for his originality and the excellence of his taste in the furnishing of the popular hostelry, endeavoring as he does to make more pleasant the already satisfied existence of his patrons.

Common sense and experience are always the best guides to the housewife who is ordering a coffee that will please the most capricious taste. San Francisco's feminine connoisseurs tell everybody to buy Armer's Very Best coffee—it is without a doubt the most delicious and nutritious brand on the market.

Nought is more honourable to a knight,
Nor better doth besem brave chivalry
Than to defend the feeble in their right,
And wrong redress in such as wend awry.

—Spencer's Faerie Iereene.

Was I for this entitled—sir,
And girt with trusty sword and spur?
—Butler's Hudibras.

These are not the romantic times
So beautiful in Spenser's rhymes,
So dazzling to the dreaming boy,
Ours are the days of fact, not fable,
Of knights, but not of the round table,
Of Bailie Jarvie, not Rob Roy.
—Halleck.

A lae'd hat, worsted stockings, and—noble old soul!
A fine ribbon and cross in his breast button-hole,
Just such as our prince, who nor reason nor fun dreads,
Inflicts, without e'en a court-martial, on hundreds.
—Moore.

A true knight;
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word.
Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd,
soon calm'd;
His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives; what thinks,
he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guides his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impure thought in breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects, but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love.
—Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
My good blade carves the casques of men,
My tough lance thrusteth sure,
My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure.

The shattering trumpet shrilleth high,
The hard brands shiver on the steel.
The splintered spear-shafts crack and fly,
The horse and rider reel;
They reel, they roll in clanging lists,
And when the tide of combat stands,
Perfume and flowers fall in showers,
That lightly rain from ladies' hands.
—Tennyson's "Sir Galahad."
It was a goodly sight
To see the embattled pomp, as with the step
Of stateliness the barbed steeds came on,
To see the pennons rolling their long waves
Before the gale, and banners, broad and bright,
Tossing their blazonry.
—Southey.

Letters

The Inanities of Cassander

Just what the gentleman who uses the name Verus Cassander was trying to do when he wrote "The Delicious Life-Saving Kiss" nobody but himself can conjecture. What he has succeeded in accomplishing is another matter; practically nothing in my opinion. There are some ninety odd pages of print fine enough to wear out any but triple-plated eyesight, divided into thirty-five sections or chapters, and so plentifully besprinkled with poetical quotations that "ye intelligent compositor" must have offered fervent prayers for plenty more of that same, for not only is it "fat copy," but it fairly swims in its own grease. Apparently it is another contribution to the literature of race suicide, for, what slender thread of story there is relates at length and after many endless ramifications, the marriage of a pair whose parents had agreed to their union before either was born. Hetty Jones, such heroine as there is, is probably meant to represent the girl of the period, brilliant but superficial, imperious and sufficient unto herself. She has a gloriously triumphant career in high school and college, while the slower, matter-of-fact Harry Brown barely pulls through. The brilliant Hetty wants a career and tries successively the stage, journalism and law, only to make a brilliant failure in each. Next she tries professional nursing in the army hospitals, and there meets her discarded lover, wounded and sick unto death. Upon this follow rapidly, love, marriage and maternity, though the reader is apt to suspect that the charming Hetty was not uninfluenced by the chance to secure a job from which she could not be dislodged without her own consent. From this slender thread of romance there are depended dissertations on the popular methods of education, and the advantages of possessing and using a pair of goo-goo eyes in preference to worrying over other qualifications, and some more or less flippant references to army chaplains. Queen Victoria, Home Rule for Ireland, Zionism, Frau Kruger, President McKinley, the Joaquin Millerism of renaming the nation, lynching, the Spanish war, and the Anglo-American alliance are all dragged in somehow, if only for a word or two, and kisses are as plentiful as quotations, and both as common as commas. The olla podrida is going to prove a boon and a blessing to that class of penny-aliners who pass themselves off as journalists on the strength of resurrecting and re-attaching ancient anecdotes. In the course of a little while it will be as great a godsend as a file of old almanacs. Typographically it is a neat bit of work, utterly wasted except in the respect that it gave the printers a chance to earn a penny.

"The Pillar of Light."

Those who enjoy mysteries and hair-breadth escapes have a treat before them in "The Pillar of Light." The greater part of the action takes place in a lighthouse off the coast of Wales, within sight and rowing distance of land, yet perched on a ledge so dangerous that often for six weeks at a time no landing can be made. Stephen Brand, keeper of the Gulf Rock Light, and something of a mystery to his mates as well as to his neighbors in the port, had two grown daughters who set out on a promising day to make him a visit. Before they reached the rock the weather changed so that the old fisherman who was taking them out decided that they would not be able to land, but simultaneously with his decision to return to Penzance a signal of urgent distress was given from the lighthouse. This decided Ben to make an effort and at least discover what had gone wrong, and it transpired that the both the underkeepers had become disabled, one by scalding both his hands severely and the other by a fall, resulting in a broken leg, in his haste to bring relief to the sufferer. In the face of the danger of a storm arising there was nothing better to do than to send the two unfortunates ashore with Ben, and for the girls to remain with their father and render him such assistance as they could in the performance of his duties. Apparently the united family were about to spend a quiet evening by themselves, and certainly the Gulf Rock Lighthouse was about the last place in which to look for visitors, yet before midnight a great Atlantic liner went to pieces literally at their feet, and out of over two hundred souls scarcely a quarter were saved, and these altogether by the coolness and daring of a young American passenger. With upwards of eighty who escaped with their lives and only such clothing as was on their backs, torn and bedraggled by the conditions of the disaster and drenched to the skin, some of them injured, all packed into a space designed to accommodate three, with no supply of clothing, no means for heating or drying things, no occupation at which they could be put, and a shortage of food and water, there is opportunity for complications and disasters enough, and there are very few things which might have happened and did not. There are two love stories interwoven with the disasters, and two families, reunited after years of separation. Honors are about even between Charles Pyne, the young American passenger of the Chinook, whose agility of body and brain was the means of saving so many lives, and Lieutenant John Stanhope, R. N., who opened communication with the lighthouse in spite of wind and tide. All the mysteries are satisfactorily explained, and people who like to be sure the knots are made fast and the ends tucked in will find this to their liking. Apart from the interest in the narrative itself, the construction and economy of the lighthouse is made clear, and the sectional diagram which serves as a frontispiece is a most useful accompaniment. While not a great book, "The Pillar of Light" is worthy of attention. The novelty of the environment alone would command notice. The author, Louis Tracy, is a comparatively new writer, of whom it will be safe to expect better things in the future. Published by E. J. Clode.

Charles Warren Stoddard's new book is to be called "The Island of Tranquil Delight." Kipling's volume, just issued, is labeled "Traffics and Discoveries," and George Moore calls his new novel "General Life."

Mary Queen of Scots has figured largely in recent literature, so it is not surprising that Queen Elizabeth of England should begin to make her appearance once more. Apparently the three centuries which have intervened between them and the present generation has not dulled the interest of partisanship, and there are people as ready to take arms for one side or the other today as there were then.

Rudyard Kipling once established a rule with regard to autographs. He ignored all requests which were not accompanied by a signed receipt for at least two dollars and a half donated to some charity. Gabriel d'Annunzio has a better scheme than that. He cheerfully sends the autograph provided it is to be written on the fly leaf of one of his books.

W. B. Yeats, Stephen Gwynn, Lady Gregory, D. G. O'Donoghue, and Jane Barlow are to collaborate on a volume to be called "Irish Voices."

Kate Douglas Wiggin is going to publish her next volume in the name of Mrs. Riggs. It will be almost as much of a disguise as a pseudonym.

Those delightful stories of school life in the East Side of Gotham with which Myra Kelly has been regaling the readers of McClure's, are to appear in book form immediately. Miss Kelly ought to be able to count on the same kind and degree of success as that which was accorded to Mrs. George Madden Martin and "Emmy Lou." Miss Kelly's little Russian Hebrews are not so daintily sweet as the little Kentucky heroine, and she views her situation more from the standpoint of the teacher than from that of Morritz Mogilewski and Eva Goronowski, but the children are very much alive and very human, and any one in search of information about school matters can gain more insight from a single one of the episodes the author has set down than from a whole stack of statistical reports and educational magazines and reviews.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the ground of defendant's alleged willful and utter neglect of said plaintiff for more than four years last past, also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the Complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 30th day of June, in the year of our Lord; one thousand nine hundred and four.

The Non-Partisan Movement

It seems somewhat premature to discuss, at this time, plans for the organization of a Non-Partisan party for the municipal campaign of 1905. But the project, we are told, is now being considered by some of our "influential citizens" intent upon redeeming the city from Schmitz-Ruef misrule. The supposition is that they have lost confidence in the machines operated by the Republican and Democratic leaders, and that they believe public sentiment to be strongly in favor of honest government. They hope to appeal to the taxpayers of the city, the people who desire honest expenditure of the money to be raised by the bond issue. It is their purpose to open another era of reform—believing no doubt that they will be able to awaken the public conscience. It will be interesting to watch developments, and note the social and political connections of the men by whom the movement is shaped. A Non-Partisan party organized solely for the purpose of purifying the city government should meet with the enthusiastic approval of the community, but there is always danger of such an organization falling into the hands of selfish politicians. That was what happened to the last Non-Partisan party that undertook to rule this city, and which for a time held the balance of power. Unscrupulous political bosses sometimes find it expedient to masquerade as Non-Partisan reformers, and as it was not so long ago that the deception was practised in this city, the people will be likely to view the new movement with suspicion, until they have had an opportunity to inquire into the connections and motives of the men by whom it is projected.

Barbarous, Says Brewer

Justice Brewer, in an address at Milwaukee, declared that our Chinese exclusion laws are barbarous. Fortunately that circumstance does not affect their constitutionality. The learned jurist probably considers them barbarous because they are inconsistent with a Christian spirit. But we make amends for our barbarous intolerance by sending missionaries to China to convert the natives.

They are not making much progress but they are performing a Christian duty. If the Chinese had access to this country, many missionaries would find their vocation gone, for though the heathen in America is a heathen still there is no incentive to the missionary spirit on domestic soil. We are surprised that Justice Brewer should revive discussion of the Chinese question at this late day, especially in view of his judicial office. Our barbarity toward the Chinese has been frequently harped upon, but the arguments of the barbarity howlers are not convincing. The Chinese exclusion laws are based on the same principle as that which is responsible for protection to American industries. In one instance we protect American labor from dangerous competition. In the other we protect American capital from competition. In both instances selfish interests are subserved. The latter day arrogance of labor unions, and the evils that have followed in its train, have been responsible for reaction of public sentiment on the subject of Chinese exclusion, but people in California familiar with the conditions resulting from Chinese immigration in the seventies, should not permit their prejudices against organized labor to influence their judgment. It may be humiliating to confess that the American laborer cannot compete with the Chinese, but it is better to be humiliated than to suffer the effects of such unequal competition.

Importance of The Vice-Presidency

Since the nomination of Mr. Davis for Vice-President, the politicians (notably among them, Mr. Root), have discovered that it is an office of great importance. Unquestionably it is, and by reason of the fact that the person elected to it may be destined to occupy the Presidential chair. Nevertheless, under the present system of government, it is not inherently of sufficient importance to tempt statesmen. It is frequently called a "graveyard" and men refuse to be nominated for it. President Roosevelt so considered it, and it was generally understood that the forcing of the nomination on him was a stroke of political strategy conceived by his enemies who hoped to make it the graveyard of his ambition. The Vice-President should be vested with powers calculated to enhance his importance; and through the exercise of which would come the experience and training essential to the proper performance of the duties of the higher office which he may be called upon to fill. At present the Vice-President has less power and patronage than the Speaker of the House, and he has no vote in the Senate, except on a tie. The Vice-President should be made a member of the Cabinet without portfolio, to attend all meeting in an advisory capacity, and to preside in the absence of the President.

Frederick's Effigy

Soon there will be raised in the War college in Washington, D. C., the statue of Frederick the Great, presented to this country by that spectacular monarch, Emperor William, as a peace offering. Anti-imperialists have stoutly objected to the raising on American soil of this effigy of one of the most absolute imperialists that ever lived; but their objections are puerile. What significance is there in the raising on American soil of the effigy of a departed imperialist by a foreign monarch with whom we are on friendly terms? The statue should be viewed merely as a contribution to art. We sacrifice no principle in accepting a token of esteem from Germany that happens to be in the nature of a compliment to the memory of a German hero for whom we have no great admiration. We may at least admire the handiwork of the sculptor, and appreciate the spirit that prompted the gift. When Emperor William conceived the thought of this peace offering American indignation was at a white heat over the bombardment of Venezuelan ports by German warships. We demanded that he should recognize the Monroe Doctrine, and he smiled pleasantly and sent Prince Henry over to extend the glad hand and vow Germany's eternal friendship. About the same time he ordered the statue, and then the Boston anti-imperialists raised a howl. Perhaps they would be placated by the raising of the statue of James Monroe in Unter den Linden. They should urge President Roosevelt to request William to accept a Monroe effigy. In view of our acceptance of the Frederick statue William would not be so ungracious as to refuse. Perhaps it would be a good thing to make the acceptance of a Monroe statue a condition precedent hereafter of our acceptance of any sculptured junk from foreign countries.

If Polygamy Were Permitted

Former President Patton of Princeton university is authority for the statement that if polygamy were permitted the social system of this country would be speedily disintegrated. In view of the fact that there is not the remotest probability of polygamy being permitted in this country, the importance of ex-President Patton's utterance is not apparent. Moreover his conclusion as to the consequence of legalizing polygamy does not appeal to the average mind. Though men may be naturally polyamorous, it does not follow that all, or a large number of them, would avail themselves of the privilege of indulging in the luxury of plural wives. There are many gents in the country today, of polygamous tendencies, who have not the courage to annex a single spouse. There is no reason to presume that the bachelor would be converted to matrimony simply through being vested with the privilege of taking unto himself as many wives as he pleased. The probability is that he would continue to pursue his unregenerate way, unhampered and in the full enjoyment of his liberty and irresponsibility. And as for the married men, why should it be assumed that they would revert to the customs of the centuries ago despite the restraints of Christianity? Even though religious scruples would not deter them surely there are other considerations arising out of the modern social system that persuade man of the discomforts and drawbacks of a multiplicity of wives. Even though polygamy were sanctioned the average man would be loth to complicate his domestic affairs by distributing his affections among a number of women, each having legal claims on his purse and heart. There are many husbands who distribute their affections illegally, but if plural marriage were permitted they would be likely to concentrate them and curb their polygamous inclinations. Having the right to marry more than one woman it would be found hazardous for a married man to toy with the affections of one not his wife except with "honorable intentions"; otherwise he might find himself possessed of two wives though quite content with one. However, the social system of the country is not in jeopardy, and nothing short of the decadence of it will have occurred before plural marriages are permitted.

No Cooking For Them

The Wisconsin State University has been trying to coax girls back to domesticity by introducing a cooking course, but the college girl has no intention of being ensnared in a kitchen apron, so she has settled the matter promptly and effectively by refusing to take lessons in the culinary art. When a girl goes to college she does so under a firm conviction that she is cast in no common mould, and that beyond showing her grace while making fudge in a chafing dish, or taking part in some similar lark where she can look as bewitching as possible in her best frock with a cambric pocket handkerchief pinned in front of it, she must never demean herself by such vulgar employment. There is more call today for cooks than for college girls, but the college girl will be the last to acknowledge it. If the Wisconsin authorities, or for that matter, those of any other State, really want to see women trained to the old-fashioned housewifely duties, instead of tacking those duties on as an elective course in a university with the mistaken idea that the college will sanctify them, they had better reverse the process and make a knowledge of house-keeping a requisite for matriculation. Perhaps the general standard of housewifery might not be advanced, but the number of Hooligans who crowd into the colleges and universities would be sensibly diminished, and those who did persevere to the end would deserve all they could gain. The present tendency of college education is to encourage girls to turn their attention in any other direction than that of home-making, but it does not follow as a converse that because they do not want to sweep and dust, cook and mend, therefore they are capable of doing the other things which they consider more elevating.

The Mutilation of Literature

And now the pedagogical journals have begun protesting against the paraphrasing of good literature in order that babies may be stuffed, like Strasburg geese, on matter which their minds cannot digest. Poor infants who did not know why they were dragged from play to be shut up in a strange room for the greater part of the day, and who were very sure they did not want to stay there, and whose comprehension did not rise above "This little pig went to market," had "Hiawatha" made over for them and "Evangeline" cut into slices. They had the story of Robinson Crusoe re-told, though half of them imagined he was some man who lived round the corner, and not anything like so interesting as "Little Boy Blue." "Gulliver's Travels" and "The Swiss Family Robinson" have been done into baby-talk, and some kind soul expurgated Dickens and picked out all the references to children, to be segregated into a "Little Folks' Library." This species of vandalism has been carried on for a generation, not only unchecked, but with the highest approval of those who have been supposed to know. Now the harvest is ripe and it is time to gather the sheaves. Behold, those children who have been brought up on the bread-and-milk literature have stopped short just where they were left. They have imagined that the little snacks and tastes they have been vouchsafed were solid products, and have gone on all their lives thinking they had read books they have only heard about. Instead of opening up wide vistas, the effect has been to close doors. And while this protest against the paraphrasing of classics is being made, it is a good time to speak another word on the subject of juvenile books in general. They multiply as the sands of the sea, but to what end? A really good juvenile is a veritable godsend, and as rare as a Kohinoor, but namby-pamby, slangy, trashy productions follow each other in an endless procession, and children read them very largely because they know no better. The kindergartening of genuine literature has had the effect of weakening understanding to such an extent that boys and girls do not seem to outgrow their Mother Goose any more. A healthy-minded child is as ready for Scott, or Dickens, or Shakespeare, or Hawthorne, or any other author as he is for a paraphrase, and he will be vastly better employed in reading the original than in wasting time over what some bungler thinks the author should have written. What if there are words new to his understanding? To what end is the multiplication of dictionaries if he cannot look up meanings? Suppose the forms of language have changed? By and by, the boys and girls who have been carefully guided away from the constructions of Hawthorne and Charles Lamb will be made to memorize stanzas of Chaucer for no other purpose than to emphasize that very thing. With reasonable care in guiding the taste of children in the right direction they may be safely left to themselves in the matter of their reading. Keep objectionable books out of their reach, do not discuss them in their presence, have an eye to what they bring from the library, and buy for them, not juveniles, nor "supplementary readers," but genuinely good literature such as they will want to read all their lives. There is no harm done if the youngsters do not exhaust a book on its first reading. On the contrary, so much the better, for then there is an incentive to a second and third reading, and right here is the great fault of the average juvenile and the whole output of juvenilized classics: they are prepared on the supposition that the same road is never to be traveled again, so it is well to pluck every flower, fill every pool and fish out every brook.

"Helen Kellar Day"

October eighteenth has been set apart at the St. Louis exposition for "Helen Kellar Day." Now, will somebody kindly enlighten us as to the whys and wherefores? Haven't we had just about enough of Helen Kellar in every possible aspect of her case? We are all ready to admit that she was singularly afflicted, and that despite her handicaps she has succeeded in acquiring an excellent education, but it is also worth while to pay some little attention to the extraordinary facilities accorded her. For how many years, now, has this girl, as child, maiden and young woman, been accorded every possible advantage? She has not only had nothing else in the world to do but absorb book-lore, but she has had constantly with her, day and night, in season and out, a zealous instructor, and in the whole course of her life she has probably never once been told to "run away and don't bother," or chided for her questionings. All the ability that could be brought to bear has been directed to perfecting this one specimen. Now, let us ask, to what end? Are other blind or mute children receiving the same, or even approximate opportunities, or has Helen Kellar been exalted to the position occupied in old-fashioned schools by the "brag-scholar," who could always be depended on to make a creditable showing when the "committee men" came on their annual visit, and so, given the bulk of attention and all the chance there was to "show off?" We have heard endless accounts of the special typewriters made for this Kellar child, her bicycles, and everything else. Now, let us hear a little of what is to be had for other unfortunates. We know she has been taken here, there and elsewhere, to visit literary lights and artists; books have been written about her and she has written books about herself, and now she appears to have become a sort of cross between a fetch like the Liberty Bell and a freak of the circus side-show, to be carted round the country and put on exhibition. Is it not about time to consider the very obvious fact that the very limitations of this child have proved her strongholds? While other children of her age have been set about household tasks, Helen Kellar has been encouraged in every direction. To the non-afflicted, birds and bees and flowers and clouds proved more alluring than the wriggly black lines of dots and crooks, and the little minds wandered afield from school tasks, but there have been no such allurements to the Kellar child, and where every step of progress she made was daily heralded to the world, and praise not withheld from her, many another as much in need of an encouraging word has been derided for stupidity and laziness. It is fair to believe that any child not feeble-minded, given the same opportunities and the same encouragement, and cut off in the same way from distractions, would have made approximately the same progress in one direction. Let us hear less of Helen Kellar as an individual, and more of what has been learned through the extraordinary fostering she has received, for general application to the unfortunately afflicted as a whole.

The Apathetic Democracy

BY THEODORE BONNET.

There appears to be something the matter with the Democracy of California. It seems to be suffering from an attack of that tired feeling. It is languid and apathetic. It needs a tonic; something to revive its drooping spirits. Nobody is whooping it up for the Democracy of California. A ratification meeting was held some weeks ago, but it was not the real thing. There was considerable four-flushing on that inauspicious occasion. Since then we have had a Democratic State Convention, and nominated Presidential electors, but the campaign is dragging hopelessly. Only three of the Presidential electors are men of State-wide reputation. The others are political nonentities unknown beyond the confines of the counties from which they hail. The newspapers are discussing Republican politics and paying no attention to the affairs of the Californian Democracy.

There is something radically wrong. It cannot be said that Democrats no longer take any interest in party affairs, for we have lately witnessed several interesting contests for control of the organization. But the condition of affairs is such as almost to justify the suspicion that the party is the victim of a conspiracy in furtherance of Republican interests. At any rate it is almost incredible that the party could have retrograded into such a state of hopeless inefficiency without the treasonable connivance of men in control of its machinery. Of course there is discord in the party, but harmony is unusual among the aggressive exponents of Jeffersonian principles. Jangling dissonance does not superinduce apathy. If the men engaged in shaping the destinies of the Californian Democracy were actuated by patriotic motives; if they were not dominated by a spirit of vindictiveness; if the triumph of principles rather than of selfish interests was the object of their activity, there would be no lack of enthusiasm in this campaign.

The Republican press of San Francisco has most industriously and successfully promoted discord in the Democratic party. It has appealed cunningly to the prejudices of the enemies of William R. Hearst and the Examiner; and the enemies of that paper and its proprietor are quite numerous, but so are the enemies of every other newspaper and newspaper proprietor in San Francisco. Every well regulated newspaper practices the gentle art of making enemies, and newspapers in this city are so addicted to the habit of befouling the nest journalistic that our metropolitan journals are pretty generally reprobated. The people have a retentive memory for newspaper sins, and are quick to forget the virtues of newspapers and their glorious achievements. In pursuance of the local journalistic policy of giving aid and comfort to the enemies of your contemporaries, the Republican papers have arrayed a powerful element of the Democratic party against the Examiner. By way of pretext they have urged their profound interest in the public welfare. According to their representations William R. Hearst has sinister designs on the city government and on the Democratic party of the State. They want honest administration of municipal affairs but they never explain why they do not seek to obtain it through the machinery of their own party. The self-implied virtues of these sacrosanct papers are truly impressive, and the wonder of it all is that they exercise a great deal of influence despite the thinness of the veneer that coats their pretense of sincerity. Never do they interpret the significance of the ready ear given to their appeals. Far be it from them to appreciate the fact that the ready ear is the appendage of a scoffing public, eager for gossip that reflects discredit on a newspaper. San Francisco's big dailies are all tarred with the same brush in the opinion of their readers.

At present the Examiner happens to be the most vulnerable of the dailies, because its proprietor has been rainbow chasing more recently than his contemporaries. His presumption is fresher in the public mind. There is no doubt that at present the political influence of the Examiner is insignificant; that is, if measured by its capacity for affirmative achievement. It is considerable if measured by the opposition it is capable of arousing against a cause by its espousal thereof. Mr. Hearst's activity as a promoter of industrial disturbances, and his coercive methods for the compassing of his political ambition, played havoc with the prestige of his paper, and it will have to live down the ill repute of its recent past before it can again command the sentiment of this community.

The recent reorganization movement was understood to be a Hearst project and as a consequence it met with disaster. Behind it was a strong sentiment against the methods of McNab and Phelan; methods by which men of independent spirit and brains have been forced into the background to make room for truckling mediocrities. The reorganizers were glad to accept the backing of the Examiner, believing that as that paper had put the control of the organization into the hands of McNab and Phelan it could also deprive them of it. They did not reckon with the enemies Hearst had made. The combination bore the Hearst imprint and it went down to defeat, while the Republican editors made the welkin ring with their glad notes wild. And Phelan and McNab, who were vested with political power by the Examiner in the days when they were masquerading as sincere, unselfish exponents of good government, have retained their grip on the party machine. They kindly served as instruments in the hands of the Republican editors for the swatting of Hearst and his paper, and it appears that the principal sufferer is the Democratic party of California. There was no lack of enthusiasm in the days when the Examiner was whooping it up for the Democracy and smashing the G. O. P. Of course if Mr. Hearst were a good loyal Democrat he would be whooping it up as of yore and contributing to the campaign fund one dollar of his own money for every dollar that came from any other source. If he still had the interests of the taxpayers of San Francisco at heart he would be trying to repeat his great and notable triumphs over official corruption, but Willie is human and like all of us he has to nurse his sores occasionally. Meanwhile, unfortunately, Mr. Phelan is away on pleasure bent, blithely expectant of the reaction of public sentiment, and Democratic principles are languishing in California.

Vanity of Vanities

BY HARRY COWELL.

Suns blaze into being and again are not. Like men, they have their little day and then the place that knew them knows them no more. "The fleeting systems lapse like foam," their mortality suspended but a trifle longer than that of such ephemera as Homer and Shakespeare who pass in the twinkling of a planet's eye. Out of a darker, more mysterious womb they come, and go into a darker, more indeterminate grave — that is all. The silence and solitude that surround their life are more appalling, it may be, than the silence and solitude that surround the life of man — that is all. Silence; then speech more or less articulate; and again silence. Darkness; a broken ray of light, almost beautiful; and darkness. The before-birth is —? the after-death is —? Time snuffs out like a candle flickering star after flickering star. And on this earth of ours — a bubble blown for pastime by some baby god — Nature with a capital, as we are pleased to call our IGNORANCE, spawns men in insufferable millions, and furnishes the poet and the lady of his dreams with kidneys and liver, and even makes love subject to the state of these unpleasantly prosaic organs. What a fretting and a fuming our sublimest tragedies must seem in the sight of Time and Space! With pen, brush, or chisel, the greatest among us essay to cheat Death. O, futility of futilities! Death has but to wait. Some of us know vulgarity for worse than a vice and would fain spend our second nobly, with dignity. Dignity! Such big words in the momentary mouths of us children set all the stars a-smiling. Smile on, O stars, but remember, you are but children of a larger growth; you, too, like man, have a long home to go to, and, unlike man, no mourners. Bravely, a few of us look facts in the face, defy Circumstance, and make our boasts aloud. By the time the incoming winds have borne them to the far-off ears of Fate, our boasts are but as the whinings of puppies whose days are as yet less than nine. We do a little heroic deed or commit a little heinous crime, and make a fuss about it; whereat the "great Aristophanes of heaven" laughs for an infinitesimal fraction of infinity. Insects of an hour we fall in love, and fret over the ephemeral emotion; and let Death but show himself in our midst, and what a shameful noise we make! When the winds of Time shall have blown away forever the foam of our solar system, a common oblivion, I take it, shall cover Socrates and Nero, Napoleon and the Maid of Orleans, you, reader, and me. The life of a Goethe even, multiplicand of that uncertain quantity, man's memory, how insignificant, how brief, a day it is between what night and what night!

"What profit hath man for all his labor wherein he laboreth under the sun?" That the world is all desire — asleep in the stone, a-dream in the brute, awake in man — that all desire is pain and the satisfaction thereof but surcease from pain; there is the root of pessimism, most evil of all philosophies. One thing certain: the forces that have effected the most astonishing changes upon the face of this passing planet are the social forces, the desires and wants of man. And what is man but a huge hunger, a vast aggregate of appetites, body and soul of him an incongruous group of desires? Now devil, now divinity, Desire, mysteriously dynamic, makes the wee world of man go round. Moved by his many wants (they are almost infinite, as we say) each one seeking his own satisfaction, man works with hand and brain, and around him on all sides wonders arise — great trains go steaming over the land and great ships over the sea.

For the furtherance of function in an organism, feeling came into being — at the bidding of Nature, so to speak, who, it seems, has a care for function; but in "the long elapse of time," feeling came to be to the organism endowed with it, not a means to an end, but the very end of ends. Today the highest organism, man, is up betimes in the morning and after feeling. As for function in itself, he is indifferent to that, puts it in charge of Nature, leaves it to cherishing chance.

We ephemera would a feast for each of our ten thousand hungers. Fate invites us to this "little affair" of hers or to that. Eagerly we accept, and boors that we are, overeat and are sated. Well for us that at times the grim humorist treats us as did Timon of Athens his false friends, and the dish set before us causes us to ask ourselves, "Have we been true to our Destiny?" Better hunger than satiety; for imagination has a larder for Lucullus, and there are tables laid in castles in Spain fit for the most princely of epicures. Many a man has lived long on little but hope and yet fared sumptuously every day.

Ennui, lord of dreary days and dread nights, satiety of the whole being, lack of appetite for life itself — this is frequently the end of the moneyed. Too often possession of the means of satisfying desires proves to be the destruction of desire in general. The blases live, as Huxley says, "only to escape the bore of dying." They cannot even long for a Nirvana where longing is no more, or be hungry for a hunger.

The fierce craving for fame is not insatiable, as those who have had a taste of it will testify; and the vainest of stomachs has been known to reject flattery. The desire of beauty, the love of art for art's sake — undoubtedly of the divine order of desires — may lead to surfeit, to where doing and delight and overdoing and disgust begin. At times even beauty bores us and art becomes a weariness of the flesh.

But it is in love that the problem of satiety assumes tragic proportions. Like many another, the blind boy believes himself to be of an infinite appetite, but his eyes are bigger than his belly — to make use of a homely, happy phrase wherewith in my young days my old nurse was wont to correct me. The ravenous little fellow is apt to fall sick on the least provocation, and when the dearest diet no longer tempts him there's the very devil to pay and no mistake. "Keep him on short rations," is the heartless admonishment of some of those who proverbially rush in where angels fear most to tread, "and he will grow apace, remain in ruddy health, and see many goodly days." "Take a fool's advice," say others; "let the boy help himself. If it be written above that he die young, die young he will." My advice? On the delicate matter Wisdom has not a word to say; she is listening, silent, in her ears the "vanity of vanities, all is vanity," of the preacher of old; in her ears the sound of loose earth falling on a wooden lid and the refrain of a modern poet's Ballad of Burdens, "This is the end of every man's desire."

Our Municipal Clowns

BY THEODORE BONNET.

Perhaps in the years to come the picturesque imbecility and stupendous effrontery of Mayor Schmitz and his official satellites will be embalmed in song and story. No doubt posterity will derive much pleasure from being regaled with the traditions of this unique Administration, even as we now enjoy the historic tid-bits handed down from the time of Mayor Kalloch and his sand-lot cohorts. But the history of Kalloch's administration is a tame and commonplace story in comparison with that of the ascendancy of the Schmitz-Ruef hoodlum oligarchy. Nothing quite so breezy and unconventional in municipal government as that which San Francisco is now experiencing is to be found anywhere outside the domain of opera-bouffe. But the humor of it does not appeal to contemporary risibles. It is as difficult for us to smile as it was for the Christians whose bodies illuminated the streets of Rome in a certain memorable period of the world's history, to which incident one D. M. Delmas, of prophetic vision, referred when protesting in vain against the election of a certain disguised fiddler to the Mayoralty of this city. It was thought that Mr. Delmas was availing himself of oratorical license when, in the ecstasy of rhetorical enthusiasm, he limned with the pigment of his rich vocabulary a picture of San Francisco burning to the music of a modern Nero. But who that now contemplates this wide-open town, that sees officials prostituting their sacred trusts for the furtherance of their private interests, and that witnesses such manifestations of official ignorance and folly as that given by the members of the Board of Public Works when they erected barricades on a public thoroughfare to proclaim the arrogant vindictiveness that actuates them, will say that D. M. Delmas had not a proper conception of the fate in store for this community?

It is the habit of fools to rush in where angels fear to tread; it is the misfortune of the knave that he is inclined to confound his own viewpoint with that of others; both fools and knaves compass their own downfall by follies for which the wise and upright have an inherent aversion. Schmitz's thrifty fool commissioners have done many things to forfeit the respect and confidence of this community, but their imbecility was never adequately exploited until they voluntarily stood on their heads to attract attention.

Corruption in public office is not uncommon; the most enlightened communities have suffered from it, but to be convicted of shrieking imbecility is humiliating indeed. It is not unfair to assume that a city ruled by fools is a city of fools. The fool holds sway in San Francisco today, for none but a fatuous fathead would have given countenance to the rearing of barricades on a public thoroughfare, and inscribing them with the silly tale of a quarrel in the city's official family.

In ordinary circumstances the incident might have been regarded as a contribution to the gayety of a frivolous, devil-may-care, wide-open town, but at the inauspicious time at which it was sprung none but a tenderloin politician could regard it as a joke. Civic pride in San Francisco has had many jolts but it is not yet dead. It revolts at the stupidity that advertised itself as official, to the amazement of many thousands of visitors.

When the Knights Templar were invited to hold their Triennial Conclave in San Francisco it was civic pride that dictated the invitation. It was known that the Conclave would attract many thousands of people, and we expected to impress them most favorably not only with the topographical charms of the city, and its many distinguished natural characteristics, but also with the progressive spirit and intelligence of its citizens. We hoped to allure them, too, to recruit from their ranks the population of the city. How unfortunate that while we were striking our most engaging attitude, Mayor Schmitz's commissioners should begin their grand and lofty tumbling along the highway, obsessed with the delusion that the time was opportune for the coining of a little political capital. The whole city chorused "Scat!" It was too late; our opera-bouffe government had shown its hand.

I do not know who is to blame for the dilapidated condition of Market street between Grant avenue and Stockton street. I have not any more confidence in demagogic reformers than in official grafters. When both are bidding for popular acclaim the best interests of the people are not likely to be subserved.

Then as Now

BY MABEL PORTER PITTS.

Long, long ago when butterflies
Could converse hold, and let men know
Their wants, they caught the traits of men
As I will undertake to show.

Two butterflies were winging past
King Solomon's temple, grand and vast;
From touch of wing and foolish flutter
'Twas plain unto the most benighted
Their troth had just that day been plighted.

Like maid perplex when blushes come,
My Lady Butterfly was dumb,
But, bursting with his own importance,
My great Lord Butterfly, loquacious,
Spoke of himself in way audacious.

"You see yon temple, dear," he said;
She answered, "Yes," by nod of head;
"Well, with my wing, all down encovered,
I easily those pillars, polished,
Could tumble at your feet, demolished."

This bold remark was overheard
By Solomon; "Upon my word,
Who ever knew such braggart boasting?"
Then calling him aside demanded
Why he should lie thus open-handed.

Returning to his mate at last,
She, woman-like, asked what had passed;
And he, man-like, to stop at nothing
So, with eclat, he might come through it,
Replied, "He asked me not to do it."

Because Blanche Bates Is There

It is singular how trivial coincidences are sometimes magnified until they seem to present phenomena of tremendous significance. Richard Hotaling, millionaire, bachelor and clubman, started for St. Louis the other day, and it was immediately remarked that Blanche Bates was playing Yo San in that city. A World's Fair is the principal attraction in St. Louis at present, and people are flocking to it from all parts of the country, but Dick Hotaling's friends thought only of his trip there being coincident with Blanche Bates's theatrical engagement. Dame Grundy does not hesitate to declare that the inspiration of the Hotaling journey is the talented Californian actress, and she has gone so far as to give currency to the rumor that their engagement will soon be announced. I earnestly hope that she knows what she is talking about, for I should hate to believe that Dick Hotaling was an irredeemable bachelor. No doubt many people will smile incredulously over the rumor, believing as they do that Blanche Bates is wedded to her art. They will recall that she gave matrimony a trial, but found it wearisome and quickly wandered back to her profession. Perhaps if she had been congenially mated the allurements of the stage would not have been so potent. Since that marriage she has risen to the topmost rung of the professional ladder, and she has sounded all the depths of a histrionic career. Who knows but that she has been sated with its diversions and its glamour, and would prefer the comforts of a luxurious home to the inconveniences and makeshifts that are encountered along the theatrical highway by the most prosperous and successful of mummers?

Her Interesting Career

Blanche Bates is too sensible a woman to be caught irretrievably by the footlights' glare. She has a fondness for the social whirl, and every chance she gets she partakes of its pleasures. And every chance Dick Hotaling gets he ministers to her tastes. She has frequently been a guest under chaperonage at his suburban home, and during her periodical visits to this city they have seen a great deal of each other. Blanche Bates is as fascinating off as on the stage, and she has many friends in local society, especially in the Bohemian element. She is a woman of culture and nimble mind, and though she always had a predilection for the stage she was trained for a pedagogical career. She graduated from the Normal School among the first three of a very large class, and on her certificate was elected a teacher in the School Department. She taught in one of the schools for awhile, and at the same time was a member of St. Paul's church choir, and taught in the Sunday-school of the same church. But her thoughts were ever of the stage, and I have heard that when she was a school teacher she was forever displaying her histrionic talent. During the luncheon hour it was her delight to entertain the other teachers by letting down her hair and reciting "The Maniac." She made her debut in a small part and she made rapid strides in the profession, but she did not attract much attention until she returned to the stage after her brief matrimonial career. Though no explanation was ever given of her desertion of her husband, Lieutenant Davis, it has been understood that her proud and independent spirit rebelled against the snobbishness encountered at the Presidio.

How Hotaling Made a Million

Dick Hotaling is one of the wits of the Bohemian Club and one of the brightest and most successful of San Francisco's young business men. He is the manager of the estate of his father, A. P. Hotaling, and he is the treasurer of the Electric Light and Power Company which John Martin promoted, and which is in control of all the big electric plants in the central and northern part of the State. This corporation has had a phenomenal growth and it is rapidly becoming one of the most important concerns in the State. I have heard that Hotaling has made over a million dollars out of it already, and that everybody connected with it has become rich in a few years. The promoter, John Martin, did not have a cent in the world ten years ago. He made his start by securing an option on a cargo of damaged coal. His profits on the sale of it amounted to six thousand dollars, and he immediately began operations on a large scale. His greatest achievement as a Captain of Industry was the transmission of electric power from the Yuba river to this city, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, a feat that Engineer Grunsky pronounced impossible a few years ago. The industries growing out of Martin's development of electric power on this coast are in a more advanced stage than those of any other part of the country. It was under Martin's guiding hand that the improvements to the North Shore road were made. He owns the Tamalpais railroad, and he is projecting new enterprises every day, and occasionally he finds time to pick up some valuable paintings in Europe, one of which was recently rejected by a fastidious and highly critical Park Commissioner.

"I wonder what becomes of the immense revenue of this city?"

"You must be a reformer looking for evidence on which to send somebody to jail."

Ruef's Nemesis

When Charley Shortridge, orator, philosopher and statesman, announced last week that he purposed disinfecting the Augean stables in which the Republican cattle are housed, it was predicted that he would be "pulled down." But Charley is still pursuing the even tenor of his flamboyant way, gathering energy and enthusiasm and receiving encouragement as he goes. His professions of sincerity and earnestness seem to be of the blown-in-the-bottle variety. His manner is that of a man who has been in solemn executive session with himself, and who has adopted a full set of iron-clad resolutions prescribing his rules of conduct. He is apparently convinced that public sentiment is pleading to be aroused against Ruef domination, and that there is in him the qualities of leadership; that he is equipped mentally, physically and magnetically for just such an emergency. "I have had riches," said Shortridge, "and I have had honors, but all are dross. I am now intent upon doing good for others. I am happier now than when I was wealthy. Every cloud has a silver lining for me because I turn the clouds inside out and expose the lining. I am going to constitute myself the champion of the plain people. No program will suit me hereafter unless I've made it myself or helped make it, and I don't want any programs made in back-rooms. I'm for clean politics and against Ruef methods. I believe the people of this city are opposed to the greed of small, sordid, coarse bosses, and I'm going to array them on the side of honesty. Just buy a ticket on me and you won't lose."

Charley's Epigram

At a banquet one night, last week, Charley Shortridge was called upon to discuss epigrams, and just as he arose a wounded bee made its appearance on a flower in front of him. Pointing to the bee Shortridge remarked:

"An epigram is a bee—a little thing;
Just a buzz, some honey and a sting."

A stenographer took down the lines, and they were quoted the next day in the dailies. They have been reprinted in scores of papers since, and editors have eulogized Shortridge for his cleverness. And now it devolves on me to point out the joke. I do so at the request of Mr. Shortridge, who says that he does not wish to be known as a plagiarist. "I believe," he says, "that I got those lines from Pope. I don't mind being boosted, but if I let it go I know I'll be found out. They are not mine, and I don't want to claim them. I think I've said things just as clever as that, but hereafter when I borrow from somebody else I'll hang out quotation marks big enough for everybody to see."

Another Version

I think that Mr. Shortridge is in error in believing that he obtained the lines from Pope, for they are a paraphrase of lines from Marcus Valerius Martialis, the great original punster. I do not think that Pope would have been so loose in his translation of the lines. A generally accepted translation is:

"An epigram is like a bee—a thing
Of little size, with honey and a sting."

Perhaps the other translation is Shortridge's, for Charley is a great lover of epigrams, and Martialis wrote little else. He filled fourteen books with epigrams, but many of them will not bear quoting in polite society. They were intended to initiate the votaries of virtue in the mysteries of vice.

A Non-Partisan Judiciary

Once more there is talk of a non-partisan judiciary. It is a delightful plan, that of securing judges by an agreement between the Democratic and Republican conventions to nominate only two each to fill the four impending vacancies. It is said to be an excellent scheme for the uplifting of the bench. But it is also an excellent scheme for the improvement of the law business of those two idealists of the legal profession, Mr. Abe Ruef and Mr. Gavin McNab. If each party were to nominate two judges the selections would be made by the two bosses, and the men so chosen would feel under deep obligations to them. The non-partisan plan of action is clearly a scheme to vest attorneys Ruef and McNab with the power of appointing men to the bench. While in the ordinary course of convention business, the bosses will virtually dictate the nominations, their authority will not be absolute; they will have to make some concessions, and at the polls the people will have the opportunity to discriminate against the men who are known to be most acceptable to the political lawyers. The bosses already have too much influence with the judiciary, and it would be unwise to clothe them with the authority of masters.

Wizard Von Horst

Baron von Horst is said to be the most versatile and accomplished young man in society. In addition to being a distinguished cotillion leader and hop picker he has a voice of fine quality and strums on the light guitar. In his serious moments he delves into occultism. If he ever lost his hop ranch he could make a living as an astrologer. He is an inveterate star-gazer, and entertains our society people by casting their horoscopes. Many of them look upon him as a wizard. I believe it was at the Tallants that he cast the horoscope of the late Major McClung by which he predicted that gentleman's violent death. Like the other Baron of Pastori fame, von Horst has a keen appreciation of the charms of the gentle sex and there is not a more gallant gentleman in society. But it is to be hoped that, unlike the other German nobleman, he is not, among other things, an unconscious hypnotist.

"Is he insane?"

"No; that's only the flighty look of genius in his face."

Lloyd's Star Banquet

The most expensive dinner—estimating the cost per capita—ever given in this city, was that which took place the other night at the Bohemian Club, and at which Reuben H. Lloyd was the host. The distinguished lawyer is no splurger; indeed he does not "loosen up" often though he is one of the most liberal of men. He is a man of abstemious habits, and as a consequence is reputed to be close-fisted, but his intimates have only one grievance against him—that he always insists on paying the bill. When he was Grand Master of the Masons he promised that if the Knights Templar of England attended the Conclave he would pay an official visit to London. But the proposition was not accepted. However they were represented at the Conclave this week and Lloyd resolved to "make good." Hence the dinner, which was in honor of the English visitors. The decorations alone are said to have cost six thousand dollars, and the viands and wines were of the most costly variety. The table was covered with ivy leaves and overhead was a tent-like effect done entirely in grape leaves, and bunches of grapes which hung from the trellis. Electric lights were hung behind the fruit, shedding a soft light on the beautiful scene.

Philanthropist McEnerney

It seems as though "Aisy comes, aisy goes," is becoming a maxim of the plutocrats of the local bar. That other eminent barrister, Garret McEnerney, who shared with Mr. Lloyd some of the plethoric drippings of the Fair estate, turned philanthropist the other day. He has several faithful clerks in his office and he presented each with transportation to the World's Fair and money for expenses while there. Mr. McEnerney is not quite so rich as Mr. Lloyd, and though he has never pulled off any flashlight banquets he is an habitual dinner host. He frequently wines and dines his rich clients just to show them that there is no hard feeling. But unlike millionaire Pillsbury he still deigns to take probate cases which involve fees of less than a paltry ten thousand. However he hopes to get into the Pillsbury class.

Pierson and the Fair Will

The first of the Fair attorneys to part with his fees in bulk was William M. Pierson, who died a few days ago. He was one of the most cultured members of the local bar, to which he was admitted before attaining his majority, his admission having been secured by a special act of the Legislature. It was by Pierson that the famous trust will of James G. Fair was drawn. W. S. Goodfellow was Fair's attorney, but he thought that he could better defend the will in the event of an attack, if it were drawn by another; so he advised the millionaire to have the will drawn by Pierson. The precaution proved futile. It enabled Pierson, however, to get a big fee out of the estate.

He Had No Use For Doctors

Pierson's death was caused by a cancer of the throat brought on by excessive smoking. He had a great aversion to doctors and a great dread of death. Perhaps he regarded doctors and death as synonymous. At any rate, whenever he had a stomach-ache he gave himself up for lost, yet refused all medical attendance. If his family called in a medical man to see him he left the house, no matter what his condition, and refused even to have his case diagnosed. Toward the end he did consent to see a doctor, but his trouble was then beyond remedy. Mr. Pearson had retired from the active practice of the law with more than a competency. He was but sixty-three years old.

The De Young Vaudeville

The two hundred guests of the De Youngs on the occasion of the out-of-door vaudeville performance at Meadowlands, their country home in San Rafael, enjoyed a rare treat. The grounds were aglow with electric lights, and the program was given with complete stage properties and scenery. The performers were their own jokesmiths, and wrote verses for local application to the melodies of the latest New York and London musical comedies. Constance De Young made a great hit with her "Six and Carry Two" from "Toyland." Among other problems propounded by her was this one, which caused Dick Hotaling, who had a front row seat, to blush:

"If Dick Hotaling had a wife, ten children and a cat,
And looked for seven hours to find a thirteen dollar flat—"

All of which was worked out by putting down "six and carrying two."

Mrs. John D. Spreckels Jr. was quite French in her impersonations of Anna Held, and she gave evidence of versatility in a scene from "Carrots." Miss Ethyl Hager astonished the natives with her singing and dancing in "Johnny, I'll Take You." Miss Lillian Brechemin sang "Liza Ann" from "The Orchid," London's latest. Mrs. Mark L. Gerstle was a breezy interlocutor in the olio.

Lillian Brechemin, who sang at the De Young vaudeville, is already as popular in local society as she was in Manila, where she was made much of by the army and navy sets. Miss Brechemin attended the Girls' High school in San Francisco, when her mother was the musical instructor of that institution of learning. Her father is an army surgeon and before going to the Philippines was stationed at the Presidio. Some time since he was ordered back here again. Mrs. Brechemin is a very charming singer, and was formerly a member of one of the Episcopal church choirs here.

She's a Venus

Edith Simpson, who is considered by connoisseurs in beauty to be the nearest to Venus of any local society girl, is no relation to Agnes Simpson Partridge, as many fancy. The latter, however, is also a great beauty. Edith Simpson is a girl of great independence of spirit. She believes in individual styles of dress, and adheres to the skin-tight sleeve, refusing to swath her shapely arms in the baggy article now in vogue. She was educated at a fashionable New York school, and still enjoys study. At every opportunity she attends the lectures at Berkeley. She has traveled a great deal in the Orient and other quarters of the globe, and is considered very clever. At one time she was reported engaged to one of the Sewells of Maine, but the report proved groundless.

On the Water Wagon

A few years ago there was not a more convivial set of men in this part of the world than the Knights Templar. When the commanderies held their receptions they always served punch or wine to their guests. But about three years ago a change was made in the character of the liquid refreshments served, and lemonade and mineral water took the place of the more hilarity-promoting fluids. The reason of this was that the high powers of the order came to the conclusion that it was not consistent with their vows as Templars to imbibe passionate liquids, and thereafter all intoxicating liquors were tabu. One of the orders issued for the Knights during the present convocation was:

"No Knight Templar in full or fatigue uniform is allowed to enter a saloon or public drinking place."

A special notice of this standing rule of the Grand Commandery of California was sent to all commanderies within this jurisdiction.

Sparingly Appropriate

A striking innovation was introduced at a Jewish wedding that took place in Lyric hall last Saturday night. The hall had been engaged as the headquarters of a Knight Templar commandery, and had been appropriately decorated. Just as the marriage ceremony was about to begin, Will Greenbaum, the manager of the hall, remarked that it was a sombre scene owing to the fact that only a few lights had been turned on. He rebuked the janitor and ordered him to throw a little more light on the ceremony. The janitor rushed to the switch-board just as the good Rabbi was in the act of performing the solemn and impressive ceremony, and giving the wrong crank a twist lighted up the scene with a beautiful cross suspended in mid-air over the heads of the principals.

Mizner in Trade

Addison Mizner, the pet of our Four Hundred, has taken to trade, according to the very latest report of the doings of that bright and unconventional young man. It is hard to credit the story, for Addie is of the highly artistic temperament, and gets along very well without capital. However, while in Guatemala, it is said, he was surprised to learn that much beautiful, old-fashioned furniture, and rare brocades that had been used for vestments by priests, could be had at bargain prices. He decided to secure a stock of goods, ship it to New York, and sell it to connoisseurs and society people. His friends predict that he will return to San Francisco with a bulging wallet.

"Miss Sereleaf looks like a very sick woman."

"Yes, a fellow with a half-jag proposed to her some months ago, and she has had nervous prostration ever since."

Fashion at Bohemia's Concert

It was a very fashionable crowd which gathered at the Bohemian Club concert last week. Outside the Tivoli, the throng resembled a fashionable tea crowd. New autumn gowns and hats were out in force. The concert was a great success financially as well as socially. The expenses were about eight hundred dollars, and as the boxes were sold at the fancy price of a hundred dollars apiece, they just paid the expenses, leaving the money received for the seats to be net gain. Between three and four thousand dollars were taken in. This money is to be devoted to the fund for the maintenance of the grove. The cors Anglais, a very rare instrument, seldom heard here, was introduced by Joseph Redding in his music, but it was not heard to the best advantage, as the player of it weakened at the end of his solo passage and the tone sagged, so to speak. Throughout the afternoon the talk was of the wonderful orchestration of McCoy, whose music was undoubtedly the best. The fine reading of Dick Hotaling also came in for its share of praise. He was very simple and untheatric but read with much feeling. Especially fine was the invocation to Apollo and the Indian Legend, both of them in exceedingly musical prose. Joe Redding and Harry Melvin, veterans that they are, distinguished themselves by being nervous. There is some talk of repeating the concert in the Greek theatre at Berkeley.

"The Amender"

A gentleman named Zion has undertaken to lead the hosts of municipal employes out of the depths of servitude. He has organized a movement for the amendment of the charter for the purpose of ameliorating the condition of the down-trodden civil service workers. He has raised a cry for shorter hours. He thinks that civil service employes should work not more than five hours a day. In view of the fact that some people regard civil service, as practiced at the City Hall, as a delusion and a fake, I should think that some good, kind friend would advise Mr. Zion to leave well enough alone. The energetic Zion is a Stanford man who acquired the agitation habit at college. He also acquired, while there, the sobriquet, "The Amender," because of his persistent efforts to change the rules of the student body. He is a student of that branch of sociology which inculcates the doctrine of self-betterment.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Deering are at Rowardennan. Others enjoying the late season there are W. H. Alford, the Williamsons of Burlingame, George Bent and Miss Bent of Los Angeles.

Her Fifth Divorce

For the fifth time in her career Grace Snell-Coffin-Walker-Coffin-Layman of Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco, has applied for a divorce. She asks for the decree on the ground of desertion. Her present husband, Mr. Perkins Layman, is clerk of the Van Nuys hotel. He parted from his wife shortly after their honeymoon was over. Rumor in Los Angeles credits Mrs. Layman with being as optimistic as ever, and it is thought that the announcement of her engagement to another resident of Los Angeles will be announced in the near future. Frank Nixon Coffin, one of the many husbands of the lady, is soon to marry Miss Harriet Howe, daughter of Mrs. Percy MacMahon of Arizona and Los Angeles. The nuptials will be solemnized on the evening of October fifth in Los Angeles.

J. D. Phelan was to have sailed for home on September seventh, so if he carried out his plans he will shortly be in San Francisco. He heard "Parsifal" at Bayreuth, saw Barbour Lathrop at Carlsbad, Orrin Peck at Marienbad and Nat Goodwin at Trouville, where he spent some time.

A Perennial Bloom

When one stops to consider that Helen was over fifty when Paris carried her away from Menelaus, and that Cleopatra was somewhere around forty when she captivated Mark Antony, why should we marvel at the marriage of Fay Templeton with a young man of twenty-seven? The sweet-voiced prima donna gave a birthday party a week or so ago, when she gave her age as thirty-seven, but she probably doctored ten years for the sake of euphony. There are only a few people left who remember Fay Templeton's debut in New York. She was eight then, but had been four years on the stage in "the provinces." In New York she appeared as Puck in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." I have heard an old actor tell of little Fay's appearance in a Southern city. Her parents were of the profession, and after they had finished their production of "East Lynne," the curtain rang up again, revealing a tiny tot in gold slippers, her bashful face hidden in her mother's skirts. But the orchestra struck up "Up in a Balloon, Boys," and the tot forsook her mother's skirts and began to sing. That was Fay Templeton's first real stage hit. Later on, when she was "grown up," she sang in comic opera, and then E. E. Rice saw her and gave her the part of Gabriel in "Evangeline." For one hundred nights Fay Templeton was the belle of the New York stage. She is a wonderfully talented woman with a sweet and sympathetic voice, and she has a genuine gift for composition. That tender little coon ditty, "Ah want you, mah honey, yes I do," was written by Fay Templeton, who introduced it in "Excelsior Jr." She and Willie Collier and Lillian Russell were all members of the Weber and Field combination that appeared on Broadway in the skits we later saw at Fischer's with Kolb and Dill in the Weber-Field roles. The last time Fay was in San Francisco was with Charley Reed and Willie Collier in "Miss McGinty," when she introduced her imitation of Carmencita.

Her Loves and Marriages

Fay Templeton was the first wife of Billy West, the minstrel, and Charles Erin Verner, the Irish actor-singer, was also at one time her husband. The great romance of her career centred about Howell Osborne, the son of a plutocratic New York broker. It was when Fay was acting Gabriel in "Evangeline" that she attracted young Osborne's admiration. He was one of the many who flocked about the beautiful girl, showering flowers and diamonds upon her, but he was the only one of her admirers whom she seemed to favor. All at once she left the stage and the report went about that she had married Osborne. They went abroad, and gossip pursued them. Some said they were married; some that they were not. A provision in the will of Osborne's parents was that if he married an actress he would forfeit a large fortune, and it was supposed that this was the reason of all the secrecy. But Osborne died, and Fay Templeton announced that they had been married all along. She was passionately in love with him, and he with her, and their life in Paris was one long honeymoon. A few years ago Willie Carpenter Camp, the Chicago clubman, was infatuated with the actress, and though many years her junior it was said that he wished to marry her. The latest reported fiancé of Fay Templeton is Blair Frazier, son of a Syracuse millionaire.

One of Holland's Yarns

E. M. Holland, of Kyrle Bellew's company, is one of the wits of the Lambs and Players. He has been in San Francisco several times, and is a great favorite in clubdom. He is a crack raconteur, and one of his most amusing stories is of a "one night stand" episode. As Holland tells it: "The theatre in 'one night' towns is always called by the natives the 'Operry House,' and is usually up one or more flights of stairs, the stage furnished with dim lights, and the dressing-rooms with nothing. In one of these 'operry houses' I struck once, in Southwest Missouri, our manager found but one dressing-room. It was a large apartment beneath the stage.

"Where are the other dressing-rooms?" asked our manager.

"There isn't any others," forcibly returned the local impresario.

"Well, what are we going to do?" queried our representative. "I have a large company of ladies and gentlemen and they cannot dress in this one room."

"What's the matter?" returned the other, "ain't they speakin'?"

He Didn't Want Another.

E. M. Holland is a brother of the brilliant Joseph of the same ilk, who has not visited us in some years. Joe Holland was in the cast of "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" that also numbered Emily Bancker, and the late Georgie Drew Barrymore and M. A. Kennedy. It was in that company that Margaret Craven first won her laurels in the drama. Though Joe Holland is one of the ablest comedians on the stage, he labors under a disadvantage that would seem to be a bar to success in the profession. He is deaf and it is said that he cannot hear what the other actors are saying, but has a counting system by which he never misses his cues. On his last trip to San Francisco he spent most of his spare moments at the Bohemian

Club, where he was very popular and was entertained lavishly. He tells a story on himself that illustrates how the popular man is treated in Bohemia. One day Holland, feeling tired, withdrew to a quiet corner in the club. Along came one of the members, who passed him a greeting. The actor did not catch what was said, but following out a line of reasoning, returned cordially:

"No, thanks; I've just had one."

It didn't happen to be the right answer that time, but it made a good story for the actor to tell later.

A Society Prestidigitateur

Florence Whittell was the star of the big charity affair at Uplands last Saturday. She had practiced several brand new stunts in prestidigitation, and succeeded in mystifying the crowd of fashionables fairly well. But she came in for a great deal of joshing from her intimates, who did not hesitate to comment on slips of the hand that exposed her method. Harry Holbrook has made a specialty of this form of entertainment but he is not so deft as Miss Whittell.

It Will Not Be Spectacular

After all, the wedding of Miss Kathryn Dillon and Lieutenant Winship is not to be celebrated with all the pomp and ceremony the dailies would have their friends expect. Lieutenant Winship is a Protestant and Miss Dillon is a Catholic, and owing to that difference in religion the ceremony is not to be performed in church. Consequently many of our society people, who like nothing better than a big spectacular show, will be disappointed. The nuptials will probably be celebrated during the holidays.

An Airship Wanted

The Frederick Fenwicks have taken the Samuel Knight residence in Pacific avenue for the winter. Mrs. Fenwick is probably the most popular woman in Greater San Francisco, which includes the towns of Alameda and Marin counties. Mrs. Fenwick will welcome the invention of a practical airship, which will enable her to make better time between luncheons, dinners and teas on both sides of the bay.

The Spinner's Toast Book

The new toast book of the Spinners' Club is now on sale and is a very interesting volume, composed as it is of toasts and sentiments, from the standard writers and from well-known local litterateurs as well. The book is exceedingly well gotten up, and the toasts are grouped as to sentiment, so that it is very easy to look up any subject desired. Exteriorly the book is quite artistic. The attractive cover design was made by Gordon Ross. It shows a coat of arms and crest and in the arms are quartered a champagne bottle, several beer steins and a bottle of bromo seltzer, with its delicate suggestion of "the day after."

Ready for Publication

"Uncle" George Bromley has at last finished his book, the narrative of his life which he calls "The Long Ago and the Later On." It was nearly ready for publication a year ago but only during the last month did its author become sufficiently interested in his work to add the finishing touches. It was a great undertaking for a man of eighty-six to sit down and write a book covering his life's experiences, but I have read the manuscript and can guarantee the book as one of remarkable interest. As Uncle George left school, to follow the sea, when he was thirteen, the early chapters are largely devoted to his voyages, including one to Africa, one to England at the time of Queen Victoria's coronation, running a French blockade off Los Sacrificios, whaling, and steamboating on Long Island Sound. Other chapters depict life in California in early days, with stories about some of the pioneers. The chapters on China are a valuable contribution to modern history.

Louis Robertson has been working so busily on his play for Ben Greet that it is nearly ready for presentation. The words of "Montezuma" are not equaled in beauty by any of the poetic dramas we have seen here. It is a pity Sothern has signed to appear in Shakespearean plays only, for five years. "Montezuma" is just the kind of drama that Sothern delights in, and I can think of no other actor who would deliver the noble lines with such dramatic significance. Ben Greet is to produce the play during his season in this city, and it is then, I believe, to go to Frohman.

Celtic Log-Rollers

Even in Ireland the log-rolling art is not unknown. According to Mr. Frank Hugh O'Donnell, who was a Nationalist member of Parliament in the days of Parnell's activity, it has long been practiced by the leading Celtic Revivalists. Mr. O'Donnell has taken up his literary shillelagh to rap the mazards of a few of them, and the one to whom he has devoted the most attention is Mr. W. Butler Yeats, who was recently lionized in this city by Mr. Phelan and other distinguished litterateurs. Mr. O'Donnell has written a book called "The Stage Irishman of the Pseudo-Celtic Drama." His principal grievance is that Mr. Yeats, by passages in some of his works that seem blasphemous to Catholics, has misrepresented Irishmen and Irish ideas, a statement that will no doubt prompt that pious Catholic, Mr. Phelan, to scrutinize his Yeats more closely before giving him another dinner. But the statement may be verified by reading Mr. O'Donnell's quotations. He says, furthermore, that Mr. Yeats's Celtic Past is somewhere between the Theatre Libre and the Chat Noir; a sort of witch's cauldron of aboriginal superstition and Ibsenite neo-paganism. He thinks well of Yeats as a poet, but not as a delineator of Irish character. Of the Irish National Theatre, he says, it is not Irish, it is not National and it has very amateurish claims to be a theatre. One of the leading log-rollers condemned by Mr. O'Donnell is Mr. Stephen Gwynn, who exposed the affectations of Yeats, but was converted by being made Secretary of the Irish Literary Society, after which he delivered a panegyric on the Irish National Theatre, which he had formerly attacked. George Moore is another who, according to Mr. O'Donnell, has been engaged in log-rolling.

A Matter of No Importance

Margaret Horton Potter's publishers tell us that the lady rises very early and does all her work before breakfast, between six and a quarter after seven. It will take more than that to make a recipe for successful novel writing. Margaret Horton Potter chooses that hour, but there are others who never can do anything in daylight, and do not get warmed up to their work until within a short lap of midnight. In writing or anything else, externals are the least part of it, and to get possession of the desk, pen and writing pad of the most successful authors will avail nothing if a modicum of his brains does not go with them. One author may demand absolute quiet lest anything disturb his reflections; he may follow the example of Carlyle, and send his wife to demand that the neighbors shall forbid their chickens to crow or their dogs to bark, and another may proceed, as did Jane Austen, to write in the bosom of her family, with people dropping in and chatting, and neither be disconcerted by interruptions nor disclose the nature of her occupation. Some like to withdraw themselves, and others, of which Cyrus Townsend Brady is one, can do nothing unless there is a photographer present to record his every gesture, and the only wonder is he doesn't need a phonograph as well. When, where or how work is done is of small consequence. It is the quality of the finished product that counts.

Burgess Coming Back

Gelett Burgess is threatening to come back this winter. He has been very successful in New York, and intends to rest in this city about two months before he begins work on the new book which he is to write in collaboration with Will Irwin. Mr. Burgess, I hear, has about exhausted his repertoire of eccentricities. From the stories of his latest parlor stunts, it appears that he has been repeating himself. Even a genius finds it difficult to live up to his reputation for eccentricity.

Those Letters of Jessica

The authorship of the "Jessica Letters" will shortly be made known. It is expected that this will stimulate interest in the book, which is one of the epistolary novels that enjoyed a passing vogue. The letters passed between a New York editor and his book-reviewer, but naturally, did not long remain confined to books. They are said to have constituted a genuine correspondence, and all one can say is that if this is the case, the two writers were unquestionably "a pair of patient lovers." How they ever managed to keep an engagement alive with such heavy missives—one might say missiles—passing between them is a mystery. The correspondence was published serially in the Critic, and it is safe to say that not one subscriber in ten read them. Since the serial production the correspondence has been issued in book form, and an English critic has taken occasion to remark that if American editors can spare time to engage in such bulky correspondence on slight provocation, they cannot be as hard worked as has been represented. One could much easier imagine a Philip adding to his litany an invocation, "From another letter from Jessica, O Lord, deliver me," and if there had not been a dearth of flesh and blood youths down about her habitat, she would have found it no great task to miss the mail.

When Richard Read Miriam

Miriam Michelson had done a lot of good work in journalism before she leaped into popularity with one bound with her novel, "In the Bishop's Carriage." Though many critics have condemned the book, it is the third best seller in the United States and the second best in New York, so its author can afford to snap her fingers at the carpers. Since "In the Bishop's Carriage" came out, Miss Michelson has received five orders from publishers for novels and there is scarcely a magazine that has not put in a bid for a short story from her pen. The Century Company will next month send "The Nevada Madigans" out in book form; it is now running serially in the magazine. Though the tale revolves around some very natural children, it is not a juvenile, and gives some good ideas to parents about how not to bring up their offspring. When Richard Mansfield was in San Francisco he began reading "In the Bishop's Carriage," and was so interested his eyes did not leave the story until he came to the part that lampooned his own royal highness. Then he threw the book across the room with a bang. Later, however, I am told, he took it up again, and read it to the end.

Jimmy Hamilton, who is so rarely seen about town since he took up his residence in San Mateo, entertained at luncheon at the Bohemian Club on Monday. His guests included some prominent railroad officials who are here with the Knights Templar.

Genthe and McComas in Spain

Dr. Arnold Genthe is snapping his camera in Spain. He has written to friends telling them that he has taken several of his most successful pictures in and around the Alhambra. He had a pleasant meeting with Frank McComas in Madrid. McComas has been very busy painting the dreary landscape around the Escorial. He will exhibit his paintings in Paris and London before bringing them to New York.

The Queen's Return

Mrs. Monroe Salisbury, most indefatigable of all our society leaders, is rapidly becoming herself again. She is rounding into fine fettle for the winter campaign, and there is no longer any talk of finding shoulders for her mantle. No successor need yet apply. The Queen of the Fortnightlies has established her court at the Palace, and the throne room is suggestive of a floral fiesta. How subtle is the language of flowers! In the expression of joy or sorrow their eloquence is profound, and yet it is by the spirit of the occasion that the language is interpreted. I hear that the Salisbury star is in the ascendant once more. Mr. Salisbury has been speculating very successfully.

Mrs. F. R. Dray has returned to town from Alameda, where she spent the summer with her daughter and was largely entertained at "five hundred" parties, teas and luncheons by the Alameda four hundred. She is at 1715 Broadway near Franklin, and Dr. Frank Dray is with her. Later the family will be augmented by Miss Alice Dray and her brother Arthur, who have finished their European trip, and are now visiting their sister, Mrs. Charles Culver, in Camden, Maine.

A Philanthropic Widow

Mrs. George W. Childs, widow of the Philadelphia philanthropist, is herself an exponent of philanthropy. She is having a beautiful home built in Pasadena, and last week she instructed her agent to charter a car and take all the workmen employed on the building to Long Beach. The excursion was a most enjoyable affair. The men were provided with bathing suits and also with lunch at a swell hotel.

Miss Kitty Nolan was called to town from Bartlett Springs, where she had spent several weeks, by the serious illness of her mother. The Nolans, I hear, are contemplating a trip abroad.

She Will Take the Waters

Susie Blanding is still in England, where she is visiting her old friend Flora Hesketh. From there she will go to Paris for a very brief visit with her relatives and friends. She will try the waters of Carlsbad and at Aix and if she is benefited will return to Paris for quite a lengthy stay. The Gordon Blandings have found Belvedere so fascinating that they will probably stay there until the middle of October.

Mrs. W. H. Mills, who is entertaining Mrs. Rockey of Portland, will entertain her guest at a tea next week, at the Mills home in Jackson street. When Ardella Mills was in Portland, she spent some time visiting Mrs. Rockey.

The Distinguished Mrs. Metcalf

From an Eastern paper I learn that Mrs. Victor Metcalf is one of the most distinguished looking and gracious of the "Cabinet ladies." Mrs. Metcalf has fulfilled the promise of her girlhood. As Connie Nickolson she was a beautiful girl with well-poised head and graceful figure. She comes from old Knickerbocker stock on her mother's side. Mrs. Metcalf was one of the belles of the dancing class at McClure's Military Academy in Oakland.

The Sharons

Lieutenant George Sharon, better known to his Berkeley friends as "Snags," is visiting his relatives on the coast after an absence of several years. He belongs to a cavalry regiment which is at present stationed at Fort Brooke, Nebraska, and has been in the army seven years. His father died a long time ago and he was brought up by the Will Sharons. Will Sharon, by the way, has withdrawn from the Senatorial fight in Nevada, and Governor Sparks, the many-times millionaire, promises to be the next Nevada Senator. Sparks is very popular in Nevada, and the sage-brush people resent having another outsider to represent them in the United States Senate.

Rogers Was In at the Finish

In a brief paragraph, one day last week, the newspapers told of the termination of the trust established by Catherine Garcelon, and the distribution of her estate to the institutions to which it had been bequeathed. None of the dailies recalled that this estate was the residue of the fortune left by Dr. Samuel Merritt of Oakland, over which there was much stormy litigation not many years ago. Dr. Merritt's estate was valued at over five million dollars. He bequeathed the bulk of it to his sister, Mrs. Garcelon; and his two nephews, James and Frederick Merritt, contested the will. The late W. W. Foote was their attorney and he secured for his clients a quarter of a million each, and for himself a fee of one hundred thousand dollars. It was regarded as a singular circumstance that one of the heirs under the will was Henry Rodgers of the Oakland Bank of Savings. Rodgers and Merritt were at one time very intimate friends, but they fell out and at Merritt's death he entertained most bitter hatred of Rodgers. But Merritt was an eccentric chap, and he had a horror of making a will because it reminded him of his finish. In the days of his friendship for Rodgers he had made a will bequeathing to him a block of property in Oakland valued at two hundred thousand dollars, and after their quarrel he deferred executing a new instrument until death overtook him. And the big legacy was not all that Rodgers got out of the Merritt estate. When John A. Stanley, the last of the Garcelon trustees, died about five years ago, E. S. Pillsbury, the attorney for one of the heirs, petitioned for the appointment of Henry Rodgers to fill the vacancy. Rodgers was appointed, and he handled the trust until its termination.

Jealousy Inspired by the Marines

The army's jealousy of the navy is not to be denied, but it is not so great as the army's jealousy of the marine corps. My attention has recently been called to repeated expressions of this painful apprehension of superiority. However it is not surprising that the soldiers should be jealous of the marines, for the latter have a most enviable record. In point of discipline, readiness and general efficiency, the army has much to learn from the marine corps. It was the marines who, at Guantanamo, made the first foothold on Cuban soil. It was the marines who took possession of the Philippines, at Cavite, long before the advance of the tardy army. Marines have done work in the islands right along that should have been done by the army, but the marines were ready when the army was not. The same was true in China in 1900. Above all, when the emeute took place at Panama last autumn, and it became necessary for the United States to despatch a land force there in a hurry, the marines had to be called upon. Twenty-four hours after the order was issued from the Navy Department, the marine battalions were on their transports, ready to sail, completely equipped and ready for any service. It would have taken the army nearly as many days to have gotten away. There is no better body of soldiers in the world than the United States Marine Corps.

Truxtun's Sick Leave Extended

Lieutenant-Commander William Truxtun, U. S. N., has again had his sick leave extended for two months, and it will therefore be some time longer before he will return to active duty on this coast. "Billy" Truxtun is one of the best officers in the service. He comes by his aptitude naturally, being the descendant of a long line of Truxtuns in the service, one of whom commanded the Constellation during her short but brilliant campaign in the West Indies against the French toward the end of the eighteenth century, and he also distinguished himself against the Barbary pirates. "Billy" Truxtun's health has suffered much of late years, as a result of continued arduous duties afloat and in trying climates.

Evans and the Canteen

I have frequently spoken of Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans, U. S. N., as a prominent member of the navy ring and a good deal of a gallery player, yet a man who, unlike others of his ilk, generally managed to make good. He has certainly made good in his recently announced, but long held, attitude on the subject of the establishment of a navy canteen. Like all experienced, sensible soldiers and sailors, who have the good both of the service and of their men at heart, Evans recognizes that men will drink, and that if they are not allowed to have light wines or beer with their meals, or while coaling ship or performing other arduous duties, they will lose efficiency, be discontented and take the first opportunity to secure and fill up on hard liquors, generally of a poor quality, to their own and the service's detriment. Evans has called attention to the extent to which some of his best men, deprived of beer, have died from the effects of drinking wood alcohol. The same testimony is obtainable from nearly all officers. It is safe to say that the establishment of a canteen, under proper regulations, would increase contentment, diminish drunkenness and generally advance both discipline and efficiency in the navy.

He Ruled Alaska

Captain Michael A. Healy, who died in this city last week, was one of the most interesting and picturesque figures in the maritime world. He was known in the old days as the "King of Alaska," and he really earned the title, for, in the early years of that territory, in the transition period between Russian and American rule, he was really the boss of the whole region. It was peopled by few whites and many Indians. In his dealings with the inhabitants Captain Healy, in his own peculiar way, was always successful. With a diplomacy and tact of his own, backed up by proper but wholly arbitrary force on the few occasions when it was called for, the rugged old sailor dealt out justice and maintained order with a thoroughness which has not been improved upon by the legal machinery of recent years. Lawbreakers feared him, and so did the Indians generally, until they learned to appreciate him, after which they had the highest regard and respect for him. It is probable that few if any officials in Alaska have so well understood the natives as the late Captain Healy. He was a brother, by the way, of the Catholic Bishop of Portland, Maine, and of the Reverend Father Healy who was for many years president of the Jesuit University of Georgetown, D. C.

Wheeler's Advice to Co-Eds

President Benjamin Ide Wheeler gave an entertaining address the other day to the Associated Women Students, at their first meeting in Hearst hall. He surprised everybody by throwing bouquets to the co-eds, collectively and individually, and assuring them of his distinguished regard. He said that he was proud to be at the head of an institution of which they were the main pillars. Then, after their hats began to feel tight on their heads he advised them, in a paternal way, not to affect the manners and appearance of men, adding that a woman was a more attractive being than a man at any time—at least to the other sex. "You are here and no one asks what the purpose of your coming is. Only, I beg of you, grow more and more womanly. No one likes a manly girl but every one loves the domestic, clinging bit of femininity that the world used to know."

Gayley Promised To Be Good

I hear that the co-eds have resolved to win the esteem of the faculty this year, and to repress their feeling of resentment toward the professors who have frowned upon them. The other day, as Professor Gayley was walking in the shade of the live oaks, a sweet young thing intent upon giving expression to the conciliatory spirit of her fellow students confronted him, and with a bewitching smile remarked that she hoped they would be good friends. The astonished professor bowed low and said, "I promise to do my best to maintain a most amicable relationship."

"No one could say a handsomer thing than that," exclaimed the girl, "and I am sure we shall be very good friends. If I can ever help you in any way do not hesitate to call upon me."

They'll Not "Drop In" Hereafter

Professor Henry Morse Stephens, head of the department of history, has decided to bar outsiders from his lectures. Heretofore society women across the bay were pleased to tell their dinner guests that they had run in during the day to hear dear Professor Stephens lecturing on English history—"quite like a novel, I assure you." It was quite the thing to "drop in," and as a consequence students were crowded out, and the frou-frou of fashionable skirts drowned the scratching of note-taking pencils. College men had to sit in the open windows and stand, packed closely together in the rear of the hall, so that society women might comfortably acquire a reputation for culture-quest. So Professor Stephens has decided to exclude outsiders.

Students of the University of California are sadly in need of a building which may be utilized as a temporary museum, as choice and interesting treasures are lying in cases awaiting some place for their exhibition. The valuable anthropological collection obtained by the agents of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst from the tombs and buried cities of the old world has had to be housed in the affiliated colleges in this city, where they are not of the slightest use. Besides the Hearst collections there are other rare treasures donated by the State Geological Survey, the Pioche heirs, D. O. Mills, James R. Keene and the Alaska Commercial Company.

The Vanishing Lake

Since irrigation projects have made such progress Tulare lake has practically disappeared from the map, and in the course of a few more years the whole of the erstwhile lake bed will be covered with farms. Yet, in the memory of people now living, and far from the patriarchal age of three score and ten, steamboats plied its waters. In time to come, the legend of when the boat used to cross the far field will become as much of a fireside story among the Tulareites as when the water came up to Montgomery street is in our own town, and probably it will not be any more readily credited.

"Is that so?"

"Yes; I saw him eating a lobster the other night."

An Ordinance Against Bathing Suits

The fashion of wearing bathing suits on the street has long been recognized in Ocean Park, a small seaside resort in the Southern part of the State. It is a fashion that has long been approved in Atlantic City and other Eastern summer resorts, but a halt has been called by the City Fathers of Ocean Park, a correspondent writes me. They have passed an ordinance that pronounces it unlawful for any person to appear on the streets, alleys or sidewalks attired in bathing costume except when such person is about to bathe in the ocean or has just returned from so bathing. Such immoderate zeal as that evinced by the City Fathers of the little seaside resort is usually characteristic of the base-born, whose thoughts turn to unholy things. Doubtless the ordinance meets with the approval of the scrawny women less fortunate than their goddess-like sisters with the ravishing curves of Juno and a penchant for revealing them. But such legislation is ridiculous interference with the harmless customs of young people. A woman in a bathing suit at a seaside resort should not offend one's sense of delicacy or of propriety. The costume is as conventional as a décolleté gown at the opera. The probability is that Ocean Park has many long-haired citizens and that some of them will bear watching.

One man was the whole Freshman class in the University of California for three whole days. He had such a fine record that the committee presented him with a card of admission before anyone else was taken in. It was all on account of the remarkable record he made in entrance examinations. Lewis A. Underhill, a former student of the Lowell High School, is the man. In the Lowell High School he was prominent in forensic circles, being president of the debating society and a member of the school team. He had taken but three years' High School work and could not therefore receive credentials. In the entrance examinations for the College of Letters he passed all with seven first sections, two days after his sixteenth birthday. The committee considered this such a remarkable showing that it gave him an admission card, sending it by special delivery as a birthday present. This was on the Thursday preceding the Monday when the regular cards were distributed.

In Financial Circles

The week's business days have been reduced one-third through holidays, still, transactions show an increase over last week's dealings in stocks. The total shows sales of $194,000 in bonds, and 7,060 in shares, divided as follows: 280 lighting, 315 water, 485 miscellaneous, and 5,980 sugars. This is a good showing. I am glad to see "The Stock and Bond Exchange" getting back to its old standing.

Quotations show no changes, except Alaska Packers' Association, which advanced from $123 to $130 under a very strong demand. Sugars were once more the centre of attraction, all offers being freely taken without fully satisfying the demand. The Honokaa Sugar Co. re-entered the list of dividend payers, creating a pleasant surprise for holders. Most of the others are expected to follow suit in a short while.

Raw sugar continues on its upward move. European crop reports favor a further rise in raw material.

Comedy That Scores

To take "Raffles" seriously and "Candida" as a joke one must have an elastic viewpoint. "Raffles" is good comedy—mighty good comedy. The humor of it is in its mock gravity. It deals soberly, almost solemnly, with situations farcical in the extreme. It might easily be confounded with old-fashioned, wholesome melodrama of "The Silver King" variety, for it has its thrills and its heart interest, not to speak of its gentleman burglar, but by close attention to detail you notice that it trifles with the probabilities in a way that cunningly appeals to the risibles. So cleverly, however, is its business contrived, and so grave and serious are the actors that interest in the plot is almost irresistible. The playwrights succeed admirably in compelling you to follow developments, and they even arouse your sympathies for the cracksmen. But it is doubtful whether their success would be so great were Raffles and Captain Bedford in other hands. Kyrle Bellew and E. M. Holland are actors of exquisite artistry, and they impart much realism to their respective roles. They plunge into the story with wonderful enthusiasm, and put their audience on the qui vive from the start. The pursuit of the stolen diamonds becomes a chase of absorbing interest, though you feel certain that the detective is to be outwitted, he seems to know so little about his business. When he suspects the French maid of having the plunder in a satchel, and does not find it there, the natural supposition is that he will insist on a thorough search of her person. Detectives do such things, but not Captain Bedford. Notwithstanding his suspicions he lets the girl go; probably because the search was not essential to the development of the plot. Or perhaps Captain Bedford had an X-ray eye. He was pretty sure anyway that Raffles had the necklace. And at the wind-up it becomes clear that it is all a joke when Raffles takes the clock route to freedom. His getting out on time is a capital dramatic pun, though I think that in the sequel it will be found that Raffles didn't escape, for Bedford always had the house surrounded. If it were serious melodrama, Mrs. Vidal, the only person who could lead a successful prosecution against Raffles, would have committed suicide, and then would come the regulation denouement, for evidently Gwendolyn would be willing to take the gentlemanly burglar at any price. But the playwrights preferred to utilize the niche of time. And to their credit, be it said, they have constructed a popular play that appeals to all who like to enter into a peaceful, paretic frame of mind while regaling themselves on stage literature.

Theodore Bonnet.

Shaw's Inartistic Lampoon

Much as I admire George Bernard Shaw I cannot enthuse over his "Man of Destiny." In this little play the brilliant Celt is positively tedious. For once he takes himself too seriously. Much of the humor of it is ponderous, the satire is far-fetched, and the philosophy is twaddle. There is little art in the play; the construction is bad, and the artificiality is too obvious. Mr. Shaw must have been dining with the editor of Punch just before dashing off this crude attempt to present the great Napoleon as a real man, off his pedestal and in commonplace action. The purpose of the play seems to be to destroy the Napoleonic illusion, to dim the halo, to shatter the idol, but if so the dramatic lampoon is inartistic and fails to appeal to the convictions. However it is a roughly realistic portrait of the Corsican, but a trifle out of drawing. It is too intensely theatric to impress, but much could be forgiven and overlooked if its meanings were not so vague. The scene between Napoleon and the lady who stole the despatches is intensely dramatic. It is a happy conception, but there is not sufficient pretext for the scintillant duel of words. Moreover it is illogical and lacks coherence. No doubt Shaw knew what he was driving at, but he does not make his purpose clear. I know that he is an exponent of the drama that makes you think, but in the "Man of Destiny" he only succeeds in making you think that he has left entirely too much to the imagination. The combat of wit and passion between Napoleon and the lady is illuminated by brilliant flashes of paradox and delicious impertinences, but what it is all about is difficult to ascertain. The situation is one in which victory to the man means not victory at all, but only humiliation, for the letter which occasions the verbal duel contains evidence of Josephine's infidelity. Never at any time does it appear why the woman should be eager to protect Josephine or save Napoleon from humiliation. As it turns out she does neither. Though the letter is not read, she exposes Josephine and humiliates Napoleon, and yet he is very grateful to her. It is all very amusing and inexplicable, and when it is over you are very much inclined to say "Pshaw!" Mr. Shaw's pyrotechnics are diverting, but his technical handling of his themes is at times amateurish. One of the characters in this play is a fat-head lieutenant, utterly devoid of common sense, the last man in the world to be entrusted with important despatches. Yet he was entrusted with them, and he lost them, and it is made clear to the audience that he is a silly fool. Nevertheless Shaw develops in him a capacity for brilliant paradox, and to hurl a shaft at heroics he puts into the mouth of the lieutenant a plausible explanation of how a horse won the battle of Lodi. At the crisis

CLARA BLANDICK.

The handsome and talented leading woman for Kyrle Bellew in "Raffles" filled that position with the distinguished English actor-miner-yachtsman during the long New York engagement of the fascinating Hornung-Presbrey drama last season. Miss Blandick is among the youngest of American leading women and her rise has been very rapid.

of the action a long tirade against the hypocrisy and greed of the English is dragged in by the heels. Its paradoxes are brilliant, but the speech is whangdoodle. Moreover it is an intrusion, unnecessary and in violation of an important canon of the dramatic art. If an amateur had written such a long-winded, theatrical speech into a play, he would have been derided as an idiot and advised to study the fundamentals of the craft. Mr. Shaw should curb his passion for attitudinizing. I regret that he has not impressed San Francisco theatregoers favorably. "Candida" was a failure here, though it is one of the most artistic plays ever presented at a local theatre. It is not likely that Arnold Daly will return to us with any more of Shaw's plays. I shall miss the plays, but not Daly.

Theodore Bonnet.

Our New Stock Theatre

Pretty Isabel Irving, who christened the Majestic theatre a few months ago, would scarcely know the cozy and elegant play house that was opened to the San Francisco public last Saturday night. The upholsterers, painters and decorators have worked wonders since then until now it is probably one of the prettiest as well as one of the most up to date theatres in the country. Certainly it is the most artistic of any in town. The entrance is particularly attractive, brilliant with mirrors and myriad lights. The walls of the interior are of a terra cotta shade and the boxes and decorations are of pure white. The curtain is exceptionally well painted—a scene in a forest. Fortunately for the audience, the artist refrained from placing any human figures in the foreground of his work, to become a wearying eye-sore throughout the season. It was inevitable that comparisons would be drawn between the production of "In the Palace of the King" at the Majestic and the one that Viola Allen gave us two years ago. But suffice it to say that the present interpretation is quite remarkable when the fact that it is played by a popular priced stock company is taken into consideration. "In the Palace of the King" is a very difficult play to produce, calling as it does for the most elaborate costuming and scenery. There are hundreds of details that are absolutely necessary to the completion of the series of stage pictures that need long hours of practice to make them run smoothly. The stage manager at the Majestic is to be congratulated. Of the principals Miss Grace Reals probably did the best work. She is a handsome woman with a pleasantly pitched low voice which is capable of showing considerable range of expression. Her acting is very satisfactory except for an occasional exaggerated gesticulation and a slightly over-worked play of facial expression. She handled best the strong scenes with the King, though her scene with her lover in the third act was given with great tenderness. J. H. Gilmour played the part of the crafty fanatic, Philip II, in a careful manner. His make-up was excellent and he sustained the difficult role very cleverly throughout the entire play. The part of Don John was taken by Richard Thornton. Mr. Thornton is a good-looking, graceful actor who will no doubt be a distinct acquisition to the stock company. Others in the cast who took their parts creditably were Eleanor Gordon, who does the best work she has done here as the scheming Princess, John Callaghan as the Cardinal and Henry Stockbridge as the Court Fool. The management has drawn together an intelligent and apparently conscientious company of players who should be able to play the varied repertoire announced for the season in a satisfactorily artistic manner.

Florence Roberts's "Sapho"

This week Florence Roberts revived "Sapho" at the California. Her performance is wonderfully true in conception, flawless in execution and with an elusive harmony of realism and poesy that is most captivating. But "Sapho" at best is not an edifying play. The tender pathos of the novel is lost in the dramatization.

"The Evil Men Do" is the usual type of Kremer melodrama, with some particularly picturesque features in the boys' choir and a lively school scene in which many children appear. It has drawn big houses at the Central.

The one star number on the Orpheum's program is "Driftwood," the pathetic little sketch in which Eva Williams interprets the character of the poorhouse waif, and Jac Tucker that of a good-hearted station-agent.

PAT ROONEY and MARION BENT.
the Comedy Dancers at the Orpheum.

Whittlesey Scores as Robert Emmet

The Tynan version of "Robert Emmet" proves more logical and dramatic than any of the versions that have hitherto been given to the stage. The Alcazar has staged and costumed the play with lavishness and extreme fidelity to the period in which the drama is laid. Whittlesey makes Robert a figure to enthuse the Irish heart, and Miss Lawton is a fascinating Sarah Curran. George Osbourne's Michael Dwyer is another good characterization. The Alcazar is packed every night.

The Belasco Theatre

Society packed the new Belasco theatre in Los Angeles on Monday night, August twenty-ninth, and the Los Angeles Examiner gave a page to "who was there," how they looked, how the play went, and the auditors' comments. It was truly a gala occasion. The play was "The Wife." In the cast were Adele Block, M. L. Alsop, Agnes Ranken, Oza Waldrop, Howard Scott, Faye Wallace and many other favorites.

The Bills Next Week

Florence Roberts will have the event of the dramatic week, in her production at the California of "Marta of the Lowlands," never given before in this city though it had a long season in the East. It is somewhat on the "Tess of the d'Urbervilles" order, with a simple story. The "master," so called in the play, is a feudal lord in all but title. He has ruined a poor girl whom he loves, but is about to marry for money. In order to keep the girl near him he brings about her marriage to a supposed lout of a shepherd. The girl at first despises her husband, then loves him. The husband, learning something of the truth, first longs to kill his wife, then, learning more, takes her to his heart, having loved her from the first. Then learning all, he kills the "master" with his bare hands and takes Marta to his home on the mountain peak, away from the wicked lowlands. The preparations for this production have been very elaborate and something unusually good may be expected.

"The Anheuser Push" has drawn immense crowds to Fischer's all this week, and the sale for next week insures more packed houses. "Miss Mazuma," the new burlesque, comes next, and then "Tommy Rot," and then "A Night at Monte Carlo."

"Raffles" will be played at the Columbia up to and including Sunday night, September eighteenth.

At the Majestic "In the Palace of the King" will be presented during the coming week, after which the rule will be to change productions every Sunday evening. On this occasion the advance sale of seats has been so heavy and the inquiry so eager that the management yielded to the general demand and violated the rule for this once. The Thursday bargain matinee is a feature of the house, and to the ladies especially it is inviting.

Beginning tomorrow afternoon, at the Grand will be presented Bothwell Browne's new musical extravaganza, "Princess Fan Tan," in which three hundred clever juveniles will take part. The piece had its origin in an ancient Japanese legend, and will be magnificently mounted. The performance will be interspersed with new songs, dances, marches, etc., a "Rainbow Butterfly" dance and the ballets "The Feast of the Chrysanthemums," "Love in the Clouds" and "Early Days of California." Popular prices, fifteen cents, twenty-five cents and fifty cents will prevail and there will be a matinee Saturday. "York State Folks," a rural drama, will shortly be presented.

At the Alcazar will be given—its first stock production—"The Second in Command," the comedy by Captain Marshall in which John Drew so successfully starred. Whittlesey will have the Drew role, and the full strength of the company will be in the cast. "Monbars," one of the Whittlesey hits last season, comes next.

The seventh and last week of "The Toreador" at the Tivoli begins Monday night. "The Serenade" will then be revived, with a cast including Andrew Bogart, who will make his debut in opera; Kate Condon as Dolores, Forrest Dabney Carr as Alvarado; Dora de Fillippe as Yvonne; Webb, Miss Tannehill, Simms and Fogarty.

The Central will have a great Blaney melodrama, "Only a Shop Girl," a picture of New York life full of sensation and emotion. The shop girl has many trials but virtue triumphs in the end. A Bowery cash-girl with a witty tongue is one of the principal comedy characters.

Henry La Rose and his company of comedians will make their first appearance in this city at the Orpheum in "The Sailor and the Horse," by Will M. Cressy. It introduces a horse that can do six miles a minute, when doped, a sailor and a race track tout and is a story of a great winning on a four hundred to one shot. Pat Rooney and Marion Bent, eccentric comedy and acrobatic dancers, will also be new. The young man is a son of the famous Pat Rooney. Al. Shean, last here with the Manhattan Comedy Four, will appear as a single entertainer. Leo Carrillo, a young man who gives imitations of everything known to the animal, bird and insect kingdom, and then jumps from a phonograph to an automobile with perfect ease and facility, promises a novel turn. The "Great Singing Four," as the Mendelssohn Quartet of Denver is known, have made an unqualified hit, and for their second and last week will change their selections. The Knights Templar parade will be shown in motion pictures.

At the Chutes will be the great Paul, the "Handcuff King," and Bryden's dogs, among the new-comers.

Automobile Topics

R. A. Crothers in company with friends, drove his Winton touring car to Niles last Sunday. John A. Craig of Woodland, with his family, drove his new 1904 Winton from Woodland to San Francisco on Sunday.

F. A. Lathe of the Pioneer Automobile Company, has just returned from a trip through the Sacramento valley, where he disposed of three Oldsmobile light tonneau touring cars.

Schuyler S. Olds of the Oldsmobile Company in Detroit, Michigan, is now in San Francisco. Mr. Olds is visiting all his Oldsmobile representatives and expresses himself as being very much pleased with the outlook for future business. Leon T. Shettler of the Oldsmobile Company at Los Angeles is in town and states that Oldsmobile business in his territory is booming.

The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company reports having made several sales of Pope-Toledo cars since the Del Monte tournament. Mr. Boyer believes the call on Pope-Toledos will be very heavy during the fall months, as he says the Pope-Toledo more than made good in road work, track work and hill-climbing.

The Pope Motor Car Company is still over one hundred machines behind orders, and inasmuch as its output of Pope-Toledos has been more than that of all other four-cylinder cars combined, it is very evident that the Pope-Toledo's popularity is general throughout the United States.

The Rambler automobile agency unloaded another carload of Rambler touring cars Saturday and sales still continue. Many inquiries are coming in from all points of the State and deliveries are rapidly being made.

Dr. W. Cary Wilson and wife from Stockton were seen driving through the park last Sunday in their Rambler touring car. With them were Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Linz.

A large crowd of spectators watched with great interest the manoeuvres of an automobile along the sandy beach below the Cliff House last Sunday, and to the surprise of all its action through the sand, some times a foot deep, was as perfect as though the machine was still on solid roadbed. The automobile proved to be a Rambler touring car, Model K.

When the Knights of Pythias visited San Francisco two years ago, there was only one Mobile touring car in passenger service in the city. The Mobile Company has in service for the Knights Templar thirty-two passenger automobiles, and has four fourteen passenger busses in course of construction. The Mobile Company, which has been carrying on, in San Francisco, the biggest automobile passenger service in the country, with offices in the Palace, St. Francis and Occidental, has purchased the business of the Automobile Transit Company, with headquarters at 324 Post street. In the future the business of the Transit will be conducted from the garage of the Mobile Carriage Company.

The Mobile Carriage Company has just received a carload of two-cylinder Arrows and stanhopes. The Los Angeles branch is having good sales on these cars.

The record automobile mileage in San Francisco is held by a Pierce Arrow. This car was put in passenger rental service in March. It has run ten thousand three hundred and nineteen miles. Nearly all this running was done at night and the load nearly always consisted of five people.

The White Sewing Machine Company refused to enter any of its cars at Del Monte as the 1904 models were all sold out and the 1905 cars, which will be ready for delivery in September, could not be received here in time for the Del Monte event. One of the White cars entered in the races belonged to L. P. Lowe, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Automobile Club of California, and was entered by him to fill up the races. The other White car, which won the two big open events of the meet, belonged to H. D. Ryus of Los Angeles. C. A. Hawkins, general manager of the White Company, states that notwithstanding the fact that the White cars have won more trophies on this coast than all other makes combined, he is opposed to racing on account of the danger of accident. "And I believe," said he, "the question of comfort, ease of handling and reliability on the road will be more a consideration for the buyer this season than ever before." The following are the changes of the 1905 model White from the 1904 car, as furnished by Mr. Hawkes: Fifty per cent more power; thirteen-inch longer wheel base; eighteen-inch longer springs; four-inch larger wheels; five-gallon more gasoline capacity; more efficient condenser; hill-climbing gear and disconnecting device so arranged that the engine can run free when necessary, thereby entirely eliminating all physical exertion on the part of the driver in hand-pumping; a small fly-wheel on the engine and four times the strength in the engine bearings; more roomy tonneau and more room for the feet in front; equipment either plan or King of Belgians type of body, the latter being of the most elaborate Poi de Belge type. The car will sell for four hundred dollars more with plain body and five hundred dollars more with other body. Mr. Hawkins states that shipments will be made this month from the factory of twenty-four of the 1905 models, for which orders have already been taken.

The White touring car owners took advantage of the favorable weather conditions Monday and made trips to the park and across the bay in their steam automobiles en masse. G. Lambert and party enjoyed a tour in Alameda county. Leon Roos ran his auto to Menlo and J. O. Bradney piloted his White over the rough country road to Millbrae. Despite the very poor condition of the roads Mr. Bradney stated that everything went all very fine on his run both ways. Mrs. Parrish and party, Miss Fannie Colby and Messrs. Ainsworth and Roberts all had their horseless carriages out for spins either through the park or to the Presidio. A. M. Shields drove out to the trap-shooting grounds at Ingleside and after a little practice at the clay pigeons steamed up his White and returned home.

The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company sold two Pope-Toledos the past week, one to Roy Mauvais and one to R. L. Douglass of Nevada.

Melbourne, Australia, recently held an automobile race meet, one of the features of which was a two hundred and twenty yards backward race for automobiles.

ARTISTIC MILLINERY IN AN ARTISTIC FRAME

A much traveled New York woman told the writer this week that even in her own city, or Paris, she has not seen a more artistic millinery store than that of Mrs. Downing, 923 Market street, next to Zinkand's. The interior is finished in the latest oak effects, with rafted ceiling, and Mrs. Downing has put considerable money into the decorations. However, it pays to have a store which is as artistic as anything in New York or Paris. Mrs. Downing carries a beautiful line of hats, and her prices are reasonable considering the styles are exclusive. It was Mrs. Downing who introduced here the new shade of green that was so generally popular in the spring millinery.

IN GUMP'S GALLERY

The visiting Knights Templar, most of whom had heard before coming to San Francisco of S. & G. Gump's famous art gallery, have been especially interested in the great painting by Torreglia, which shows William Embriaco on his return from the first Crusade, with his warriors, after his victories over the Turks, and is received with acclaim by his countrymen. The Torreglia is a magnificent work of art, of marvelous drawing and color scheme, the lofty subject treated in a masterly manner. The painting is valued at ten thousand dollars, and that seems a small price to the connoisseur who understands its real worth. It is one of those works of art whose value increases as the years roll by. A. S. Gump bought it when in Florence, where he saw it in Torreglia's studio, and at once put in a bid for it. There are very few works in the Gump gallery that are not worth seeing, but the Torreglia just now is attracting the most attention.

When a Woman Reads a Woman

BY ANNE THURBER.

"I'm glad to find that there are no old maid proclivities about you," observed Edith.

"By what line of reasoning have you reached that conclusion?" returned Jack, the bridegroom, preparing the lather for his matutinal shave.

Edith, in kimono and silk petticoat, had paused with her hair half brushed to rummage in the top drawer of her husband's chiffonier.

They had just concluded their honeymoon trip to Lake Tahoe, and on reaching town had gone at once to Jack's home, where he had lived so long and happily as a bachelor and must now share with a wife.

"Ties, handkerchiefs, cotillion favors, odd gloves, cigars, matches, photographs—yes, and letters. Letters from a woman, too! What careless, thoughtless creatures men are!"

Jack was busy lathering his pink cheeks, and paid little heed to the chatter of his vivacious bride. Let her rummage among my effects, he thought, if it pleases her.

Edith sat quietly with a pile of letters in her lap, some in their envelopes, some heaped up without having been refolded after their perusal by the recipient. She sorted out several in the same handwriting from the mass of bills, invitations and wedding announcements that helped fill the drawer. She did not feel that she was doing anything mean or underhanded in reading what had not been intended for her eyes. Were not Jack and herself one? Was he not standing but a few feet away, and could he not prevent her from reading the letters if he wished?

Jack, however, was carefully removing the lather from his upper lip. To keep his razor on the proper road was all he was capable of considering at that moment.

He finished shaving just as Edith finished the last letter. Then he looked around, and saw her occupation. He took up one of the letters and, as he recognized the handwriting, gave a little start.

"That's not exactly honorable of you, Edith," he said, "to read Dixie's letters."

"Just as honorable for me to read them as for you to leave them about so carelessly," she retorted.

A sharp answer rose to his lips, but he repressed it.

"It doesn't matter much," he returned, with a smile, "for they aren't love-letters. I don't think Dixie would mind your seeing them."

There was an odd expression in Edith's eyes, as she answered:

"Not love-letters? Well, if not that they come very near the definition."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Jack, "Dixie never thought of me in that way. We were friends, that's all; good friends, chums, everything like that, but—oh, no, Dixie never cared for me in any other sense."

"Perhaps you were in love with her, though," observed Edith, with some frigidity in her tones.

Jack straightened up his tall figure and proceeded to brush his smooth hair, deliberately. He did not answer at once.

"I told you, Edith, that Dixie and I were friends," he said after a long pause. "She is a good fellow, the kind one chums with—we were that kind of friends."

Edith picked up one of the letters.

"This sounds like friendship, doesn't it," she said, reading:

"Jack, dear Jack, it seems an eternity until next Saturday, when you said you'd come and have tea with me."

"And this," she went on, taking up the other letters, one after the other, reading bits from each:

"I can't forget, dear old boy, how you looked the other night. After you left, I went to work and drew your face, as quickly as I could, so I'd not lose the expression. It was so life-like when I finished that I kissed it—I did, Jack, just that—kissed the sketch of you."

"Tom Darling asked me yesterday whether I did not think he had a better physique than you. Imagine the vanity of him! Why, Jack, dear old fellow, I know it won't hurt you at all, for you aren't a bit vain, but the artists at the Class all say you ought to let Earl model you as Hercules. I wish I were a sculptor instead of a pen-and-ink. Wouldn't I spring to fame on your shoulders?"

"You did not come yesterday as you promised. I was angry at first, then hurt—terribly hurt. But I thought it over and concluded I must have said something that displeased you the last night you were at the studio. There should be no misunderstandings between friends. So I am just writing, Jack, to ask you if your Daily Food disagreed with you, and what's the remedy?"

Jack laughed.

"I suppose you wonder what she means by that last sentence?" he asked.

"Of course, I'm just devoured by curiosity."

Jack did not notice the sarcasm lurking in her words.

"It was a joke of Tom Darling's," he explained. "You see, Dixie is such a nice little thing, and once a fellow at one of her parties quoted that thing about

"A creature not too bright and good For human nature's daily food."

"Tom started calling Dixie Daily Food after that, and when any of us had a falling out with her she used to say our Food didn't agree with us."

Edith tossed the last letter contemptuously into the drawer, upon the heap of ties, collars, invitations, favors, bills, cigars and matches.

"You must be obtuse not to know love-letters when you see them," she said.

"Oh, no, you're mistaken," answered Jack, eagerly, "wait and I'll read you the last one she wrote."

From the wardrobe he extracted an old blue coat, one not included in the honeymoon outfit. From the breast-pocket, after some fumbling, he drew a letter.

"Listen to this," he said.

"Dear Jack, I have just returned from the South, and learn of your approaching marriage. I know you are very happy. I am sure you will be in your new life, and I wish you and your wife-to-be every blessing Heaven can give. Your loyal old chum,
'Dixie.'"

"Now, Edith, that looks like love, doesn't it!"

Edith shook her head wisely. She took up her brush and began dressing her long, blonde hair.

"It takes a woman to read a woman's heart," she said. "Poor Dixie!"

She smiled at her own beautiful face in the glass, as she heaved a sigh for the girl who had lost Jack.

Jack returned to his mirror, spending more time than usual in adjusting his collar and tie. Edith's words seemed to have torn a veil from his eyes. He wished she had not—it seemed to him like invading a sanctuary. What a blind fool he had been! How many times by his careless words must he have wounded Dixie's heart!

Yet how careful he had been never to disturb the serene course of their camaraderie. Many a time had he been tempted to steal kisses from Dixie's tenderly curved lips, but he had always refrained because he felt that it would not please her.

"I like my friends to be friends, and not play at being lovers," she had said once to Tom Darling, when he had made a feeble feint at flirtation. Jack remembered how once, when the red wine, at a studio dinner a deux with Dixie, had warmed him to sentimentalism, he had said:

"We might get married, Dixie."

He had not been sufficiently serious in his mood at the time to pay much attention to her jesting reply, but he now recalled that she had not answered directly. She had looked at him curiously, he remembered now, but her merry answer had come quickly enough after that:

"Oh, three days would put an end to the romance," she had said.

Was Edith right? Did Dixie love him? How criss-cross everything went in this world! He wished Edith had not read those letters. He wished he had not been so careless in leaving them about.

It was too late now—too late for more than regret.

"Your loyal chum, Dixie," the words repeated themselves in his brain. He had not been so loyal to her. Would she have left his letters about where he who found may read?

Edith's voice interrupted the trend of his thoughts.

"You're ages fixing your tie," she said, "breakfast has been ready a half-hour."

Music

[Communications addressed to this department should be received not later than Tuesday noon.]

Bohemia's Music

The Bohemian Club concert of last Thursday was the first serious musical event of the season. The large audience collected to listen to the "Midsummer Music of Bohemia" was not only a fashionable one, but thoroughly attentive and appreciative as well. A pretty forest stage setting formed an entourage for a chorus of forty voices and the sixty picked musicians selected by Joseph D. Redding. Dr. H. J. Stewart opened the concert proper as conductor for his own composition, "Montezuma." A portion of this work was given last year by Fritz Scheel, so it was not entirely unfamiliar to the musical public. Dr. Stewart's music is intensely dramatic, as it should be to fit Mr. Louis A. Robertson's text. It is full of strong contrasts, the dreamy intermezzo and slow waltz being in an opposite mood from the strong prelude and finale with their hints of tragedy. Mr. McCoy's "Hamadryads" was musically the most important work on the program. It is a fine composition, well knit, sustained in interest, and strong in musical ideas well worked out. The striking prelude is symphonic in character, the instrumental handling being remarkably good. The composer has been kind to the wood-winds, the flute in particular having some beautiful passages. Mr. McCoy conducted with ardor, and received a well merited ovation. Mr. Redding's setting of "The Man in the Forest," was the least ambitious of the three music dramas, but contains charming little motives, and is rich in color. As a whole, however, it is elusive in character, and a quaint air of mystery and weirdness pervades the music, not out of keeping with its Indian theme. The soloist of the afternoon was Judge H. A. Melvin, whose fine baritone was very effective in the "Hamadryads." The chorus, composed of a contingent from the Loring Club and the Tivoli, was a little disappointing. Mr. Richard Hotaling took a star part in the production. His exposition of the three dramas, and his rendition of the "legend" were masterly in their way. Mr. Hotaling has a clear and resonant voice, and his elocution was a joy to his listeners. The jinks concert was in every way a success, and it is to be hoped that the public will have other opportunities of hearing the excellent music, effective even when divorced from its accompanying text and deprived of scenic illusion. The program would justify repetition.

Miss Eleanor Connell's Talented Pupil

The parlors on the mezzanine floor of the St. Francis were crowded last Friday afternoon when Eleanor Connell introduced her pupil, Miss Grace Boothe, to a musical and fashionable audience. The singer hails from New York and has a rich mezzo soprano of a sympathetic quality and extensive range. In her recital of the Love cycle by von Fielitz her middle and lower notes were especially fine. She has, too, a decidedly dramatic vein, temperament and an attractive presence. In all she sang seventeen numbers, all without notes, and the excellent training she has received deserves more than a passing word of praise. Hother Wismer and Mrs. Fannie Meyer Ellis gave their numbers in splendid style. Wismer's work is too well known to need much comment. Mrs. Ellis is a welcome member among local pianists and she will rank with the best.

The Arts and Crafts Concert

At the hall of The United Crafts and Arts, 2203 Central avenue, Dr. O. N. Orlow entertained several hundred guests on Tuesday evening of last week at a concert. #### Fanny Francisca's Concerts

The advance sale for Madame Fannie Francisca's concerts on Wednesday evening the twenty-first and Saturday afternoon the twenty-fourth will begin next Thursday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s music store. The prices are to be two dollars, one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents. Madame Francisca's concerts will be given under the direction of Ralph Pincus, the Columbia's press agent, who is thus launched upon the career of an impresario. Among the numbers to be heard at these two musical events will be arias from "Traviata," "Norma," "Herodiades," "Lucia de Lammermoor," "Rossignol," "Aida," "Faust," "Manon," "Romeo and Juliet," "Rigoletto" and "Tannhauser." Among the song numbers for the first concert will be Massenet's "Elegie," Mann's "Ontwaken," De L'Acqua's "Villanelle," Proch's Variations will also be heard and Liza Lehman's "The Cuckoo" will be sung by the songstress in her inimitable manner. Madame Francisca will render the mad scene from "Lucia" in costume.

In Alameda

At the Adelpian Club in Alameda, last Saturday's "open meeting" might have been termed "Sacramento day," there were so many representatives from the Capital present. Mrs. Walter S. Longbotham, formerly a resident of Sacramento but now of San Francisco, made the hit of the afternoon with her songs, "My Abode" by Schubert and "That Day" (Roma). Mrs. George Perry accompanied her, and the harmony of voice and piano was perfect. Mrs. Florence Jenkins Trost played two solos, and Colonel Weinstock delivered an address.

The Heinrich Recital

Max and Julia Heinrich gave an invitational song recital in Lyric hall last week, which drew an audience that filled every seat in the auditorium. The program consisted exclusively of Mr. Heinrich's compositions, many of which were marked by dramatic color and delightful harmony. Dora de Fillippe of the Tivoli sang three songs, and though nervousness detracted from the good effect of her solos she made a very pleasing impression.

The Jewish New Year

On Friday evening and Saturday of this week occurs the Jewish New Year festival, and Cantor Stark has as usual arranged a very fine musical program for the services at Emanu-El. The choir will be increased to twenty singers. The soloists, of the regular choir, are: Daisy Cohn, soprano, Mrs. H. Kelly, contralto, A. Macurda, tenor, Homer Henley, bass, W. A. Sabin, who returned from Europe this week, will preside at the organ. One of the features of the musical service is an elaborate New Year's hymn for soprano solo and chorus, composed by the Cantor for the occasion.

At the Pavilion on Monday night, in the California Commandery's section, the Roedel twins contributed to the program with some of their clever operatic selections. The twins will give a concert on September twenty-ninth at Y. M. C. A. Auditorium.

Mrs. Marriner-Campbell arranged the musical programs for the ladies' receptions at the Palace hotel during K. T. week. Some very fine talent took part in the programs.

Harry Girard, the baritone, formerly of this city but now of Seattle, has written a comic opera in collaboration with Joe Blethen, also of Seattle. It is titled "Admiral Att."

Take a Rest

A great many San Francisco people are planning to spend days and weeks during the Fall and Winter at Hotel Del Monte. No other resort in California offers such a combination of attractions—sea bathing, golf, automobilism, bowling, tennis, fishing, and all out-of-door sports. Instead of going from place to place seeking comforts, the wise ones of society spend their time at Del Monte by the sea. Address GEO. P. SNELL, Manager, Del Monte, California.

The following reliable testimonial speaks for itself:

"I take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful curative powers of Charles Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. For many years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and intestinal catarrh. My California physician brought up my case before the Congress of Homeopathic Physicians held in Chicago in 1901. An eminent specialist in intestinal diseases advised the use of Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. His advice was followed and I have been restored to health.

"Having been connected with schools I have also used Hydrozone with great efficacy on the pupils, in healing all kinds of skin troubles, from abscesses to poison oak.

taught in the Louis Crepau School, another and most important feature is the teaching of the English phonetic sounds. The study of the five vowels is not all that is necessary to sing in a language, and particularly so in English. Very few English-speaking people are able to sing the phonetics of their language exempt from throatiness. Fundamentally, English phonetics cannot be emitted in singing as uttered in speech. From a vocal standpoint and through ten years of experience in teaching English-speaking singers, Mr. Crepau has made a vocal classification of all the English phonetic sounds. This classification enables English-speaking singers to master all the English phonetic sounds and renders them harmonious and easy to sing.

Letters

"San Francisco and Thereabouts."

Now is an excellent time to call attention again to the volume issued a year ago by the California Promotion Committee. Its title, "San Francisco and Thereabouts," is explanatory, and its small size commends it to the traveling public, for whom it is primarily intended. The text is by Charles L. Keeler, and consists of about a hundred pages of reliable information concerning the city and its environs. Mr. Keeler has literally boiled down to the smallest compass the gist of all the history of San Francisco, from the discovery of the bay to date, and considering the mass of matter he had to select from he has succeeded remarkably well—so well that he commends himself to the attention of life-long residents as well as to casual visitors. Illustrations, which include street vistas, prominent buildings, bits of the park, glimpses of the water front, Berkeley, Stanford, Mount Tamalpais, Golden Gate and the ocean, are from photographs excellently executed. There are none of the usual "prominent citizens" and private residences, but all are of general and public interest. An excellent map of the country between Vallejo on the north and San Jose on the south completes the volume, which is at once a guide book and a souvenir, without the demerits usually inherent in both.

Irving Bacheller's new novel deals with the dawn of Christianity. It is a decided improvement on other books relating to the same period in one respect at least, for it does not serve up roast martyr in every page.

Harry Leon Wilson's third novel will shortly be before the public. It will bear no resemblance whatever to either "The Spenders" or "Lions of the Lord," but is said to be placed in a New England environment.

Amongst the announcements of fall books by the Macmillan Company is Gwendolen Overton's "Captains of the World." The theme is the time-honored one of wealth vs. poverty. The heroine is the daughter of a capitalist forced by parental authority into an engagement with a degenerate prince, and the hero a son of toil and a labor leader. The situation has been exploited so often that there does not seem to be room for much originality in the working out of the plot, but it is safe to leave the treatment to the author, who has proved her right ere this to use her pen. In this era of reprints, resurrections and new editions, would it not be a good idea to bring Miss Overton's first novel, "A Heritage of Unrest," before the public again? It is one of a number of good books lost sight of simply because the purveyors of poorer work out-shouted it in crying their wares in the book market.

Baroness Leslie de Bazus, who was Mrs. Frank Leslie, and betimes a sister-in-law of Oscar Wilde, has returned to America and announces her intention of again entering the publishing field. That she will make a success of her venture is a foregone conclusion to those who recall her experience in putting the Leslie publications on a sound financial footing after the syndicate proved itself incompetent.

John Vance Cheney has a new volume of poems out.

Some little while ago a volume of nonsense verse under the title of "Ruthless Rhymes for Heartless Homes" was put forth under the ostensible authorship of Colonel D. Screamer. The title is a sufficient indication of the character of the contents, and the book was widely noticed, and is not yet forgotten even in these days of rush. The authorship has just been revealed, and it turns out that Colonel D. Screamer and the perpetrator of the "Willy" poems are identical, and who, of all the world, but the scholarly and dignified Hamilton Wright Mabie, author of that exhaustive Shakespeare biography and so many volumes of cultured and literary essays and criticism. Another literary secret has also leaked out, and it is hardly less startling than the foregoing. The song, "The Prodigal Son," in the comic opera, "The Cadi," which Bill Nye disclaimed and which has been attributed to nearly every humorous verse writer in America, is a perpetration of the dignified lawyer, Samuel M. Gardenshire, author of the novel "Lux Crucis," which is as far from comic opera as one pole is from the other.

Other People's Ideas

From "Transition," by Emma Frances Brooke:

It is a frightful thing when a judgment against an idolized friend first darts into the mind; it is worse when we begin to be so conscious of it that we are in constant terrified expectation of its reappearance—as one is conscious of the grim thing hidden somewhere in the far-off chamber of a dream. But if, instead of gliding in to disappear again like some evil vermin leaving us scared and panting, it comes in bodily and takes possession of the very hearth, then, indeed, something like desolation has fallen.

Of the many spectres the worst is one's own character. There is no hope of ridding yourself of it. You are always hob-a-nob with it. It rises in the night to appall you—to tell you exactly what it requires of you, and precisely why you are predestined to failure. It sits down by you in the lonely evenings; it takes you by the arm and walks with you out of doors. It is a ghastly companion.

The one tremendous test of character is to harbor a dream sanely, and not to be driven by that disquieting and imitable presence beyond our poor, necessary limits, out to the unguided impulses beyond.

When one has black-marked an opinion with one's own discredit, it is not an uncommon error to suppose that one's friends will show timidity, or at least a delicate reserve in owning up to it—that they, at any rate, will have the civility to hedge and prevaricate.

There are vulgarities to which we give proud hospitality in our heart of hearts, and would not for the world thrust out in the nakedness of speech.

It is in effect more wretched to be wretched in a gala dress than in a common morning gown.

My ideal of a conversation has always been to have a distinguished man in a corner to myself—a man who will talk brilliantly, but who will never forget to introduce a soothing compliment every two or three minutes. I like to feel sure that I am not being ignored.

If telling things to people will do any practical good, that is a reason for telling. Otherwise I think unpleasant news is best kept to one's self.—Karol, in "Olive Latham," by Mrs. Voynich.

From F. Marion Crawford's "The Ralstons":

"... The almost impossible gulf which lies between the artist and the amateur who tries too late to become one—in whom the evidence of talent is made unrecognizable by an excess of conscientious but wholly misapplied labor. The amateur who has never studied at all may sometimes dash off a head with a few lines, which would be taken for the careless scrawling of a clever professional. But the amateur who, too late, attempts to perfect himself by sheer study and industry, is almost certainly lost as an artist—a fact which is commonly interpreted to mean that art itself comes by inspiration, and that so-called genius has no need of school, whereas it only means that if we go to school at all we must go at the scholar's age and get the tools of expression and learn to handle them before we have anything especial to express."

WHAT CAN I EAT?

NOTHING AGREES WITH ME.

Do you ever say that—do you ever feel that life isn't worth living because you are continually in pain, sick to your stomach and can't eat a single mouthful of any substantial food?

After you do eat a little do you feel a lump in your stomach? You know you have dyspepsia and you feel that nothing will cure you.

But there is a cure—a positive cure—a quick cure. That cure is Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers. They haven't been on the market long, but they are doing more for suffering humanity, people suffering with dyspepsia, than any medicine ever gotten out.

After taking a few of Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers you will be in a condition to eat everything—you will be strong and well again. No man or woman can expect to be healthy without proper amount of food every day and the proper digestion of this food.

Dyspepsia destroys all the agreeable qualities that enter into a man's or woman's make-up.

It is almost an impossibility for anyone with a severe case of dyspepsia to look pleasant. The continuous, miserable cast-down feeling is bound to make itself shown in appearance and conversation. Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers are the sufferers' certain cure.

Try one box of them and if you don't feel better you will be the first case up to the present time who has not been benefited. Price 50 cts. a box.

Our Degenerate Fair

A State Fair is unquestionably of great benefit to the State which makes provision for it. At a State Fair the people become acquainted with the products, both manufactured and agricultural, of their State; an incentive is given to the breeding of thoroughbred cattle; the races and road exhibitions arouse interest in beautiful horses and their performances, and the exhibition of manufactures and the products of different trades and callings not only assist business men in the sale of their wares, but induces the business man to improve his business. Time was when the California State Fair deserved and enjoyed the liberal patronage of the people. It was once a flourishing institution. In those days horse-racing conducted under its auspices was an honor to California. Enthusiasm was aroused and records were broken when Occident, Goldsmith's Maid and Autobolo were the stars of the Western turf. In those days the stock exhibitions were always good, and the pavilion exhibits were the crowning glory of the Fair. Every firm of importance in the State had its costly exhibit—it could not afford to neglect the opportunity of advertising its wares. The gates of the Fair were crowded with visitors. The evenings at the pavilion were social events; one could with difficulty progress through the vast crowds in the huge pavilion in the evening two decades ago. It is needless to say that the coffers of the State Agricultural Society were filled to overflowing. The State Fair was one of California's successful and appreciated public institutions.

The Political Blight

In time the political grafters discerned in the State Fair a fertile field for exploitation. The sordid statesman sought and obtained control of the State Agricultural Society. Its offices were soon distributed as political favors. In the gate keepers one recognized, in many instances, members of the political "push" of San Francisco. When the patrons of the institution discovered that the management of the Fair had fallen into the hands of the politicians, distrust arose, and it was charged that prizes were awarded for political "pull" and not for merit. To restore confidence the directors, three years ago, secured the services of Professor Carlisle, of the University of Wisconsin, in the capacity of stock judge, and his decisions have been unquestioned. He has restored confidence, but the old-time enthusiasm has not been awakened. The apathy resulting from years of mismanagement has grown more pronounced. The merchants have with the passing of years exhibited less and less of their wares, until now hardly any of the big firms of the State make suitable displays. The most distressing evidence of the bad management of the Fair is shown by the wholly inadequate display of the fruit products of the State. In times past the fruit exhibit was one of the most attractive features. This year it was hard to find and was utterly unworthy of quest. The one redeeming feature of the Fair which closed last week was the really admirable stock exhibit. It invoked high encomiums, but alas! the spectators were few.

A Hopeless Prospect

The retrogression of the Fair has been largely due to the importance given to the gambling fraternity, and the auctioneering off of the privilege to sell pools on the race course. The Fair has been put into the hands of race-horse gamblers. Complaint is made that they are licensed to rob the public, and that fair betting percentages are not charged the buyers of pools. The patrons of the sport say that they are victimized by the gamblers, and therefore the race course is not patronized. During the last days of the Fair this year the money taken in at the gates was not sufficient to pay the purses advertised. Prominent horse owners no longer attend the Fair, and the races have consequently degenerated into second-class performances. The natural consequence of the indifference of the people has been an annual balance on the wrong side of the ledger. The State Agricultural Society has been going into debt. The Legislature at each biennial session has been asked to make good the deficit. This last Fair has put the society in a worse plight than it was ever in. It will be obliged to sell its park at Sacramento, and this coming winter it will go before the Legislature and humbly ask for such crumbs as the people's representatives will be pleased to give out of the State taxes. The people of Sacramento have taken to "knocking" the Fair. They say it is bound to fail, that it is not worth seeing, and they no longer invite their friends there during the season. The merchants of Sacramento withhold their support and patronage. It is impossible to imagine a more hopeless situation or a more uninviting prospect than that presented by the California State Fair.

White on Roosevelt

The Republican campaign orators and the writers of Republican campaign literature are putting great emphasis on President Roosevelt's uncompromising honesty, which was signally manifested in his attitude toward the thieves in the Post Office Department. While it is true that some of the thieves were exposed and punished we distinctly recall that Democratic statesmen were most insistent in their demand for the turning out of the rascals, and that the investigation was conducted in such a manner as to protect the Republican party as much as possible from humiliation. In the current number of McClure's appears an article from the pen of Mr. William Allen White, an intimate friend of the President, in which he tells how Mr. Roosevelt purged the Post Office Department of corruption despite the protests of distinguished Republican statesmen. He relates that Congressmen and Senators came "storming to the White House" in behalf of one boodler; that they "begged for mercy" and then threatened, but all in vain. Mr. White doubtless writes on the authority of the President, and his article is therefore shockingly candid and its effect is disillusionment. The President's eulogists have always pictured him as a man of unflinching moral as well as physical courage, and yet his friend, Mr. White, tells us that Republican statesmen had the temerity to storm into the White House and make degrading propositions to him. If what Mr. White says is true then Mr. Roosevelt, to whom Senators and Congressmen dared address supplications and threats in behalf of common boodlers, is not all that his panegyrists have proclaimed him. We have long been of the opinion that the man who pronounced Matt Quay an exemplar of all the political virtues was something of a poseur; that his morality was largely banalistic, and that his attitudinizing was purely theatric, but we did not expect to have our views confirmed during the campaign by the testimony of his friends. Mr. White has not only frankly reflected discredit on Mr. Roosevelt, but he has launched an indictment against the Republican party which, if we are to judge from his authoritative utterances, has reached a sad state of demoralization. It would be difficult to escape from that conclusion if we give credence to the accusation made by Mr. White against leading Republican statesmen.

Collapse of Hill

Politicians are the same the world over. They all practice the same arts and devices; they resort to the same subterfuges, deal in the same casuistries and follow the same devious paths. The ward boss develops into the State leader who in turn rises to the dignity of a national chairman, but in the evolution there is no chastening process. The other day David B. Hill announced that he would retire from politics on January first, 1905. The purpose of the announcement was clear. It was to disabuse the public mind of the idea that in the event of Parker's election Hill would enter the President's Cabinet. He knows that his intimacy with Parker is damaging to the Parker cause. How humiliating is his plight! How striking the resemblance to that of Gavin McNab, who meekly submitted to Lane's repudiation of him in the gubernatorial campaign! Hill is only a McNab on a big scale. He has always had a genius for rounding up cheap supporters. He could never tolerate men who would not be subservient to him. His selfishness and his intolerance are his greatest weaknesses. He is a man without vices, but neither has he any virtues. Rightly or wrongly, everything he says or does is viewed with suspicion. When he said that he had been fully rewarded by his party for all the services he had given to it, he prevaricated. He longed to be President, and though he is a man of great mental force, and though he vindicated his capacity as a statesman in the Senate of his country, so obvious was his unmorality that he became obnoxious to his party and a menace to every cause that he espoused. It has become apparent even to himself that he is an impossibility, and to relieve his friend from embarrassment he has declared his intention to quit the game that has been the one absorbing element of his life.

The Benighted Japs

The army of special correspondents and photographers in the Far East is rapidly disintegrating. Every steamer from the Orient has a few of the disappointed ones among the passengers, and all are prepared to fill reams of paper with entertaining accounts of what they did not see of the progress of the war. The probability is that when the unpleasantness is over General Oyama will submit to being interviewed in Tokio, and then we may be told how it was done. Or perhaps Oyama will emulate the heroes of Santiago, and turn correspondent in his lighter hours. But meanwhile the correspondents and photographers are in sore distress. During the Spanish war they were led to believe that their presence was essential to successful campaigning. No officer thought of going into battle without first fearlessly facing the camera's mouth. The biograph man was always given a passport to the firing line. Generals were interviewed before and after. The press and the military were cheek by jowl in every scrimmage. In Manchuria it has been demonstrated that the publicity department is unnecessary. The battle of Liau Yang was witnessed by Richard Harding Davis at a distance of eight miles, and when he complained about straining his eyesight the distance was courteously cut to four miles. But when Kuropatkin's campaign went to pieces there was not a photographer in sight. The correspondents have attempted to tell us how Oyama's strategy was carried; that while he hammered at the front of the enemy he sent Kuroki to the northeastward to turn Kuropatkin's flank, but the newspaper accounts are vague. It is evident that the correspondents are theorizing. The details of a strategic move are to be observed but faintly at a distance of eight miles. The story that the Mikado's men captured abandoned cannon and used them to shell the "retiring" enemy is refreshing, but inconsistent with Kuropatkin's official report to St. Petersburg that he lost not a single cannon. It was the only boast he could make, but the correspondents in Manchuria were not in touch with St. Petersburg. They have to make a showing to earn their salaries, and in view of the unconventional prejudice of the Japanese, it must be acknowledged that they have been doing very well.

Mahaffey Flouts the Bible

The latest smart man to pronounce the Bible uninspired is Doctor Mahaffey, a noted Dublin theologian. He does not pretend that God has taken him into His confidence for the purpose of disclosing that the Bible is merely the product of human effort, but he argues that it does not bear the ear-marks of divine inspiration. Other smart men have done the same thing, and they used more persuasive arguments than does Doctor Mahaffey. He says that it is a sort of patchwork emanating from many sources in the East, and he cannot observe anything in it suggestive of the handiwork of God. Greater literary critics than Mahaffey have thought otherwise, and the very circumstance of the variety of sources of the Scriptures operated in convincing them of their divine origin. The sacred books were composed by twenty authors, living at periods very distant from one another, and though the styles are as numerous as the authors, they are all equally inimitable, and are not to be found in any other literary performance. And this remarkable originality of style is a striking feature of the New Testament, so different in its spirit from the Old. Is there nothing impressive in these extraordinary circumstances? The sacred books of infidel nations present no such phenomenon. From the Zendavesta to the Koran eminent scholars have traced a resemblance in tone and idea. Through the Sanscrit poems and the maxims of Confucius a perfect chain of human ideas is to be found. They do not, as the Bible does, anticipate every situation in life, every possible contingency in human affairs, nor do they supply the groundwork of all human sciences, political precepts for all forms of government that have ever existed, or moral precepts applicable to every station of society. There is much in the Bible to marvel at, but nothing that should excite so much wonder or such profound admiration as the effect of the work on humanity. The contemplation of that achievement should give the skeptic pause, or at least falter the cocksureness of a Mahaffey.

Paper Tourists

An enterprise which is said not to languish for lack of patronage is reported to be doing a flourishing business in the East. It is called the Paper Travel Company. If you wish to travel but haven't the price they will give verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and unconvincing narrative. In other words, they supply the name for those who cannot afford to enjoy the game. All people have to do is put themselves in communication with the concern and map out an itinerary. They are then furnished with colored post cards on which they write messages to such friends as they care to communicate with, return them with a sum sufficient to cover expenses to the company, and betake themselves to some quiet retreat where no one is likely to disturb their solitude. The post cards, meantime, are forwarded to agents at the specified places, to be mailed in regular fashion and receive a genuine post mark. The scheme is said to find special favor with honeymoon couples, some of whom cannot afford to wander at will yet do not care to confess their impecuniosity to the world, and others whose desire is to escape the unpleasant notoriety that modern custom sanctions, in making harmless people ridiculous before strangers. There was an institution of this kind in Paris a few years ago, and it is not likely to have gone out of business, but the patrons were drawn from a different class. Frisky married people were credited with leaving conjugal epistles to be mailed from the towns where business called or mamma's sudden illness summoned. In all the large cities of the world those who know how may obtain genuine foreign transportation labels to be affixed to home-staying trunks and valises. And after all, it is only an advance on the old idea of boarding up the front door and darkening the windows in order to give an impression of a summer sojourn at seaside or mountains, or of sending announcements to the social columns of a trip to Coronado or Del Monte, when Oakland is the real destination.

The Ruthless Iconoclast

One of the new Macmillan books to be issued before Christmas is a juvenile, by Jacob A. Riis, "Is there a Santa Claus?" an answer to a letter written to the author by some children. It is sincerely to be hoped that Mr. Riis has declared in favor of the children's saint. There are so few illusions left in these days of sophistication that one pities the poor little men and women who know all about everything, and see double meanings where none were intended. The world was none the worse for the generations who believed in Robinson Crusoe and hoped some day to duplicate the experiences of the Swiss Family. When William Tell was something more than a sun myth and "Sing a Song of Sixpence" and the four and twenty blackbirds were not identified with the hours of the day, and fairies came and danced in the moonlight after little folks were safely abed, and when Gulliver really went on those wonderful voyages and Sinbad and Aladdin were somewhere in the world, life was less dreary. The modern tendency is to squeeze every orange, prick every bubble, show the sawdust stuffing in every doll, and then wonder at the blase indifference of children. The poet Tennyson, shortly before his death, took one of his young relatives for a walk, during the course of which he pointed out a fairy ring, but young England, like young America, was sophisticated. He promptly demolished that superstitious folly by a dissertation on fungoid growths—and was never asked to go walking again. Children do not really believe in Santa Claus so much as they want to believe in him. They are not deceived, but they heartily wish they were, and though they are satisfied in their own minds that it cannot be, they do not want their doubt confirmed in words. So please, Mr. Riis, never mind the facts or the moralities of the rigidly righteous, for if there is no Santa Claus there surely ought to be.

Missionary Graft in the Orient

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

"Graft in our hearts the love of thy Name; increase in us true religion."—Book of Common Prayer.

GRAFTER: One who grafts or inserts scions in foreign stocks. —Century Dictionary.

The so-called "foreign missionary" who labors in the Oriental vineyard is, of necessity, either a fool or a knave—a fanatic or a grafter. I have met both sorts during my wanderings in China and Japan. I was particularly interested in the subject of missionary effort abroad because I had previously been impressed by the inadequate results accruing from the same intention at home. It had always been a source of wonderment to me why men and women sought to coax or compel the heathen of China, for instance, to adopt our religion and civilization, when our own heathen were so greatly in need of the same uplifting, regenerating, and admonitory influence. Why, I questioned, should these people go to other lands to save souls and cure bodies while their own people were suffering the ills that missionaries thought it their duty to alleviate in the alien?

I think I have found the answer to my question, and it is my belief that I can prove that the foreign missionary in China is either a fool who imagines that he has a "call" to "convert" four hundred million philosophers from a philosophy five thousand years old to a blind faith in a religion of yesterday, or that he is a "grafter" pure and simple, openly and unashamedly serving the mammon of unrighteousness for the highest wages of sin that his ability, his cunning, and his unscrupulous cleverness may command.

Bear with me a moment before I proceed to specific examples, while I exploit a theory. In the science of physics it is an axiom that the larger body always attracts the smaller. And in chemistry it is a fundamental principle that the precipitate is absorbed by the liquid solution. I claim that the same laws will operate in precisely the same manner when applied in the moral environment of human affairs. China is the largest homogeneous aggregation of humanity—it comprises about one-third of the earth's inhabitants. Originally the Chinese were a congeries of independent tribes. One of these tribes finally conquered all the others into a vast dynasty. This dynasty was overthrown and another erected on the ruins. Other tribes were gathered into the original mass. Then came the Mongols and the Tartars, who conquered the Chinese and ruled over them through many dynasties. When the Manchus, three hundred years ago, conquered the Mings, they found the Mongols and Tartars firmly amalgamated with the Chinese—a race out of which all composite features had been eliminated and into which all diverse elements had been absorbed. This vast ocean of humanity had swallowed millions of human beings and not a bubble marked the place where they had disappeared—the surface was as serene as the placid expanse of the great lakes of Hupeh and Hunan. The Manchus, distinctively such, were at the beginning a tribe numbering twenty or thirty millions. After the lapse of only three centuries of contact with the Chinese they number less than five millions. They are distinctive at this time solely because they are the governing power—a condition factitious rather than real, a supremacy that is tolerated by the Chinese because the mass of the people regard the aliens as virtually a part of themselves.

As it has been with nations and tribes so it is with individuals. Sir Robert Hart, head of the customs service of China, is seventy years old; he has been in this service nearly half a century. Sir Robert Hart is a Chinese of the Chinese. He thinks Chinese. He talks in the manner of a Chinese. His habits are the same as those of the mandarin class of Chinese. Ask him a simple question and he will answer indirectly—after the formula of the Chinese. So completely has he departed from the heredity, traditions, and methods of his own race that his wife, Lady Hart, will not live with him. They have been separated nearly a score of years, and neither of them yearns for the companionship of the other. Sir Robert Hart has been absorbed by the Chinese.

Dr. William A. Martin, formerly president of the Imperial University of Peking, now at the head of Chang Chi-tung's college at Wuchang, is another instance of this absorption. Possibly Dr. Martin is unconscious of the fact that he is Chinese, but it is a fact nevertheless, as can be testified by any Anglo-Saxon who comes in contact with him. He has been so many years a part of the people that he has lost his identity as an American of good old Dutch-English stock. Dr. Martin and Sir Robert Hart can understand each other better than they can understand their own race and kindred and the Chinese know Sir Robert Hart and Dr. Martin better than they can know any foreigner who comes among them temporarily.

I could cite a hundred instances of this process of racial absorption as I observed it in China. In our own country it requires at least three generations to obliterate all traces of racial atavism; in China a single generation is sufficient to accomplish this result.

All of which is merely preliminary to the only valid excuse I have found for the missionary grafter. I am willing to admit that he may have begun his work in China honestly, sincerely, thoroughly imbued with the high aspirations of a Christian civilization; but in a great many instances he has finally come to the Oriental way of thinking and the Chinese point of view. He has been absorbed by the Chinese majority.

The so-called "regeneration" of China and other pagan Oriental countries would have been accomplished upon the basis of their own ethical formula if such regeneration were needed. I am not prepared to say that these peoples are more in need of this regenerative process than are the nations of the West who are sending missionaries to "convert" this brand of heathen. Out of the negative precepts of Confucianism and the mysticism of Buddhism has been framed the affirmative propositions of the Christian cult. "Do nothing unto others that you would not have them do unto you," said the Master who taught his disciples in the Middle Kingdom nearly five hundred years before the coming of another Master who said: "Do unto others as you would have them do to you." Surely, if the people are unregenerate it is not the fault of the Teacher, and certainly no other teacher from a foreign land can save them from their error. Especially futile must be the effort of men who, in their daily lives, stultify every high principle of their teaching.

Is it not foolish, then, to seek to turn these people from "the error of their ways" by preaching a code of morals not at all distinctive from that already ingrained on their hearts by centuries of repetition, while at the same time the preacher practices all the vices embodied in the definition of greed, fraud, luxury, vanity, arrogance, tyranny and all uncharitableness?

It is my purpose, along the lines of this introduction, to demonstrate from my personal observation and the testimony of competent witnesses, that the evangelical missionary movement in China and Japan is an absolute failure as far as its original intention is concerned; furthermore it is my purpose to show that this failure is largely due to the incompetency and dishonesty of the agents engaged in this work. I shall then ask the various missionary boards in this country to investigate my assertions, on condition that when they have found my statements to be based on truth and fact, they will either reform or abolish a system that is working great evil not only upon the people of the Orient but also on the material interests of those whose business compels them to have dealings with that people.

Why It's Not Exciting

BY ROBERT MACE.

In his speech to the editors from the South, at Rosemount last week, Judge Parker complained of the apathy of the Democracy. From his remarks it is evident that California is not the only State in which there is a lack of enthusiasm. The Democratic standard-bearer feels that something should be done to arouse his party from its torpor, to thaw its frigidity. But nothing is being done. Indeed, the whole campaign appears to be falling flat. There is not the slightest bit of excitement. The people seem to have lost interest in the great quadrennial national drama. The action has begun to drag, and there is not the slightest promise of a thrill. But it is not hard to account for the air of indifference that pervades the nation. The people are yawning because the motif is tame; the essential element of conflict is absent; the issue between the two parties has become more imaginary than real. In the reaction from Bryanism and its fads, follies and fictions, the Democracy became abnormally sane. In its eagerness for a certificate of character, it plunged inopportunely into conservatism, at a time when the Republican party was dominated by a man more democratic in sentiment than many of the leaders of the disinfected Democracy. In the absence of a topical issue resulting from an important dissonance of vital principle, it was resolved to make personality the basis of contest. It was apparent that tariff reduction was impossible without Republican consent and that imperialism was moribund. Believing that Roosevelt had alienated the financial powers it was resolved to cater to capital and win its support. To that end the income tax issue was dropped and the silver issue was dodged. There was nothing left but fundamentals, and as to them Roosevelt's attitude is Jeffersonian. But the hope of the new Democracy was in the Captains of Industry, the men who rule Wall street and who were believed to be eager to get behind some sane and safe Democrat who would not "disturb the business interests." They were represented to be eager to smash Roosevelt for interfering in the coal strike and setting a dangerous precedent; also for attacking the trusts, and for threatening to make the "big stick" a factor in international complications. Now it appears that the Democracy was handed a gold brick.

It looks very much as though the opposition to Roosevelt was feigned for the purpose of persuading the leaders at St. Louis to "turn down" the radical element. If the party was not led into a trap, it was at least coaxed into a fatal blunder. In turning the party management over to the Hill-Belmont faction the St. Louis Convention alienated a powerful element and scored not a single point. Subsequent developments demonstrated the folly of its appeal to Capital, and it is now too late to conciliate the hosts of Organized Labor, or the hordes of long-haired Populists.

What a wonderful personality is that of President Roosevelt! And how unfortunate it was for the Democracy to make it the issue of this campaign! With all his positiveness, his impulsiveness and his aggressiveness, he has managed to retain the confidence of those two powerful conflicting elements—organized capital and organized labor. Gallery player though he undoubtedly is, it must be confessed that he has made good. Obvious though his acting is, it has stirred the public pulse, and aroused the sympathetic emotions of the people. Crude though his craftsmanship, it is convincing. Full of inconsistencies though his record has been, wide though the variance between his professions and performances, so strong is public faith in his earnestness and in the virtue of his intentions that he has declined imperceptibly in the estimation of the people.

The Roosevelt personality does not appeal to me. I cannot convince myself that he is not a man of expedients rather than of principles. I believe that at heart he is a patriot; that he began his public career imbued with the fervor of an idealist, and inspired by the noblest civic virtues. And I also believe that when he became President by accident he amended his code of ethics. Ambitious of being elected President by the people, he took a few lessons in practical politics from Mr. Elihu Root, and presently the chaste reformer, the ardent idealist, began mending his fences. Suddenly his attitude toward the forces of evil changed. The uncompromising exponent of purity became preoccupied with sociological questions. He deplored race suicide and other nonsense. He cultivated the friendship of Mark Hanna, and when Matt Quay died he wrote a panegyric of that self-confessed reprobate. It is not a heinous crime to praise the dead, even though the dead be undeserving, but President Roosevelt's eulogy of Matt Quay was a most vicious utterance, dignified as it was by its exalted authority, and false as it was in its appraisal. Matt Quay was not devoid of traits worthy of laudation, and it was therefore unnecessary to ascribe to him virtues that he had not. The President of the United States is expected to safeguard the public morals, and when he praises a notorious corruptionist for his faithful public service he is guilty of an offense against decency, and of a dangerous perversion.

However, President Roosevelt exercises something in the nature of an hypnotic influence over the people. He has made many star plays in his time, and the people like him for his strenuousness. He is always doing things that attract attention. He isn't afraid to play the bull in the China shop, and there is a charm in his very unconventionality. Despite his swashbuckling aggressiveness he has not hurt anybody seriously. The Trusts seem to understand him. The "business interests" are not afraid of him. They seem to be willing that he should flirt with labor unions. Perhaps the people could be educated up to a preference for a more conservative and dignified President, but so far little progress has been made in spreading the light. Judge Parker is the pet candidate of Joseph Pulitzer of the New York World, who is trying to arouse enthusiasm. Pulitzer favored Parker in order to beat Hearst, and now it looks as though the latter is quite willing to let his rival have full swing. Before the close of the campaign people will begin contrasting the weakness of Pulitzer's methods with the strength of Hearst's. Even the latter's enemies will admit that when it comes to arousing popular enthusiasm he is without a peer among the newspaper proprietors of this country.

And Then?

BY HARRY COWELL.

A natural post-death existence being among the possibilities of things, it might not be altogether amiss to remind playwrights, novelists, and the rest of us whose characteristic conduct these super-men aim to represent, that this apparent solution by dying of difficult problems of living is far from satisfactory. It is all very well to kill a character in a tight place with the neatest artistry imaginable; and having prepared the spectator for the taking off, it would of course be highly illogical and in the worst possible literary taste, or what you will, not to cut the Gordian-knots of life with the convenient sickle; death, too, is a great curtain, the greatest; but when, say, Sudermann's lady who has such wild joy of living drinks dramatically to life and dies, I have an inexcusable habit of feeling cheated, of desiring to go behind the scenes and see the sequel. In fancy I create for myself a problem play of the Beyond, where it is not possible for polite literary men to open the door of death for a lady in a difficulty. Nor will any cheap choosing of the husband suffice, nor, for that matter, any cheap choosing of the lover.

It was the sweet wont of the elder novelists to end the last volume of the mystic three with marriage—just where the difficulty begins; the brave moderns begin with the difficulty and—get out of it by death. And then—what? Suppose we take a step farther; begin where the brave moderns end.

For the sake of argument, or rather, for the sake of letting me have my little say, be it granted that the scheme of things includes a post-death existence—perfectly natural—where, as here, Love, the incorrigible, ties up the lives of men and women in strange tangles and leaves the untying of many a black knot to no paternal Providence, but, if you please, to the involved men and women themselves. This is, I need hardly say, a speculation pour passer le temps and in no wise one of those too prevalent speculations of the "Immortality of the Soul," that raise the cry of "Police! police!" on the part of the reader. And yet no moralist was ever more disenchantingly in earnest than am I when I asseverate that this dodging of the main issues of life by death is not at all to my liking. To tell the truth, when I give my mare Fancy her head, and we follow a character thus far, we take the Styx at a bound, and the chase bids fair to last into infinity.

Mind you, I make no pretense of seeing farther than the rest of my blind brethren. To me, as to other men, a mystery is a mystery. Death, a woman, each a dread thing, a divine, hiding a possible heaven. Beauty itself is ever a Beyond, at best but half seen; naked, it makes for itself in the beholding eye a veil, of wonderful woof and warp. When the soul of a woman must to her eyes, the love mists gather there to obscure it somewhat even in the sight of adoration. The moon is surpassing beautiful because she is, as it were, man's memory of the sun. The ugliness of the known is a pou stou for the pessimists. On the beauty of the unknown optimism might make a well-nigh immovable stand. That reminds me. What I started out in my modesty to say was that Herbert Spencer and I are equally ignorant of the unknown; but I am one of your walkers that will not keep the high road; if a flower beckons or a hill-top invites, off I go, forgetful that I drag all reluctant along with me the busy reader of today, who is for making his journey's end in the directest way possible.

As regards the unknown, then, Herbert Spencer and I are a pair of ignoramuses, or agnostics, if you prefer the euphemistic Greek. It pleases me, however, to speculate. I amuse me in my unphilosophical moments by asking: "Does the suicide escape from himself?" "It is all very fine," say I to myself, "shut the dread door in the face of the Past, but when you go through, does not the Past go with you?" "Do you not go through with yourself?" I ask me, as an Irishman may. "When we send our murderers emigrating to the Country of Conjecture, contrary to all gentle usage and in violation of the plainest precepts of international ethics, do we really lessen the number of evil-doers in the universe?" If I say that at times I seem to hear the spirits of a multitude of murderers storming like a malevolent wind through the vast spaces of the Beyond—hard to house as a wind—you must remember that I am no accredited criminologist, but an irresponsible speculator seeking in out-of-the-way places a pastime for you and me.

Not infrequently for my own divertimento I make me post-death plays—everything as natural as life—sequels to plays that have not been acted out to the bitter end—or to the sweet, as the case may be—"And Then?" plays, the comedy and tragedy therein laughing and weeping as they will, with never so much as a "by your leave, Mrs. Grundy." Naturally, I allow Love in my Beyond and his shadow, Jealousy; and the marrying and giving in marriage of her whom seven had to wife. Post-death problem plays were otherwise impossible. For choice I take a problem so difficult that Death has been called upon to solve it, and now, not only still unsolved but curiously complicated by the subsequent conduct of survivors until they in their turn went the way of all flesh—to say nothing of that of the departed (with the help of the original playwright)—I present it to the principals for solution. It is as good as a Pinero or a Sudermann to see them! They—that is, the survivors—thought the whole business settled by death, and lo, the muddle is worse than ever,—Providence not a bit more impertinent in love affairs than here below, in fact, as polite as you please. O, good Lord, the laughter, and, Mary have mercy, the tears! Think of it; 'tis enough to make a Moliere out of a Methodist minister.

I hope with all my heart that the materialists, like many other wiseacres, will wake up in wonderment to find themselves mistaken: an infinity of smiles is in the comedy of the golden streets. Rather than miss being a boulevardier of my Beyond, I would agree to be good from now on even to the end of my this-side days; and being good is an arduous business, I can tell you, and dull as ditchwater withal. But thither—that is, to my Beyond—go the bad and the good in incongruous company, and there (no impassable gulf between) endlessly jostle elbows and make strange meetings. Ah me, impious that I am, boulevardier of the Beyond, likewise personne qui bouleverse, reaching my gyveless hand across the years, across the waters, dark, deep and wonderful, to filch me quaint felicities of a Paradise of Peradventure! But though there be the devil to pay, I will be "And then?-ing"—a pastime, ladies and gentlemen, highly diverting,—not for saints, who, poor things, have no pastimes, but for sinners like you and me.

Who Pays?

Who is it that pays
For the words that are uttered in careless jest,
For the vows that are soon forgotten,
For happiness stirring some vagrant breast,
For the slight of the lips that were once caressed.
For the unfulfilled hopes and the sad delays?
Some one pays!

Who is it that pays
For the faith that is held at the joyous start
Of a love that is quickly ended?
Who dreams that the debt of a truant heart
Will not have to be met, in its smallest part,
Will but find that whenever the piper plays
Some one pays.

Who is it that pays
For the glitter and sparkle of Vanity Fair,
For the pomp and the vulgar showing?
One half of the world must their muscles bare
That a few of the favored may feel no care—
For their languorous nights and their useless days,
Some one pays.

Who is it that pays
When the frightened hills echo a battle cry
And strange dew on the grass is shining?
A trumpet of death is a monarch's sigh,
But new subjects are born while the old ones die.
Be it he who is slain or the one who slays
Some one pays.

The Saunterer

Clough on the Missionaries

With this issue Town Talk begins the publication of a series of articles from the pen of that forceful and brilliant journalist, Mr. Edwin Clough, on the subject of the missionaries in the Orient. Mr. Clough returned a few weeks ago from the Far East after a sojourn there of nearly two years, during which period he had ample opportunity to study the missionary in his pet and profitable field of endeavor. It is now his purpose to convince the people who supply the sinews of religious propagation in foreign lands that they are not getting their money's worth. Hints to that effect have been frequently given, and the missionaries have always been quick to resent imputations of their zeal and industry. Mr. Clough will not deal in hints. He has facts to present for the illumination of a most interesting theme. He will show that since the time of Father Ricci, who wrote moral works in the language of Confucius, there has been a dampening of that divine enthusiasm which animated the apostles of old, who went in quest of souls that languished in the darkness of idolatry; who spent their lives in civilizing the heathen, instructing the ignorant, curing the sick, clothing the poor and sowing the seeds of peace and harmony among hostile nations.

Left-Handed Support

The Examiner is keeping its record clean most adroitly these days. It is supporting the Democratic party with all the fervor that the Democracy deserves at the hands of Mr. Hearst. Having experienced the ingratitude of the plain people, Mr. Hearst is now devoting his newspapers to the dissemination of news. His espousal of Democratic principles is as warm as ever, but he is not wasting any ink boosting Democratic candidates. Judge Maguire opened the campaign in Los Angeles last week, and the Examiner published the news back among the market reports, giving it no more prominence than it was entitled to in a disinterested newspaper. Mr. Livernash is running for Congress, but if you watch the Examiner's columns closely you will find that he isn't getting as much space as he was vouchsafed two years ago. The whole Examiner force was for him then, but times have changed. The paper is for him now, but nearly the entire office staff is hoping that he will be walloped by attorney Will Davis of the Harbor Commission, who is scheduled for the Republican nomination. Livernash was formerly an Examiner reporter, and when he opened his political career everybody, from the managing editor to the smallest office boy, was out rounding up votes for him. After his election he opposed the reorganization movement started by his friends in the Examiner office, and since then they have been longing for a chance to prick the bubble of his political ambition. He is still friendly with Hearst, and the latter recently wired Mayor Schmitz requesting that Livernash be given the Labor Party endorsement. The request will be granted, but Abe Ruef will swing the labor push for the Republican candidate.

A Little History

Two years ago the McNab element of the Democratic party was against Livernash, and one night at a public meeting the champion of organized labor took occasion to link the names of McNab and Ruef in a most uncomplimentary manner. Both the bosses were in the audience and their choler was stirred. Subsequently they held an indignation meeting for the discussion of Livernash. Now the latter is relying on McNab for support, and rejoicing over the prospect of being endorsed by Ruef's wing of the Labor Party.

Sentiment Against Bell

The Examiner is also for Congressman Bell, who was a protege of that paper two years ago. During his campaign two years ago the Examiner boomed him from start to finish and flouted his opponent into obscurity. He was given space which, if it had been purchasable, could not have been bought for less than twenty-five thousand dollars. In Washington jealousy sprung up between Bell and Livernash, and Hearst sympathized with his ex-reporter. Later on, when Hearst wanted an instructed delegation to St. Louis, Bell was against the proposition. Now Duncan McKinlay is running against Bell and everybody in the Examiner office is working for the Republican. Hearst controls the policy of his paper, but not the sentiments of the men on his pay-roll.

Strategic Prevarication

Though nobody doubts that Roosevelt will carry this State, the Republican campaign managers are not taking any chances. They are ever on the alert for opportunities to cinch matters. The other day they started the report that Franklin K. Lane had been assured that he would be appointed to the Cabinet in the event of Parker's election. Of course no such assurance has been given, but the cunning strategists of the Republican campaign committee do not scruple at discrediting the Democratic standard bearer by the dissemination of white lies.

Reinstatement of Knowlton

Very sympathetic has been the Schmitz-Ruef oligarchy to the cast-offs of political machines that have gone before and to pieces. In the upbuilding of the Schmitz-Ruef machine many political has-beens have found a new lease of life. One of the latest to enjoy revivication is Ebenezer Knowlton, who was reinstated in the School Department last week. He was not given his old important position but he was made teacher of the foreign adult class in the Richmond evening school. Knowlton is a veteran educator but he lacks discretion. Being a man of family, he considered himself privileged to admonish little girls in a motherly way. But their mothers objected. They said that as he was not a doctor he had no right to talk to them about what they should wear and how they should conserve their health. It was also said that he often told his pupils stories that could not be repeated at home. His friends said that he meant well but that he was a little too far ahead of his time. So he was retired, very much against his will.

The Examination Fake

From the amount of attention that was given to the frauds, or alleged frauds, in the examinations held by the Board of Pharmacy, a stranger might have been led to suppose that public examinations had heretofore been conducted under such a system of rigid and uncompromising honesty that such a thing as illegal assistance, either from the authorities in charge or from fellow examiners was unheard of in our history. Yet, as a matter of fact, the only time that public examinations are free from fraud is when there has not been time to work up a practicable scheme for beating the game. It is not many weeks ago since it was discovered that the questions to be used in a civil service contest were conveniently left where interested parties could have uninterrupted access long enough to make copies, to be peddled about to those willing to pay for advance information, and while San Francisco remains on the map the memory of the colossal school certificate scandal will not fade.

Some Ways That Are Dark

There is always communication and collusion in some shape, more or less open. Books or notes are carried into the examination room, those in charge will manage to convey information, or there will be open communication between examinees. It is always understood that certain ones must pass, by fair means or foul, and the simplest plan to follow is to do one's best and remain oblivious to surroundings. To make complaint is only to call down wrath and have one's motives brought into question, so that if signals are made, or notes flipped under one's nose, or the examiners bend affectionately over favored ones and take notes which will help to identify papers, or the whispering becomes so loud and insistent as to call for a request for silence, the wisest course is to accept matters as they are, for they assuredly will not be modified for any one without a pull, while it is reasonably certain that it is just the exertion of pull that makes them as they are. It may be, probably is, quite true, that no one is ever marked down to prevent him from passing, but it is equally true that special advantages are offered to those who are scheduled for success.

There is a satisfaction in getting your Glasses from an old established, reliable house—where you know there is a guarantee that protects you.

An Historic Episode

Just after the big scandal in the school department, when the questions for the quarterly examinations had been all but peddled on the public streets, a wave of purity was supposed to have washed all clean. A daughter of one of the directors was a candidate at the next inquisition, and much to the surprise of her father, she had been treated like an ordinary individual, with the result that her markings were quite low in some branches. He indignantly demanded of a member of the Board of Examiners a reason why "this was thus," quoting the opinions of various educators as to his daughter's perfections. Without knowing anything personally about the young lady's qualifications in general, or the manner of her answering the questions asked, the pliant tool apologized for the inadvertence, whipped out her pencil, and without so much as a glimpse of the reverse side of the papers, changed the recorded percentage to something more in keeping with what the daughter of a director was entitled to. On another occasion, when appointments were popularly believed to be given to the one standing first in a competitive contest, a relative of another director was one of the contestants. Before the examination took place, presumably before the questions to be propounded had been compiled, a member of the board, in a casual conversation, inadvertently let slip the information that "Miss ——— must get that position," and get it she did, for of course good care was taken that she came out ahead. There is never anything accomplished by these investigations but the airing of a scandal. Methods may be changed but results remain the same. Pull is all potent, and the kicker is blacklisted. In the end he has to accept the situation, and he may as well do that at first, but meantime the wisest way is to keep quiet and cultivate a pull.

That Anaconda Deal

Some weeks ago I called attention to the Lawson narrative in Everybody's of the Anaconda deal by which the Standard Oil magnates secured possession of the famous mine. And I wrote that if Lawson's story was true, Mr. Haggin and the Tevis heirs had a good cause of action against the Rockefellers, for according to the Boston millionaire Daly defrauded his partners, and the Standard Oil people were cognizant of the deception. But neither Haggin nor the Tevis heirs have shown any disposition to recover the money out of which they were said to have been defrauded. The other day another version of the story came to my attention, and it is explanatory of the indifference of Haggin and the Tevis heirs. According to this new version the fraud was practiced on the Standard Oil people by Marcus Daly, and he did not deceive his partners. The story puts an entirely new light on the transaction. It reveals Mr. H. H. Rogers, whom Mr. Lawson characterizes as the "brains" of Standard Oil, in the role of the biter bitten.

How Daly Duped Rogers

Though H. H. Rogers is one of the brainiest men in Wall street, he is also one of the most egotistic. There is nothing so firmly established in his individuality as his conviction of his own paramount worth. So proud is he of his skill as a financier that he would undoubtedly prefer to have it believed that he was in collusion with Marcus Daly in a fraud practiced on the latter's partners than that the cunning Irishman beat him at his own game. The fact is, I am told, that Daly buncoed Rogers; that he first won the confidence of the great Wall street financier, and then imparted to him the secret of the hidden wealth of the Anaconda mine. He then proposed that the Standard Oil people should buy it on the basis of the ore in sight, and pointed out the folly of expert examination that might disclose the hidden ore, and rouse the suspicions of Haggin and Tevis. Rogers stepped blithely into the trap, and bought the mine for ten millions more than it was worth. Hence the present indifference of Haggin and the Tevis heirs. Marcus Daly, the shrewd Western miner who learned his trade in the Comstock, and who for years kept Senator Clark on the run, made a monkey out of the great Wall street plutocrat.

The Navy Overlooked

Unfortunate indeed was the frigid attitude of the Knights Templar toward the officers of the Pacific squadron, in conclave week. The naval officers had been very courteous to the visiting Knights and incurred personal expense in entertaining aboard the warships, but they were scarcely thought of by the committees in charge of affairs, and were not invited to many of the Templar functions. Admiral Goodrich had difficulty in getting on the reviewing stand, and was shoved into an obscure back seat. The naval officers were naturally disgusted, and I am told that Admiral Goodrich sent a formal complaint to Washington, with the suggestion that hereafter when ships of the navy are held in port on festive occasions, the commanding officer be first permitted to inspect the program of ceremonies to see that proper recognition is to be given himself and officers. The unfortunate oversight, last week, was of course due to the fact that the Californians were preoccupied with the entertainment of the Eastern visitors. Naval officers are punctilious in such matters, and find it difficult to excuse violations of the code of polite intercourse.

The Earl and the Nugget

An amusing incident of the conclave had the Earl of Euston as its central figure. That distinguished visitor was invited to the headquarters of the Tuolumne Commandery, the members of which had arranged to present him with a beautiful nugget worth about two hundred dollars. Among the treasures exhibited at the headquarters was the famous four-thousand-dollar nugget that was found in a street of Sonora and which took first prize at the Paris Exposition. Alongside the nugget was the gold medal and the Earl of Euston looked at both, and then exclaimed, much to the disgust of the Tuolumne Knights. "Ah, yes, a very fine fac simile." The presentation was not made. It was the consensus of opinion that if the titled gentleman could not recognize a genuine nugget when he saw one it would be foolish to waste one on him.

A Plea for the Abatement of Nuisance

Now that the Triennial Conclave is a thing of the past, it is a fitting time to direct attention to the manners of some of our porcine population. If San Francisco aspires to become a popular convention city, it is important that the behavior of our hogs, and more particularly that of our hogesses, should receive some attention. Time was when a San Francisco crowd was universally admitted to be good humored and as courteous as it was possible to expect of any mixed congregation, but we have changed all that, and today one might as well be turned into a pen of genuine porkers as thrown unprotected on the tender mercies of "the people." The arrangements for roping the sidewalks and preventing those afflicted with the curse of a wandering foot from taking flight from one side of the street to the other are excellent, but why are the residents of favored localities permitted to take early possession of the sidewalks and obstruct them with chairs, tables, and boxes? Why are those who have thus pre-empted the points of vantage permitted to stand on their pedestals as soon as the head of the procession comes in sight and cut those in the rear ranks off from any other view than that of a row of backs surmounted by immense hats and parasols? If seats were provided for the aged and infirm no one would utter a complaint; if seats were occupied as seats people might make the best of it, in spite of the fact that they are very much in the way and take up unnecessary space, but the hogges of this particular variety is sure to be sturdy of limb and able of body, quite capable of taking care of herself under any circumstances, and so selfish as to be unwilling to let even a little child catch a glimpse of what is passing. When enterprising small boys tried to earn a stray dime by improvising "grand stands" they were speedily routed, yet the hogges was unmolested in Van Ness avenue, though she was in evidence for blocks, and when the parade was over the abandoned boxes were left to become a menace to limbs.

Bunten's Revivification

A few months ago Colonel Bunten, the Bohemian Club wit, looked so ill that his friends gave him up for dead, and every one went about saying:

"Poor Larry, how he has gone to pieces!"

Though all the signs in Bunten's face pointed to an early grave, he resented his premature burial, and determined that he would not die just yet. So he abandoned the doctors and went in for patent medicines, with the result that he is now resurrected and promises to live to be a hundred. He praises the virtues of his pet nostrum like a Pike spieler. Colonel Bunten is rather more Scotch than Peter Robertson, and he never reads American newspapers. His boast is that he reads only a journal published in Scotland.

Byrne Is Ill

J. W. Byrne, the Pacific-Union Club's president, is going abroad as soon as the club gets settled in its new quarters. He is quite ill, and it is thought a trip to Europe will be his best restorative. The Pacific-Union's old quarters are rapidly being dismantled, the furniture transferred and the household gods set in their niches in the new building. The members will be occupying their new apartments by next month.

The Clan Spreckels

The Gus Spreckelses are expected to arrive in New York some time this week. They will remain in the metropolis during the winter. Mrs. Spreckels has become one of the most active of the swimmers. Her season in Paris was an unusually lively one. From there she went to Trouville, where she was constantly on the go in spite of the boiling hot weather. Perfecting her social prestige is now an absorbing pastime with her, and she has planned a masterly campaign for New York. Meanwhile no one ever hears of Gus Spreckels. I presume he is with his wife, but he is a modest chap, and does not care much for splurging. Claus Spreckels, the father of the Spreckels clan and the founder of the Spreckels fortune, is still in Europe, and no word has come of a reconciliation between the old gentleman and his widowed daughter. Meanwhile the palatial residence in Van Ness avenue, which was built for her, presents a sombre and gloomy spectacle. The windows and doors have been boarded up, giving it the appearance of a deserted castle. Its effect on the beholder is akin to that of some ancient ruin, one of those that furnish the heart with tragic recollections and the arts with pathetic compositions.

In the Honor of Three

Dr. W. J. Younger of Paris, Dr. George Martin of Berlin, Dr. Robert Good of Chicago and Dr. Mitchell of London will be the guests of honor at a banquet to be given this evening at the St. Francis. Dr. Clyde Payne, Dr. S. F. Knowles, Dr. J. A. W. Lundborg and Dr. Russell Cool have the affair in charge and beside the guests from San Francisco there will be present Dr. White of Los Angeles, Dr. Grossman of Honolulu, Dr. Dungan of Eureka, Dr. Metcalf of Sacramento and Dr. Cory of Fresno. There will be music by the Hawaiian band and a jinks will follow the feast, conducted by Fred Greenwood, Harry Haight, J. M. McGinnity and Harry Lamberton.

The Confederate Daughters

The big ball of the Daughters of the Confederacy will not be pulled off until some time in December. Last year it was with the Confederate Daughters' ball that the season was inaugurated, but this year the ladies have decided to wait until the season is in full swing. Mrs. Voorhies attended to the details of the function before she went East, and she expects to return in time to head the receiving party at the big event. She intends visiting her daughter, Mrs. Guy Scott, in Baltimore, before returning. Mrs. Malcolm Henry has decided to remain during the winter and she will probably be one of the most strenuous of our society women.

Fortunate Miss Briggs

I hear that Miss Anne Frances Briggs, the young artist whose three water color sketches were recently hung on the line in the annual exhibition of the Artists' Society in London, England, is already reaping the harvest of that honor. Several orders have been placed with her, and she is working hard in her studio among the Piedmont hills. It was a pure accident, so far as she was concerned, this exhibition of her pictures. The young woman made a present of the sketches to Mrs. Thornburgh Cropper, who was a guest of Mrs. Hearst about a year ago and who, being an art connoisseur, took it upon herself to send them to the British "Salon," where they were placed upon the line. The pictures are full of the subtle element called atmosphere and California atmosphere at that.

Grace Fern, formerly of the Call staff, and who recently went to New York, will, I hear, journey to Europe as the guest of Baron and Baroness von Horst. The von Horsts will spend the winter in Baden. Another former member of the Call's society staff, Louise Veiller, has also gone to New York.

Passing of the Knights

Knighthood has ceased to flower in San Francisco. Sir Knights Smith, Jones and Robinson have returned from their crusade and are at this moment pursuing the ordinary tenor of their lives in the peaceful and prosaic environment of Oshkosh, Kalamazoo, and Terre Haute. The millionaire knight has resumed his sordid occupation of adding to his millions out of his share of the pork, soap, and shingle nail trusts; the humbler knight who works for wages has returned to his last, or bargain counter, his desk in the rich man's office or his shop in the manufacturing district. The plumes that waved so proudly, the theatrical costume that excited the wondering admiration of the gaping multitude, the brummagem bravery that won loud applause from the clapperclawing groundlings, the regalia, the paste jewelry, the leg-entangling swords, the insignia, the velvet cloaks, the custom made chapeaux and all that went to bedizen a spectacle in the street parades of the "Templar hosts" of yesterday, have departed from San Francisco and the circus is in town; a more popular pageant, because it is less monotonous and because it includes animals with its glittering masquerade—elephants that walk on their hind legs, lions that roar with life-like ferocity, monkeys that antic with more than human absurdity, hyenas that snarl, horses that dance, dogs that are almost human, and a litter of learned pigs. Between the circus and the prosecution of Sir Knight Hurlbut there is plenty of amusement for the populace.

When It Was in Flower

It is well for the modern Sir Knights, spectacular representatives of a noble fraternal order, to have their fling. It pleases them and the thrilled multitude and does no harm. But how different was it in the days when stout Godfrey of Boulogne and Robert Guiscard, Count of Apulia, rode down to Tyre and Antioch and Ascalon. It was another tale when the shock of Christian lances and Paynim spears resounded from Edessa to Jerusalem. The plumes of belted knights and the mailed fists of crusading warriors were not, in those good old days, dyed feathers and goat-hide gauntlets donned to please the gaping citizenry and the staring yokel. The Knights of the Temple and of the Hospital of St. John were the real thing in knighthood; they knighted into Asia for the purpose of slaughtering Saracens, not to enjoy "the hospitality" of electric-lighted cities. Richard of the Lion Heart had other business in hand when he challenged proud Saladin to single combat on the hot sands of Palestine; and Baldwin, Rex Hierusalem, Latinorum primus, could cleave a Turk from the shoulder to the haunch as deftly as any modern Templar of the meat trust could butcher the hog of his pre-Templar and pre-millionaire period. Put back the musty chronicle on the dusty shelf; lay by the dog-eared Froissart, let John de Vitry and William of Tyre whisper their histories and tales to the Kilidge Arslan of De Guignes—the day of chivalry is gone forever.

Of Tragic Memory

The marriage of Aimee Van Winkle last week reminds me that the members of that family have ceased taking an interest in the giddy fashionable whirl. Years ago a sad tragedy ended the romance of one of the Van Winkle girls, who was then a belle of the local swim. It was about the time of the historic and memorable Authors' Carnival, and she was interested in the Cervantes booth with Biddle Bishop, a scion of the famous Biddle family of Philadelphia, to whom she became engaged. One evening he failed to put in an appearance at the carnival, and the next day his body was found at the bottom of a swimming tank. His drowning was the result of an injury received in diving.

San Francisco's Famous Tenderloin

The nobility of Europe has been well represented in the tenderloin during the past week. Titled foreigners have been contributing generously to the gaiety of the night life. One of the most interesting of them is Baron Ludolf von Kotze, whose cards bear the strange device:

"Regierungsreferendar,

"Lieut.—D. Res—Des Konigs-Ulanen Rgts. (1 Hann)
No. 13.
Potsdam."

Ludolf is accompanied by Baron Cramm, and he says that he is "close up" to Emperor William. Both of them cut a wide swath through the tenderloin. The lieutenant poses as a great duelist and a devil among the women. He points with pride to fourteen scars on his face and head received in as many duels that he lost. He says that he won seven duels, the scars of which are on the other fellows. Baron Fedor Nicolics, an Hungarian, has been playing the gay dog in the tenderloin, too. When told about Ludolf's scars he sneered, and said that he had as many concealed about his person. Nicolics has great contempt for the German duelist, who, he says, takes no chances; he has his body protected and only seeks to draw blood from the chin up, whereas the Hungarian's vital organs are always accessible, and frequently punctured. Horacio Anasagasti is another distinguished foreigner who trailed a guide through the labyrinthine depth of the wide-open section of the town. He is commissioner of mines and liberal arts from the Argentine Republic to the St. Louis Exposition. He is not unknown in the tenderloin, for he left an unpaid wine bill there on his previous visit, a year ago. Captain Berlinsky, of the Russian ship, Lena, is said to have come all the way across the Pacific to see whether the fame of the Schmitz-Ruef village had been justly earned. While the Lena's boilers were under inspection, Berlinsky was personally inspecting our French restaurants and other centres of frailty. He is in no hurry to have the boilers repaired.

All Quiet in Marin

San Rafael is beginning to assume its winter aspect. Mr. and Mrs. Willie Babcock have closed their place, and at last reports were on the continent headed toward the Tyrolean Alps, where they will spend several long months. The A. W. Fosters have opened "Fair Hills" for the winter and will probably be seen in town very little during the season. Mrs. Foster and Miss Anna are in St. Louis visiting Colonel Scott, Mrs. Foster's brother. They will do the fair and then go on to Washington for the greater part of the winter. The George M. Pinckards, the Alexander Lilleys, the Harrison Dibbles and the George D. Boyds have all settled down for a quiet winter in the country. "Meadowlands" is closed, the De Youngs having departed in a blaze of glory after their vaudeville.

The Invasion of Ross

Ross Valley views with alarm the approach of the deadly commuter. His capture of Larkspur is ancient history and he is encouraged in his descent upon Ross by the sale of the Dibblee and Barber tracts which have been cut into town lots and put on the market. It was hoped that the Dibblee estate, whose holdings are among the most beautiful in Ross, would dispose of the tract intact to one purchaser, and Herman Oelrich was induced by those fearing the contamination of vulgarity to negotiate for its purchase, but the deal fell through and the Dibbles decided to adopt the more profitable method of cutting it up into lots. The only concession they made to the frightened holders of neighboring estates was in the insertion of a phrase in the bills of sale enjoining each purchaser from spending less than five thousand dollars in the construction of a house. In San Rafael the suburbanite is hopelessly rampant. The Upper Thirteen have long dominated the village and those who own places there which they cannot sell have been compelled to shelter themselves from the attentions of this ambitious little coterie behind a frigid indifference.

Objects to Courting Death

Not many municipal employes would decline a prospect of four thousand dollars a year salary and the chance of achieving fame. But that is what Harry Cormick, our assistant city engineer, did, I am told, when he sent a refusal to the Panama Canal Commission of the position to construct Colon's new sewers. Cormick declined the job because of Colon's perilous climate. Fever germs are rampant in that section, and the assistant city engineer doesn't care to die just yet. He says he would rather keep his less brilliant position in the cool City Hall and retain his health. It was Grunsky of the Panama Commission who used his influence for the San Francisco man. A man from Massachusetts has received the appointment Cormick declined.

First Clubman: "What did you think of Miss Swell's singing stunt at the society vaudeville?"

Second Clubman: "It simply carried me away. And yourself?"

First Clubman: "Well, with a difference—it drove me away."

The Dahlia Show

The exhibits at the Dahlia Show of the California Floral Association were fewer in number and drew fewer admirers than usual. The intense heat was enough to discourage the blossoms, while the numerous counter-attractions readily accounts for the comparatively small attendance. As to the dahlias themselves, they were as varied in color and as perfect in form as they always are, and neither the weather nor the Knights Templar caused them to droop their heads. One does not realize the infinite variety of these gorgeous beauties until they are put on exhibition by themselves, and there is time to study their idiosyncrasies and peculiarities. There were small, single flowers, scarcely larger than a silver dollar, and huge spheres four or five inches in diameter, with hundreds of petals. They showed every variation of shade in red and yellow, from almost black to the faintest tinges, which required the proximity of a white flower to make it apparent. Solid colors, variegated and striped, they were, and some with the edges of the petals bordered with a narrow stripe of a contrasting color, giving the effect of the application of a skillful paint brush. Some there were more nearly resembling chrysanthemums than their own species, and Mr. Joseph Thompson had a number of the cactus variety in his display. Mr. Rudolph Lichtenberg had the largest number on exhibition, some very fine seedlings, and some original colors and markings. Madame Ellen Coursen Roeckel set a good example to less busy women, and the large table on which she displayed her floral treasures was a centre of interest during the afternoon. The exhibitions of the Floral Association are coming more and more into favor.

Aitken's Quick Rise

Before starting on his European trip Robert Aitken finished two of his most important pieces of work—the McKinley monument with the bust of William McKinley surmounted by an enormous figure of the Goddess of Liberty and the statue of Hall McAllister to be raised in the City Hall grounds. He also executed recently a bust of Mrs. Henshaw, wife of Justice Henshaw, which does full justice to her beauty. Aitken's work has been in great demand of late, and he has made considerable money. Indeed, he is rapidly becoming one of the most prosperous of local sculptors. It was only a few years ago that he attracted attention to himself by his rather bold design of a group of statuary, a conception inspired by a fleshly sentiment from Omar Khayyam. Though it was harshly criticised by Douglas Tilden and other carping artists who failed to discern in it the touch of a genius, Aitken was not discouraged. Since then Tilden has been resting on his laurels, indolent in his prosperity, and Aitken has been kept busy. Lately he has been trying his hand at oil and he has exhibited a knack for portrait work. He expects to join Genthe and McComas in Spain.

Greenway Contemplates Abdication

Society is all a-flutter over the invitations to the Friday Night Club that Czar Greenway has just sent out. The list was closed on September tenth. It is about the same as it was last year. In addition to the names of the debutantes are those of three young men. Mr. Greenway, I am told, had almost decided to abandon his dances this year because his business affairs engross nearly all his attention. To his wine agency he has added a brandy agency, and he is therefore compelled to mix his drinks, and after a day spent in extolling his rare vintages and giving practical illustration of his confidence in his goods, he does not feel in the humor to caper nimbly over the glossy floor. Mr. Greenway is no Lehr. He is every inch a man, and most of his inches are in his waist measurement. He is no longer light and frisky in the dance. Chasing the glowing hours with flying feet has become a hard proposition to the veteran society leader. In the super-heated ball-room he fries in his own fat. So he has begun to think that it is almost time for him to abdicate. He has enjoyed all the honors and laurels of leadership. The fripperies of the fashionable whirl have begun to pall on him. His record—a brilliant one—is complete. The social history of San Francisco is an amplified biographical sketch of Ned Greenway, the wine drummer, who lowered the ladder for many a climber and initiated some of the haughtiest of our provincial swells in the mysteries of the Holy of Holies.

Dates of The Dances

But society hates to lose Greenway. He is the only blown-in-the-bottle leader. The others are mere imitators, and they do not differentiate who's who from who's not. Some of them are suspected of being commercial leaders. When Greenway talked of discontinuing his dances there was much wailing among the debutantes. It is not yet settled whether the Fortnightlies are to be revived, and if Greenway disbanded his Friday Night Club, the prospect for social gayety would have been decidedly discouraging. A debutante is not believed to have had the proper launching if she has not attended the first dance of the Friday Night Club. The dates of the dances are November fourth, December twenty-third and March eighth. The second dance will probably be a fancy dress affair. There was much disappointment last year because there was no bal masque. It was two years ago at the bal masque, by the way, that a popular belle marred the pleasure of some of the dancers by appearing as a Dutch girl wearing wooden sabots, the clicking of which made every one nervous.

They Had a Triumphant Tour

The Alexander Wilsons will take possession of their apartments in the St. Francis about the first of October. The Wilson girls, Bessie and Bernice, have been doing all the big resorts on the coast, and have enjoyed what is known in society as a triumphal season. Bernice Wilson is to make her debut early this fall. Though she is not quite so pretty as her elder sister, she is, I am told, remarkably clever.

She Has a Rich Uncle

Miss Helen Pettigrew's marriage with Mr. Lemon will not take place until next month. I hear that the bride-to-be has a very elaborate and expensive trousseau. I also hear that Miss Alice Sullivan is likely to be her maid of honor. Miss Pettigrew is the very fortunate niece of a very rich uncle, who drifted over to Australia from this city many years ago, and became one of the owners of the Kalgoorlie mine, which developed into one of the richest mining properties in the world. When he became wealthy he sent to this city for his widowed sister, Mrs. Pettigrew and her daughter, Miss Helen, who subsequently lived in Paris and traveled all through Europe. One of her aunts, Miss Mary Callaghan, was for many years principal of the Clement Grammar School. She resigned from the department not long ago.

She's No Lady

In connection with the visit of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the United States, we are warned betimes that his wife is not "Lady Canterbury" nor any lady at all, but just plain Mrs. Randall Davidson, since the wives of church dignitaries do not share in the title. The same is true of the Scotch law-lords, and as Lord Kincairnie is contemplating a tour of the United States, it will be just as well not to be shocked on finding him accompanied by Mrs. Gloag, instead of Lady Kincairnie. The judges of the High Court of England are knighted and become Sir, and their wives are Ladies, but the judges of the High Court of Sessions of Scotland are ex officio lords and must choose a title, while their wives retain their surnames unless, of course, they were already titled. The Scotch law-lords have no seat in the house and are not peers. Neither are their titles inheritable. The Scotch usage is so different from that of England that some curious complications have arisen, especially in places removed from the border. More than once it has happened that some highly moral innkeeper has objected to lodging my lord, who openly admitted that his companion was not my lady, and men who have used their title, or who have claimed to be related to a lord have been pointedly accused of deception, since no such title is to be found in the British Peerage, the only authority known to most. There are quite a number of Scotch lords whose wives are not ladies, another besides Lord Kincairnie being Lord Killochy, whose wife is Mrs. McIntosh, and whose children, if he has any, are McIntoshes.

"Jones's wife sings as she works—how happy she must be!"

"Yes, and that's why Jones always looks so melancholy—he hates music."

Rear-Admiral Rae

It has been many years since Rear-Admiral C. W. Rae, chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the navy, visited this city. He is now here in an official capacity. Rae is a talented officer who has won high rank at a comparatively youthful age, and he is much esteemed, both in and out of the service. He was for many years one of the most sought after beaux of Washington, where he is a prominent member of the Metropolitan and of the Army and Navy Clubs, and where he attends all the smartest social functions. He is prominent not only in the official, but in the diplomatic and the exclusive old resident sets of the national capital.

Lieutenant-Commander Clarence A. Carr, better known in the service as "Sam" Carr, has received deserved and complimentary promotion in being transferred from inspection duty at a Puget Sound shipyard to the position of fleet engineer of the coast squadron of the North Atlantic station. Carr has made many friends since he has been on the Pacific coast. His last visit to San Francisco was while acting as a member of the trial board of the battleship Ohio.

When Howard Took To Trade

Lieutenant-Commander W. L. Howard, recently ordered to duty as naval attache at Berlin, Rome and Vienna, is well known on the Pacific coast, where he would probably have made his permanent home had business enterprises in which he engaged several years ago turned out profitably. Howard, some fourteen years ago, fitted out an expedition from San Francisco for a far northern spot in Alaska, where salmon were so plenty as to promise, apparently, a rich return to all investors. He obtained a long furlough, and was about to tender his resignation and enter permanently into commercial life, when his enterprise, through no fault of his, collapsed and he returned to active service, richer in experience, although poorer in pocket than before his flyer into trade.

Some Church History

The old Howard Street Presbyterian church in the Mission has been torn down. It was a landmark, one of the first buildings erected for church purposes in that section of the city, and was of the village style of architecture but suitable in its time. It was for a long time the only Protestant church in the Mission, and had a mixed congregation. Dr. Sylvester Woodbridge was one of its pastors, a godly old man whom everybody loved. But after a while the congregation came to consider the kindly old gentleman not sufficiently up-to-date, not sensational enough to "draw." O. F. Von Rhein was at the head of the movement to oust Dr. Woodbridge. Partisanship ran high, and the congregation was about equally divided. The old doctor himself begged to resign for the sake of peace, but his friends would not permit it. Finally, after a lengthy strife, the affair ended with the withdrawal of the Woodbridge adherents, who built a new church at the corner of Twentieth and Capp streets, where they installed their beloved pastor, and where he preached for them until his death. The other members remained at the old church until their finances warranted a move, when they built a brick and terra cotta sanctuary three blocks away from the new Woodbridge church. After Dr. Woodbridge died the congregation of his church dwindled until they finally united.

ed with the Trinity Presbyterians and sold their own church to the Second Unitarians. Rev. James Woodworth, the last pastor of the Woodbridge church, died last week. The old deserted Howard Street church had many ungodly tenants after its desertion by the original owners. It was used for gospel meetings for a time, then became a practice ground for tennis, after which a sculptor took it for a studio. Later it was made successively headquarters for a Y. M. C. A. branch, a hall for political meetings and the home of an athletic club, becoming more dilapidated with each new tenant.

Buncoed Out of His Honorarium

Not long ago the son of a relation of a judge high in the counsels of the State got into trouble and His Honor approached the lawyer most noted for getting men out of scrapes and said: "I wish you'd defend this case for me. I haven't much money but I thought you'd do it for me." The lawyer was delighted to oblige so distinguished a gentleman and took the case gladly. It was considerable work but the frolicsome youngster was cleared. Shortly after that the distinguished lawyer received a check for three hundred dollars as a "very inadequate expression of thanks." His fee would, ordinarily, have been in the thousands. Very recently the judge who asked the favor died and his estate was found to be worth half a million. The prominent lawyer has been sore ever since.

He Formerly Lived Here

Count George Karolyi, an influential member of the Hungarian Legislature who is a delegate to the International Parliamentary Peace Congress at St. Louis, once kept a hotel in San Francisco, and his wife acted as housekeeper. He was the only son of Count Stephen Karolyi, a wealthy Hungarian noble. The young man fell into the hands of money sharks in Vienna and was in financial straits while yet under age. He was just about to make a clean breast of his worries to his father, who would surely have forgiven him, when he was thrown into the company of Boriska Frank. The latter was a fascinating actress, several years older than the young Count, whom she persuaded to elope with her. Count George was the only son, and heir to his father's estates, entitled by law to inherit one-half in any circumstance. The entail could not be broken nor the heir disinherited, under Hungarian law, without his consent. The object, therefore, of the usurers was to separate the son from his father in order to keep them from coming to an agreement which would put his inheritance out of their reach.

Why He Came to America

Count George was under twenty-one when he eloped. In Boston, Boriska Frank was married to him by civil process. The ecclesiastical rite, it may be remembered, was performed in this city by Archbishop Riordan. The affair created quite a sensation in Austria, and Count Stephen attempted to communicate with his son through the Austrian Minister in Washington. He offered him full pardon for his offenses, and begged him to return, but in vain. Then Count George's father came to the United States in person, and spent some time in unsuccessful search. It was not until some years later that the young Count was located in this city, keeping a hotel. The father was willing to accept the marriage or do anything else in the way of bringing about a reconciliation, but his son paid no heed to his pleadings. The hotel failed in the course of time, and then Count George returned to his own country. Count Stephen brought all his political influence to bear that his son might not suffer the penalty of leaving the country without having performed his military duty. The Karolyi family and relatives made the best of the wife but society abroad refused to recognize her, so the young Karolyis were socially ostracized. The Countess Boriska had neither the intellect nor the manners to fill the position her husband's birth entitled her to, nor was she sufficiently attractive to hold his love after his youthful passion evaporated. In time there was a divorce. Count George cannot marry again, however, in her lifetime, being a Catholic and married by the Church. Nevertheless he provides liberally for her, and their only child, a daughter, receives twenty thousand dollars annually from him.

"Why, that garcon appears to know you," said Mr. Newlywed to his bride, who hailed from Chicago.

"He ought to—all my honeymoon trips were spent at this hotel."

Popular Club Woman Marries

The wedding of Mrs. Emeline M. North and Captain Whitcomb was something of a surprise to their friends. They were married quietly on Thursday last, and immediately slipped away for a European trip, the bride being a delegate to the International Educational Association which meets at Paris this month, and before which she is to read a paper. Mrs. North, that was, has been for many years an enthusiastic club woman. Having traveled extensively, and being an admirable raconteuse, her vivacious talks and papers were always in demand by her fellow club members. The school department has suffered a loss by the lady's withdrawal, as she was esteemed one of its most original teachers, and many a dull grade meeting has been enlivened by her exposition of "methods." On the Saturday evening preceding her expected departure for Paris the members of the Stratford Shakespeare Society, of which she is a charter member, gathered in her honor at her residence in Pacific avenue. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Stone, Colonel and Mrs. Bullock, Miss Mattie Bullock, Miss Jewell, Mrs. Stanton, Mrs. Everett, Miss Estelle Everett, Mr. and Mrs. Hazelton, Mrs. Richards, Miss Rademaker, Mr. William Muir, Mrs. Boyle, Miss Lottie Bean, Mr. George Terkildson, Mrs. Robinson, Mr. Clarence Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. William Anderson, Mr. Duncan Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. John G. North, and Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McDonald. The Whitcombs expect to make an extended tour, devoting much of their time to travel in southern Europe.

Mamma's Function

Mrs. Worthy Ames has achieved distinction by inventing a very useful contrivance for a child's garment. Mrs. Ames is the mother of a small boy who was recently promoted into short trousers. She resolved to design him a pair, and she did so with the aid of a pattern obtained from a pattern agency. This she improved upon by adding the contrivance of her own invention. She sent a duplicate of it to the pattern agency, and was surprised to receive a check for twenty-seven dollars and a half for it.

The Climbers Were There

The climbers from all parts of the State were very active at the Potter, in Santa Barbara, this season, I am told. And the Charlie Clarks came in for a great deal of attention from them. But Mrs. Clark was very exclusive. It is said that she maintained a frigid attitude even toward her husband's relatives from Los Angeles. The daughter of J. Ross Clark—a sweet girl and very popular in the Southern city—was in Santa Barbara when the Tobin contingent arrived but she was not taken into their circle.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Dinkelspiel and their daughter have returned to the Angelus hotel in Los Angeles. The Dinkelspiels are uncle and aunt to Louis Cole, who married Frida Hellman, daughter of Herman Hellman, of Los Angeles and niece of I. W. Hellman. The Coles and Hellmans have been making much of the Dinkelspiels in the southern city, writes my correspondent.

FASHION IN CHAMPAGNE.

Speaking of champagnes, our New York correspondent writes that the predominance of Moët & Chandon White Seal at all fashionable functions at Newport, Saratoga, and other watering places is remarkable. The present vintage appears to have caught the taste of the bon vivant, it being pronounced not too sweet, but medium dry, of an exquisite bouquet, and is said to agree best with a constitution taxed to the utmost by a strenuous society life.

Gay Oakland Girls

Little stories float back to town from the fancied seclusion of the Alpha Sigma House at Inverness, where a gay party of Oakland girls are spending a fortnight of the late summer season. They have High Jinks every day, and I hear that joy is unconfined. It was at Inverness that one of this same sorority, Miss Helen Shafter, res-

Miss Shafter also won laurels by her shooting, she having landed a deer and smaller game, and, in one instance, having a pretty narrow escape from a too-venturesome chase in which a bull and the Oakland girl raced for first place. #### Rescued and Shaken

There was an exciting scene at the country home of the Chabots at St. Helena last week, when the five-year-old son of the La Tours fell into a tank twenty feet deep and over one hundred feet long. The ladies were seated in a vine-covered arbor when they were startled by a scream. Mrs. Chabot and her daughters rushed to the tank, and there they saw the floundering child. Mrs. J. P. Dunn, who was formerly Kate Chabot, and who is a fine swimmer, plunged in and rescued the child. It then became a matter of some difficulty to pull Mrs. Dunn out, hampered as she was with clinging draperies. When she was safely landed she seized young La Tour and gave him a vigorous shaking. "You young imp," she said, "you ought to have a spanking for giving us such a scare, and if I had on dry clothes I'd give it to you this minute."

The lad looked at her incredulously and said, "You're foolin'."

The Butters Coach

Society in Oakland wore its brightest smile—almost a broad grin—last Saturday, when, with dash and glitter and amid the "winding of the horn" by the celebrated "English coachman, especially imported," the Butters coach made its way through the streets of the suburb. Oh, it was a sight worth all the discomfort of the hot days! The gaily attired ladies on the red English coach, with outriders and coachman and footmen—and the horn. Unfortunately the Earl of Euston was not in Oakland to experience a thrill at the familiar sound and the more familiar sight. I have heard the Butterses did invite the British Earl to take a ride with them, "quite in an informal way." But the noble visitor was up to his ears in engagements and so he was obliged to decline, with much regret, the opportunity to listen to the coachman from his own fog-bedimmed isle "wind a horn" in his honor. The coaching party was given in honor of the young artist, Miss Laura Prather, and her fiance, Guy W. Waterbury, of Sacramento. Others who participated in the drive and in the luncheon at the Claremont Clubhouse were: Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Prather, Miss Evelyn Hussey, Charles Fry, Philip Paschal, Marie and Marguerite Butters and the host and hostess.

A Freak Calla

Out in the grounds surrounding a picturesque little bungalow in North Berkeley, is an interesting floral freak. It is a calla which has put forth three petals to the corolla and three pistils, instead of the usual two petals and one pistil. Hundreds of visitors are making pilgrimages to the home of Mrs. M. Hardy, at 1911 Vine street, where the strange flower is in bloom. The most interested, perhaps, of all who go out to see the botanical curiosity are the scientists of the University of California, who are trying to account for the peculiar growth.

In Restraint of Spooning

The removal of the benches from the campus of the University of California has aroused indignation. It has been explained in many words that the love-making of co-eds and college men has made the removal of these first aids to spooning imperative. But the people of the amorous village ridicule the explanation. They say that if a few more lights were put in the grounds there would be no need of removing the benches. Illumination is fatal, they say, to amorous dalliance. The Greek Amphitheatre, by the way, is becoming a favorite resort of the spooners. Its atmosphere stimulates romantic sentiments.

The Co-Ed Must Go

Prejudice against co-education is growing apace in the University of California, and I learn from a reliable source that an organized effort is to be made to secure an amendment to the charter with a view of raising the institution to the dignity of those universities that bar the co-ed. The feminine seeker of higher education has incurred the disfavor of the faculty. She does not seem to appreciate her privileges or the benefits to be derived. Too many of the young women are frivolous and troublesome. A little over a week ago a college paper swatted them for discourtesy in leaving a room while being addressed by President Wheeler. It is hinted that some of them are more interested in getting husbands than in imbibing culture. And now some of the professors are beginning to regard them from the Schopenhauer viewpoint.

When Vachell Was a Californian

Many people in San Francisco will recall Horace Annesley Vachell, whose new novel, "Brothers," is said to be a big success in London. It is the best novel Vachell ever wrote, and he has written some good ones. His first, "The Romance of Judge Ketchum," was written about nine years ago, and Professor Hudson of Stanford gave it warm praise. This was followed by "John Charity," "The Shadow Third" and "The Pinch of Prosperity." Vachell began his literary life in California and his first stories were written for the Overland. He came to America because, though he was educated at the British Military Academy with view to an army career, he became tired of waiting for the summons to join his regiment, the British Rifles. So he came over the water, stopped in Wyoming awhile and then came to California, where he bought a ranch. While there he fell in love with a Los Angeles girl and married her. The Vachells often visited San Francisco, where they have many friends. For the past few years Mr. Vachell has lived in England, where he has the entree to the best society.

Mrs. Therese Sutro and Miss Sutro are at Byron Hot Springs for several weeks' stay. Arthur G. Fisk was at the Springs several days last week. Others at Byron are Mr. and Mrs. Schoenfeld and Miss L. Schoenfeld of Seattle, Miss Maren Frolich, the artist, Mr. and Mrs. R. Whitehead of Oakland, Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Barnard of Chico, Mr. and Mrs. John McGrath of Knight's Ferry. Dr. Louis Stern, Edward Pollitz, W. Sternberger, J. Barth and H. S. Schwartz spent Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Springs.

Arrivals at Hotel del Monte included G. A. Von Hambach, New York; Dr. Muller, Vienna; Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Waters, Los Angeles; M. S. Steinway, San Francisco; Mrs. Geo. H. Arrivals at Hotel El Carmelo include: R. Bellingall, Oakland; Mr. and Mrs. Kelly, Miss Alice Kelly, Mrs. Geo. Pratt, Mr. G. Pratt, E. J. Bruce, Pasadena; Francis Hodgkins, Stockton; Dr. Thos. Filben, Pacific Grove; J. W. Bass and wife, Milwaukee; C. W. Brown, San Francisco; C. W. Birge, Boston.

In Financial Circles

The week under review was reduced to four working days. Considering this the volume of business transacted must be considered rather satisfactory. Dealings amounted to $163,000 in bonds, and 4,755 shares, divided as follows: 595 lighting, 355 water, 390 miscellaneous, 35 bank and 3,380 sugars.

The demand for S. F. Gas & Electric was exceptionally strong and brought the price up to 62.1-2. Spring Valley Water was weak and declined about one point on small sales. In the miscellaneous group Alaska Packers' Association lost about 2 points and California Wine Association showed a strong tendency, gaining about 2 points. Rumors about this corporation not being in sound financial condition to face the coming season are entirely unfounded. It is a pity that holders of stock in good corporations are so easily led into the mistake of blindly accepting idle rumors as facts. Giant Powder showed unusual strength, a circumstance attributed to the visit of the president of the company to New York to confer with the leading Eastern companies on the interesting subject of the pooling of interests.

Sugar stocks continued their upward movement under a daily increased demand. It does not look like manipulation, but rather like genuine buying by the general public. —The Financier.

HEART OF SAN MATEO.

On another page of this edition there appears a cut of a heart with an arrow running through the centre, which calls attention to a subdivision of home building sites in the new addition to San Mateo, known as the Hayward Tract, and being in the centre of San Mateo City. This beautiful property, owned for years by Mrs. Alvinza Hayward, adjoins the palatial Hayward mansion and grounds and has long been known as "The Oak Grove," from the number of noble oaks that adorn it. Many tempting offers have been refused in the past, and not until after the death of the late millionaire, Alvinza Hayward, were negotiations consummated whereby this property was purchased from the original owners. Streets have been opened through the tract connecting with the main thoroughfares of San Mateo City. The streets have been graded and macadamized, sewers and water mains laid, and sidewalks constructed around each block. To those who know the property, nothing respecting it need be said. To those who have never seen it, our suggestion would be to visit it. Of the many delightful localities for country homes abounding in California we believe it fair to say that no property to compare with the Hayward tract has ever been offered or ever again will be offered for sale. The property could be easily compared with a park which had been originally planted with old English oaks, as with one or two exceptions every lot has one or more trees. Perfect climate, natural drainage, only five minutes' walk from the station, twenty trains a day from San Francisco, fast electric commodious suburban cars running between San Mateo and San Francisco, leaving every thirty minutes, and the new Southern Pacific Bay Shore cut-off soon to be in operation, shortening the distance between San Mateo and San Francisco to thirty minutes, makes this property the ideal suburban home place for persons engaged in business in San Francisco. The property will be sold at private sale, commencing at ten o'clock next Monday morning, September 19th, at the office of Baldwin & Howell, 25 Post street. First come, first served.

The new cafe, Terrace Garden, in Mason street, has an orchestra that has few equals. Bernat Jaulus, who leads it, is the king of Hungarian musicians here, and his programs are arranged with view to suit all tastes. The Garden is already very popular as an after-theatre resort.

"Manelich of the Highlands"

Mrs. Fiske showed both horse and common sense in forsaking "Marta of the Lowlands." She is not in the business for the purpose of exhibiting unprofessional generosity to an ambitious leading man. She is a star backed by her own husband, and she is out for glory as well as for money. The spot-light is for her. In "Marta of the Lowlands" she spent most of her time in the shadow, while Mr. Hobart Bosworth reveled in a nice fat part that fairly bulges with suet. The play was not written to exploit playwright probably gave expression in language full of delightful imagery, but there is very little music in the sentences that fall from the lips of the Anglicized goatherd. The craftsmanship of the Spanish playwright is crude. He handles his theme clumsily. He was very unfortunate in his elaboration of a child's part, making it one of the most important in the play. Indeed the child is pestiferously prominent. She has more to say than Marta. She carries whole scenes on her shoulders, and makes you wish that somebody would choke her off. Though a great lover of children I abominate them in the drama. That is the one place, above all others, in which they should be merely observed. A little girl may be full of temperament and boldness, but she cannot magnetize an audience. She may become a fine elocutionist, but her declamation at best is remarkable only for its mechanical precision. Barring little Nuri, played with wonderful accuracy of intonation by Ollie Cooper, I enjoyed "Marta of the Lowlands." Hobart Bosworth's conception is capital, and his execution faultless, with the exception of his jarring tone production. He should learn to vary his expression of emotion without introduc-

a feminine star. It should be called "Manelich of the Highlands," for he is the central figure. All the heroics are in his hands, and he is an interesting study somewhat new to the Anglo-Saxon stage, a modern barbarian, strong as a lion and as courageous, simple as a village maiden and exquisitely tender of heart. The play is the work of Angel Guimera, a Spanish dramatist who, I am told, is a great patriot. His plays are messages to the people, but it is not easy for an American audience to view "Marta of the Lowlands" in that light. It presents a transcript of life in a region of Spain where the ignorant, simple peasants are under the iron rule of land barons. One of the landed gentry has coerced Marta, a motherless waif, into being his mistress, and finding it expedient to marry a rich girl, he compels the unfortunate Marta to marry Manelich. The latter does not know of the illicit relationship. Marta thinks he does, and that he has been hired to act as her husband with the understanding that she is to continue to serve as the land baron's mistress. She therefore despises her husband, but she learns the truth, discloses the perfidy of her master, and the latter is killed by Manelich. It is a story full of the frank appeal to the simpler emotions and it contains much of the familiar element of rampantly popular interest. It is a poetically pastoral drama, and perhaps in the original is delightful literature, but in the English version it is tame and prosaic. The language is devoid of brilliance, and the atmosphere has been permitted to escape along with the liquid music of the original tongue. Manelich is a man of primitively poetic soul, one to whose feelings, hopes and aspirations, the

THE SCARECROW AND THE TIN WOODMAN.

Probably two-thirds of "The Wizard of Oz" audiences think the Scarecrow is a dummy owing to the wonderful make-up. "The face is thoroughly expressionless and so cleverly marked that it looks like a football with the facial features painted on its surface. The body hangs lifeless as though suspended only from two nails in the cross-bar. The stuffing of straw oobtrudes at every opening in the cloth. The deception is most complete. The entire make-up is patterned after the drawing in Mr. Baum's book, from which "The Wizard of Oz" was dramatized.

ing two distinct voices. Florence Roberts plays Marta modestly and effectively, and touches the keynote of the woman's lacerated and harassed soul.

At the Alcazar

The effect of his long season, with constant change of bill, is telling on White Whittlesey. His acting in "The Second in Command" shows signs of fatigue. He has the Drew role of Major Bingham, which he invests with a pretty sentimental touch, but his performance lacks virility. However, I am quite certain that all Whittlesey needs is a rest of a few weeks, when his acting will regain all the vigor it now lacks. Miss Lawton is not up to her usual form as Muriel Mannering. She makes the role bathetic. Conness and Hilliard are great favorites with the audience as Anstruthers and Mannering. By far the best sustained characters in the production are those of Nora Vining and the Hon. Hildebrand Carstairs, by Virginia Brissac and Reginald Mason. They are full of life and go, and stimulate the duller auditor to appreciation. "The Second in Command" is a pretty play, innocuous, and interesting chiefly for its military setting.

The Alcazar's New People

Lillian Lawrence and John Craig will head the Alcazar company for the new season beginning October tenth. For several years past Miss Lawrence and Mr. Craig have done much to bring the Castle Square Company of Boston into the commanding prominence which it enjoys as the best of the Eastern stock organizations, and during the past summer they have been at the head of the company at Keith's theatre, Providence. The Alcazar's new ingenue will be Elizabeth Woodson, who has just closed a special engagement with Miss Lawrence and Mr. Craig in Providence, and who had been offered a re-engagement there for next summer.

A Shop Girl's Romance

A department store in full blast, with bargain hunters out in force, is one of the scenes in the Central's melodrama this week. "Only a Shop Girl" is on the Family Story Paper style, and is full of weeps well mixed with laughs. One of the prettiest settings is a snow scene, with a sleighing party out for fun. Verne Castro, the soubrette, who has become very popular with the Central's patrons, shows in a melodious song that she can sing as well as act. Curtin and Blossom also give specialties. Miss Clifton has the role of the shop-girl heroine who wins all hearts by the courage with which she dares the fight against unkind fate. Mayall, Howell, Corrigan, Miss Elsmere and Miss Gordon have the other principal roles.

Clever Children at the Grand

The glories of the old extravaganzas that Dave Henderson mounted with such magnificence are recalled to memory by "The Princess Fan Tan." This show at the Grand is a genuine San Francisco production. The extravaganza was authored by Bothwell Browne, and such has been its success that after its local season it will be taken on the road, and then East. Little Eunice Gilman, who plays the part of the Princess, suggests to old ploygoers the inimitable Lotta, in her early days. Eunice, by the way, is a sister of Mabelle Gilman, who made such a hit in London and New York. She gained all her stage experience in this city. The children who take the other principal roles are all surprisingly clever, and their training has been carefully done. The champagne ballet is an improvement on the one seen at the Columbia, and indeed all the ballets are danced with precision and artistic excellence.

Carillo's Instantaneous Hit

Every once in awhile something original turns up on the Orpheum program that seems to put new and lusty life into the time-honored succession of acrobats, warblers, dancers and sketch artists. The something new this week, and the biggest hit since Walter Kelly, was Leo Carillo, who made his debut on Sunday. Carillo was an Examiner artist and his friends persuaded him that he was wasted in the art department when he had a fairy in his throat that could coax shekels from a vaudeville circuit manager. In this case the friends were right. Carillo's fairy is one that can imitate all sorts of barnyard sounds and other things, and his specialty is very cleverly interwoven with a monologue full of good stories. The barnyard sounds come in naturally in the course of Carillo's narrative. While the San Francisco man is the prize number on the bill this week, there are some other good things. Harry La Rose and his company have a sketch, "The Sailor and the Horse," that is worth seeing twice, and the comedy dancers, Marion Bent and Pat Rooney, are amusing.

The Warde Divorce

One of the dailies, in chronicling the divorce of the Arthur Wardes, said that Mrs. Warde was the daughter of L. R. Stockwell, and that the marriage was an elopement. In reality Polly Stockwell is only a step-daughter of the little comedian. She is the daughter of Ethel Brandon by the latter's first husband. The reason, I have been told, why Mrs. Stockwell objected to the marriage of her daughter with Frederick Warde's son, was because she desired Polly to remain on the stage with herself and Stockwell. She tried to get the Bishop to prevent the marriage, but the ecclesiastic inquired into the matter, found Polly was of age and that there was no reason to urge against her marrying. The Church does not encourage arbitrary interference by parents when the latter's reasons hinge upon the desire to keep the reins in their own hands. Therefore Polly Stockwell and Arthur Warde were wedded without the consent of the bride's mother. Stockwell was always very fond of his step-daughter, and I have never heard that he objected to the marriage. All the objections came from the girl's mother. Ethel Brandon, by the way, was in New York at last accounts. It is many years since she appeared in San Francisco, where she was once the favorite stock leading lady.

The Ben Greet Season at Lyric Hall

Ben Greet and his company of London players will give a short season at Lyric hall under the direction of Will L. Greenbaum, opening Monday night, October third, with the beautiful morality play, "Everyman." This will be the third season of this unique production in America and with each year the interest has greatly increased. Mrs. Constance Crawley will again take the part of "Everyman" and the rest of the players have been selected from both of the Ben Greet companies, so we are promised a perfect production in even the very smallest details. During the second week of the engagement Shakespeare's comedies "Much Ado About Nothing," "A Comedy of Errors" and "Twelfth Night" will be produced in the Elizabethan manner, that is, without scenery but elegantly costumed and with the original text, the stage being draped as in the original productions. On Monday and Tuesday nights, October seventeenth and eighteenth, performances will be given at Sacramento under the auspices of the Tuesday Club, after which the organization will tour the entire coast. The sale of seats for the performances in this city will open at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Monday morning, September twenty-sixth. The prices for reserved seats will be one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents. To clubs, colleges, schools, etc., desiring to attend in a body special arrangements will be made on application to the management.

Next Week's Bills

Fischer's will have a brand-new burlesque, "Miss Mazuma," written by J. C. Crawford, author of "The Beauty Shop." The piece is in three acts, all laid in and around San Francisco, and the scenes include a clearance sale in a big store, and a suburban hotel. In the second and third acts Cady masquerades as a widow and Miss O'Ramey wears his ordinary make-up. A burlesque fire scene and a tar-and-feather episode are features. There are nineteen new musical numbers, and Dorothy Morton will have one song, "Cindy," said to be delightfully melodious.

Dr. Nagel, oculist, limited to eye, removed to 731 Sutter. Phone East 1247. Hours 10 to 12 and 1 to 3.

"THE DANITES"

At the Columbia "The Wizard of Oz" will prove a welcome offering to those who are tired of problem plays and romantic dramas. "The Wizard of Oz" will only remain up to and including October second. Children will doubtless enjoy the features, the Cowardly Lion and the Skittish Cow, said to be as clever bits as anything in Dixey's old famous "Adonis."

Last season one of Whittlesey's strongest cards at the Alcazar was Robert Mantell's "Monbars," the adaptation of the French play, whose hero is a sort of a Monte Cristo, only more fascinating. It will be given next week and a revival of "Soldiers of Fortune" comes next.

The Majestic has already won a strong hold on the affections of hosts of patrons, and the quality of the plays presented promises to keep the theatre popular. "The Altar of Friendship," in which Maxine Elliott and Nat Goodwin starred, is the new bill. Gilmour and Miss Reals will have the star roles. Vera McCord, for several years Hawtrey's leading woman at the Princess theatre, London, will have the ingenue role. Miss McCord received high praise in London from the editor of M. A. P. "Captain Barrington," a Revolutionary drama, comes next.

The revival of "The Serenade" at the Tivoli is particularly interesting on account of the first appearance of Andrew Bogart on the operatic stage. Bogart has been compared to Haydon Coffin, the famous baritone who appeared here with Lillian Russell, and Director Steindorff predicts a great future for him in opera. He will have the role of Lopez, the bandit's secretary. Kate Condon will have the part of Dolores, which she had in the Bostonians' production, and Dora de Filipppe will be a most engaging Yvonne. Webb will be Colombo; Simms, the Duke of Santa Cruz; Forrest Dabney Carr, Alvarado.

Florence Roberts will appear in her old success, "Zaza," next week—her fourth and last—at the California, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Wednesday matinee. "Tess of the d'Urbervilles" will be given the remainder of the week, to satisfy the demand of those unable to obtain tickets the first week.

The juvenile performance of Bothwell Browne's new musical extravaganza, "Princess Fan Tan," has proved such an enormous success at the Grand that it has wisely been determined to continue it all next week. There will be special Saturday and Sunday matinees for children. The entertainment is thoroughly worthy of the liberal patronage it is receiving, for nothing so good of its kind has previously been seen here.

Another of Theodore Kremer's sensational dramas, "Fallen by the Wayside," will be the Central's bill, the first production of the play in this city. It shows the effect intemperance had upon an artist, who sinks from his high estate to become a charcoal sketchist in a beer hall. One of the scenic features is the rescue of the artist's child from the top story of a building, by the aid of a swinging derrick.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Truesdell, assisted by Robert Gemp, will present at the Orpheum "Aunt Louisa's Advice," by George Arliss. Anna Barclay Truesdell made her last appearance in this city with the late Annie Pixley, and has since been identified with the Klaw and Erlanger and Rich and Harris forces. Mr. Truesdell will be remembered for his excellent work with Francesca Redding last season. The Melrose troupe of novelty acrobats will make their first appearance in San Francisco in feats hitherto deemed impossible. In T. Trovolo, the Orpheum promises one of the best ventriloquists who ever threw his voice into inanimate figures. Al. Lawson and Frances Namon will present a trick bicycling and bag punching specialty.

Madame Snider-Johnson, soprano, Dr. H. J. Stewart's talented pupil, will make her vaudeville debut at the Orpheum tomorrow.

New on the Chutes bill will be Eddie Weston and Bessie Beasley, comedy sketch artists; Clifford Trainor and Ione But-ton, singers and grotesque dancers; Daisy Harcourt, a London music hall character vocalist who will show how costers sing their songs; and the two Shetlands, a duo of dancing girls. Playgoer.

An Oriental Peacemaker

BY LAWRENCE MARTIN.

Brereton stared meditatively, between puffs at his short briar-wood, at John. There was something elusively fascinating in the old Chinaman whom he had hired to help him harvest his season's fruit crop, and attend to the chicken feed betweenwhiles. John, smoking one of his odd cone-shaped cigarettes of heavypaper, and gazing calmly into the heavens as if he saw something there of which Brereton had no conception, was as full of witchery to the connoisseur in faces as rare bits of Satsuma are to the collector.

So Brereton smoked, and stared at his Oriental dependent, who sat some feet away from his employer, on an overturned keg. By and by John seemed to sense the stare. He had evidently been following out a line of reasoning.

"Why you no mally, Mr. Brereton?" he asked.

His employer laughed, but there was a harsh tone in the laugh.

"No money, John," he said, "too poor. Rich girl no care come work on ranch."

"But you velly nice man," observed John, flatteringly, and taking a long, slow, happy pull at his odd-shaped cigarette.

"To be sure, John, to be sure," said Brereton, "but very nice men aren't always the ones who get nice wives."

He puffed slowly at his pipe. John's words had opened an old wound which he thought was fully healed months ago. Mary Manchester was the cause of the wound. He had loved her and thought his love was reciprocated, until one day some kind of cloud rose upon the horizon. Its nature had always been an enigma to him, but as the days passed and he failed to see anything like a silver lining, he had concluded it was best to go away and leave the field clear to a rival. The rival was rich. Brereton was poor. Mary was an heiress. There may be no connection between these items, but Brereton fancied there might be. He made one effort to find out the reason of Mary's sudden frigidity. Before going to the country to bury his sorrow on a ranch—which purchase a few years before was largely the cause of his poverty then—he called on Miss Manchester. He was sure she was within, for he had caught a glimpse of a fair head at a front window—but the maid assured him that Miss Mary was not at home.

So Brereton had betaken himself and his wound to his ranch, where, until he had hired John to help him out in the season of ripe fruit, he had lived alone with his gnawing pain, and his pipe his only solace.

The old Chinaman seemed to have conceived an enormous fancy for his taciturn employer. Brereton had often caught him looking in his direction in a puzzled way, as if he were racking his brains for the reason of such melancholy in a young, healthy, should-be happy man.

When John asked him the question about matrimony Brereton understood what the former's interested glances had signified. One evening as they sat, several feet apart, smoking and musing as usual, in a whimsical moment Brereton made the old fellow his confidant. He told him about the girl, the cloud, and his own desertion of the field of Cupid.

John listened with evident interest, nodded his head once or twice, but said nothing. He smoked, however, twice his usual quantity of the thick, cone-shaped cigarettes during the tale's recital.

Brereton wondered afterward how he had been moved to talk so much about his own affairs; to a dependent, too. He finally laid it to a fit of momentary insanity, inspired by too prolonged solitude and gazing at the landscape.

It was not long after this that Brereton was forced to discontinue the services of his Oriental help. The work of picking fruit having been finished, there was not enough labor—nor income—on the ranch for two. However, he did not send John away until the latter was provided with a berth elsewhere. He obtained the situation of attendant at the Sulphur Springs, a select summer resort frequented by smart people.

"I hope see you malled, Mr. Brereton," said John, as he said good-bye to his erstwhile employer, "velly soon."

* * * * *

One of the visitors at the Sulphur Springs was that engaging heiress, Mary Manchester. The papers had chronicled her departure for Del Monte, Lake Tahoe, San Jose and other places, while in reality she was enjoying a season of rest cure at the Springs.

The modish woman's stationery is as much a part of her nowadays as her dainty wardrobe. Cooper & Co., 746 Market Street, are showing the newest modes in paper and envelopes, dies and seals.

Mary was the only young person at the hotel. She was pretty and healthy, but there was always a sad, bored look on her face that gave it an older expression than that on the faces of the elderly invalids who sat on the veranda of mornings, and took their siestas indoors of afternoons.

The blooming beauty, also the expression so at variance with it, of Mary Manchester seemed to possess a potent fascination for the old Chinese attendant at the bath-house, where the invalids soaked in sulphur at stated seasons. The benign and picturesque features of the Oriental attendant likewise attracted Miss Manchester, who had a weakness for odd effects whether in porcelain or humanity.

"What do you think of me, John?" she asked one day, noticing with amusement that his slanting eyes were glued upon her features. No woman dislikes admiration, even from those lower in the social sphere.

"Why you no mally?" answered John, with a return question.

"Nobody wants me, John," said Mary, smiling.

But the old chap noticed a shade pass over her hitherto smiling countenance.

"I know velly nice man," he said, deliberately, "velly nice man—I think he mally you."

The shade disappeared, and Mary laughed, a gurgling, girlish laugh.

"Oh, how delightful!" she cried. "Now, who's your 'velly nice man,' John?"

John, in picturesque pidgin English, sketched in the details about his central figure before disclosing the identity of the picture's subject. He painted the ranch, its lonely owner, smoking his bachelor pipe, and grieving for a girl who was too rich to wish to share his poverty. He told of the long, dreary evenings when the ranch's owner sat outside his shack smoking, smoking, smoking. He did not seem, however, to make the impression he had expected on his listener. Indeed, she yawned once or twice, and seemed finally as if she would like to leave the speaker in the midst of his tale—until he breathed the name of his hero.

"Brereton? Brereton?" she cried, grasping the astonished Oriental by the shoulders of his blue blouse. "How do you know all this?" She absolutely shook the breath out of him in her excitement. "You just go back and tell him it's not true—not a word of it. I was at home, yes, but I didn't see him. Oh, nonsense!" she cried again, recovering her senses with a little gasp.

There was great dignity in John's demeanor as he stood up, after this outburst, and gathered together the towels Miss Manchester had shaken from his arm, in her onslaught.

"You like mally Mr. Brereton, then?" he asked, solemnly.

"Maybe he won't want to 'mally' me," returned Miss Manchester.

The whole thing was really absurd, she felt. But this old Confucius had seemed to smooth out with one word all those sad little wrinkles that, during the months since she had had that misunderstanding with Brereton, had dug furrows in her white brow.

John hung the towels more firmly on his arm, and turned to take his dutiful way toward the bath-house.

"Oh, yes, I tell him," he said, with an air of beneficent patronage, "I tell him you velly nice woman—he velly nice man—velly nice woman mally velly nice man."

But Mary, who was impetuous, and possibly a bit lacking in pride where her affections were concerned, did not wait for Confucius to get a day or two off and carry his matchmaking intention to the ranch. She wrote a long letter, within the hour, to the ranch's owner, and then, to be sure there was no mistake, the next day she sent a wire.

Automobile Topics

A very interesting article appeared in one of the New York daily papers giving an account of a run made by Mr. Whitman Osgood of Washington, D. C., in an Oldsmobile tonneau. The trip was made from Washington to St. Louis and return, a distance of three hundred and seventy-eight miles. Mr. Osgood was accompanied by his wife and two children. The machine was in excellent condition upon its return to Washington. This is, perhaps, the longest distance ever run by any of the smaller touring cars.

S. S. Olds, of the Olds Motor Works, spent the last ten days in California and left last Saturday morning for the East. Mr. Olds will return home via Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake and St. Louis. He expressed himself as being much pleased with the number of Oldsmobiles sold in California.

F. H. Johnson, who recently purchased a new 1904 Winton touring car from the Pioneer Company, made a trip to Napa Soda Springs and return without any mishap whatever.

J. D. March and Mr. Carson, of Chico, last week purchased an Oldsmobile runabout each from the Pioneer Company.

Miss Edith Polloge made a trip around the bay last Friday in her Stevens-Duryea automobile.

Miss Elsie McEwen's Winton has again made its appearance after two weeks in the paint shop, during which time it received a new coloring of green and yellow paint.

Dr. G. F. Hanson is now the possessor of a Stevens-Duryea automobile which he last week purchased from the Pioneer Company.

Mr. Hansel of Stockton recently made a run in his Cadillac from Stockton to Oakland, a distance of one hundred miles, in four hours and thirty-five minutes. This is the record for this run.

G. A. Lynch drove his new Cadillac touring car to San Jose last Friday. Accompanying him were Mrs. G. A. Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lynch and Arthur Hull. Mrs. Lynch said it was the finest ride she had ever taken and the weather was ideal.

Twelve new Model B Cadillacs arrived September tenth.

The first automobile in the Round Valley Indian Reservation in Mendocino county has created consternation among the Indians, who took the puffing machine for a real "red devil." The automobile carried Clarence Anged, Frank Reamer, Fred Daniels and A. D. Houghton of Capitola, who took the machine over the rough Mendocino mountain roads. The Indians were not the only people surprised, for the entire community at Covelo turned out to see the strange sight. A. D. Houghton writes from Covelo to Mr. Hawkins of the White Sewing Machine Company as follows about his run: "We are here fifty miles back in the mountains, and in good shape. We came over five large mountains, one grade ten miles long. We climbed for one mile on a thirty-two per cent grade and had no trouble. I would be willing to bet anything that there is not a machine made outside of the White that can make this trip. It is the first automobile to enter Round Valley. Just think of it—nothing out of order except brakes, over probably the worst roads in California. You ought to go over the road on horseback and see for yourself what a White has done. We forded a river that was four and one-half feet deep and the reserve steam carried us through."

The first automobile to attempt to climb snow-clad Mt. Hood in Portland was a White steam stanhope, manipulated up the steep incline by John Kelly. This was a year ago. Now Mr. Kelly has made the trip in a White touring car carrying a full load of passengers. Mr. Kelly was accompanied by Dr. C. B. Brown of Portland in his White car. Dr. Brown's machine "Samantha," it will be remembered, made a wonderful record for itself in California some months ago touring successfully from this city all over Southern California and back. The two autos left Portland at six o'clock in the morning and at five the same afternoon arrived within two miles of the timber line of Mt. Hood. Good touring roads were met with up the Sandy to the Postoffice and through Salmon to Toll Gate, but the hard work for the autos began at that latter point, because of poorly kept pathways. It seemed to the tourists that this defect could be speedily remedied. No great trouble was, however, experienced in Government Camp with the autos, and taking the latter to a spot within two miles of the timber line. When the party mounted their autos the next morning near the timber line, they had not proceeded very far when they encountered smoke and flame, and near Toll Gate found government rangers fighting the fire, which had been started by a rancher burning waste timber and going away before he was certain that the fire was under control. At this stage the auto people had literally a "hot time" in getting through, but a cooler vicinity was soon reached and they arrived in the city again at six-twenty p. m., much pleased with the adventurous trip.

John D. Spreckels recently received a limousine body White, the first of its kind ever seen on the coast. Mr. Spreckels will use the car this winter principally for theatre-parties and other evening affairs. The outside of the machine is painted in blue-black, and the interior is finished in blue broadcloth, and everything is very elaborate.

Sam Buckbee, a member of the executive committee of the Automobile Club of California, accompanied by a party of friends, left last Saturday in his White steamer for a five days' trip in the northern part of the State. Mr. Buckbee is a great touring enthusiast, and will no doubt have many interesting incidents to relate upon his return.

Harry Leyman, assistant general manager of the Pope Motor Car Company, Toledo, Ohio, is in San Francisco spending several days with the distributing agents, the Pope Toledo Touring Car Company. Mr. Leyman reports that while the Pope Motor Car Company has the largest factory in the world for the manufacture of motor cars, it is entirely too small to make enough Pope-Toledos to supply the demand.

A reception was given George P. Fuller by his friends in St. Helena in appreciation of the wonderful skill displayed by him at the Del Monte tournament. His friends presented him with a handsome trophy.

A recent purchaser of a four-cylinder Pope-Toledo is W. B. Glidden of Oakland.

M. A. Gunst makes a trip from Burlingame to San Francisco and return almost daily in his red-streak Pope-Toledo. Dr. Pedar Bruguiere probably holds the record for mileage since he purchased his Pope-Toledo, averaging about fifteen hundred miles per month. The following owners of Pope-Toledos have made long country runs during the past week: James L. Flood, George A. Pope, L. P. Lowe, D. F. Walker, Henry Dernham, William Kaufman, William Ede, M. C. Harris, Jack Casserly, Dr. J. B. Sargent, H. H. Dana, Roy Mauvais, W. B. Glidden and others.

Gus A. Boyer, manager of the Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company, advises us that the new model L four-cylinder Pope-Toledo is a veritable wonder. As soon as the car arrives, which will be within two weeks, demonstrations will be given to a lengthy list of prospective buyers. Mr. Boyer reports that over forty Pope-Toledos have been sold and delivered in California since March first.

Harvey Dana, the Alameda capitalist, is having great sport with his Pope-Toledo, having made numerous lengthy country runs during the season.

The Rambler Automobile Agency is having a great run on its single cylinder cars. Many deliveries are being made in surrounding towns. One of the latest purchasers of a Rambler is W. E. Duzan of the California Powder Works, who on Saturday last received his new Rambler touring car Model K.

The Rambler Agency has another of the four-cylinder National touring cars, the same type as the one which attracted so much attention at the Del Monte meet.

J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Company, and party of friends made the trip in their Arrow to San Jose on Saturday, returning on Sunday. They went down on the west side of the bay, and report the road very rough and disagreeable to ride over.

Horace Morgan and Heber C. Tilden, who had their Arrows across the bay during the summer, have returned, and are constant users of their machines in the city.

The George N. Pierce Company has written the Mobile Carriage Company, its coast representative, that they are making fine progress with the 1905 model, and that the first shipment will reach San Francisco by December first.

The Mobile Company reports that over six thousand visitors, during the Knights Templar conclave, hired automobiles. This is the highest record for San Francisco, and no doubt beats the record of any other city in the United States for the same length of time.

In the Maison Marchoni

He (sipping a cocktail) — There's nothing like a kiss for an appetizer.

She (sipping her cocktail) — But I've known you such a short time.

He (just as the oysters and chablis were brought in) — There's nothing that so speedily ripens acquaintanceship as the warmth diffused by a kiss.

She (spearing an oyster) — But it may be unwise to ripen acquaintanceship artificially.

He (swallowing an oyster) — You are very young.

She (sipping her chablis) — But not inexperienced.

He (sampling the entree) — So the manager wouldn't give you a trial?

She (delving into the entree) — The brute!

He (reaching for the champagne) — Didn't know I was a large stockholder in that house, I suppose?

She (finishing her first glass) — No; are you?

He (taking his second) — Yes. Want me to fix it for you?

She (taking her second) — Oh, you dear boy; I should say I do.

He (pouring her out another) — We seem to be getting better acquainted.

She (watching the bubbles) — You rogue!

And then the waiter came in with the Benedictine.

Her Repentance

There once lived a woman who had a most devouring curiosity. It was not the kind of curiosity that thrusts itself without invitation into its neighbors' affairs, but the curiosity that is the desire for knowledge. Not the knowledge, however, that is learned from books, but the knowledge that comes from practical experience of the ordinary happenings in life.

This kind of curiosity it is that leads a woman to drink, so that she may know the delights and the sorrows that lie at the bottom of the table; to smoke, that she may understand what it is in tobacco that soothes; to try drugs, that she may comprehend what inspiration it is that comes from the pipe-dream; to flirt, that she may see how far a woman may play with flame and not be burned; occasionally, to jump into the fire, to see how it feels to be warmed in that way.

All these forms of curiosity were indulged in by this particular woman. She tasted all the commoner pleasures in which women of society delight, and then went on to the wider pleasures of Bohemia. From these 'twas but a step to the broader primrose path.

But when she had tried them all, one day an angel discovered her alone and weeping.

"Why," exclaimed the angel, "crying? Aren't you happy? Haven't you followed your own sweet will all your life?"

"I was happy enough," returned the woman, "until just now I stopped to think."

"Oh," said the angel, thoughtfully, "you repent, then?"

"Yes," said the woman, "I repent but my repentance does not proceed from the conviction that my sins have offended God."

"Then why repent?" asked the angel.

"Because of the consequences of my sins; they have made me miserable."

"Well," said the angel, "there is hope for you. The sinner who is permitted to become sensible of the source of misery is of the elect."

—The Moralist.

NEW YORK'S NEW HOTEL.

Every returned Californian speaks of the new Hotel Seville, the latest hotel to challenge comparison with the other magnificent Gotham hostels. The Seville well holds its own, for it is thoroughly modern in every respect, with not a dark room in its make-up, and is absolutely fireproof. Its central location, at Twenty-ninth street and Madison avenue, makes it particularly convenient for those desiring to be within walking distance of the theatres and shopping districts. Its cuisine appeals to those who enjoy superior cooking and perfect service.

"Dead men tell no tales."

The Francisca Concerts

There will be crowded and fashionable houses to greet Fannie Francisca next Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon, at the Alhambra. And with Melville Ellis as the pianist of the occasions, and Louis Newbauer's flute in the obligatos, the program promises to be rarely good. Ellis's solo at the first concert will be scenes from Charpentier's new opera, "Louise." At the matinee he will play an Etude by Faure, and a Serenade by Schytte. Ellis will also play with Newbauer in two suites. Madame Francisca's numbers at the first concert will be: Aria from Traviata, Massenet's Elegie, Ontwaken (Mann), De l'Acqua's Villanelle, aria, Le Pardon de Ploermal, Meyerbeer, My Mother Bids me Bind my Hair (Haydn), Standchen, Strauss, The Cuckoo, Liza Lehmann, mad scene from Lucia. Her numbers at the Saturday matinee will be: Aria from Le Cid, Massenet, Il Bacio, Arditi, Si mes vers avaient des ailes, Massenet, Adoration, Rubinstein, valse from Romeo et Juliette, aria, Rossignol, Handel, aria from Lakme, Delibes, Three Green Bonnets, D'Hardelet, De gefopte Vogelaar, Catherine van Rennes, mad scene from Hamlet (Thomas).

Josef Hofmann's Concerts

Josef Hofmann, the brilliant young pianist, will give three concerts at the Alhambra theatre under the direction of Will L. Greenbaum, Tuesday and Thursday nights, October fourth and sixth, and Saturday matinee, October eighth. Josef Hofmann is now twenty-seven years of age and is the only one of the "wonder children" with whom all the golden promises of childhood have been realized. Hofmann has developed great talent as a composer and will play a number of his works this season. At the opening concert some of the most important numbers will be Beethoven's "Waldstein" sonata, Liszt's "Don Juan" fantasia, some Scarlatti numbers and a Hofmann composition which he calls "Through the Clouds." At the Thursday evening concert the program will include Beethoven's Sonata Op. 22, Schumann's "Carnevale," a group of nine Chopin etudes, and numbers by Rameau, Couperin and other masters. At the Saturday matinee Chopin's beautiful sonata in B minor will be given and a group of works by modern Russian composers. At this concert, by general request, the virtuoso will also play the Liszt transcription of the "Tannhauser" overture with which he created such a sensation three years ago. The complete programs may be obtained at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, where the sale of seats opens Monday, September twenty-sixth, for season tickets, and on Thursday the twenty-seventh for single concerts. The prices for the season of three range from one dollar and seventy-five cents to five dollars, and for single concerts the prices will be two dollars, one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents. Season tickets are transferable and the prices are such that students and teachers can attend all the recitals at a very moderate cost.

The Michelena Sisters

It is pleasant news to the many Californian friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fernando Michelena to hear of the success of their two daughters, Beatrice and Vera, who began their stage career less than two years ago. Miss Beatrice, a girl of twenty, is playing the leading role this season in "Peggy from Paris" under Henry N. Savage's management. Miss Vera, her younger sister, is leading woman in "The Jewel of Asia," a charming and successful musical play. Both productions will be seen in this city during the season.

Grace Morel Dickman has established her New York studio at 65 Central Park avenue. She is under the management of a prominent impresario of Gotham, to accept engagements in concert and oratorio and for private musicales. Mrs. Dickman has had several offers from Eastern managers to become the contralto of comic opera companies, but she does not care to go upon the stage.

Mr. H. B. Pasmore is preparing for a pupils' concert to be given at Lyric hall on Thursday evening, the twenty-ninth. Several new and beautiful voices will be heard for the first time, as well as the older pupils, some of whom are numbered among our best public singers.

The Pasmores' Studio

The Pasmores have moved from their old home in Washington street, to a larger house in Golden Gate avenue. The old place was quite an art centre, for within it dwelt, at different times, Henry Holmes, Helen Hyde, Mary Gamble, Wallace Irwin and others. Mr. Pasmore trained in his studio there Pauline Joran, who for several successive years was prima donna of the Carl Rosa Opera Company in London, and who retired when she became the Baroness von Hirst; Jacobina Wichman, concert soloist with the Levy troupe; Frances Temple Graham, the contralto and erstwhile Tivoli favorite; Anna Miller Wood, solo contralto of the First Unitarian church of Boston; Mrs. Hillman-Smith, San Jose's foremost vocal teacher; Mary Louise Carr-Moore and Virginia Graham, who fill the same enviable position in Seattle; Marie Stinson-Lathrop, concertizing successfully in the East; Emma Swazey, one of Nordica's proteges; Luella Wagor Coplin, of Oakland; Edwin Engelstadt, the Klondike king; W. J. Keeley; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morrissey, now of New York, and Prof. F. A. Bacon of Los Angeles. The latest pupil to achieve success outside of the local field is Anne Moore, who was lately appointed principal instructor in the vocal department at the State College for Girls in Alabama, an important position that carries a good salary and gives ample time for independent work on the outside. Prominent among our local professional singers who were trained at the Washington street studio, and who still study with Mr. Pasmore, are Mrs. Florence Wyman Gardner, Adelaide Birchler, Mrs. Beulah George-Fall, Mrs. Edith Scott Basford, Blanche Tolmie, Mrs. Arthur Fickenscher, Mrs. Charles C. Hughes, Mrs. Ingeborg-Larson, Anne Obermuller, Julia Kinsey, Lida Benedict, Louise Smith and A. E. Nowlan. There are pupils of Mr. Pasmore teaching in Boston, New York, Birmingham (Ala.), Seattle, San Jose, Los Angeles, Watsonville, Suisun, Vacaville, Salinas, Hanford and Lemoore. Miss Eva Stinson, a pupil of Mrs. Hillman-Smith of San Jose, is at the head of the singing department of the State University at Eugene, Oregon. And pupils of Mr. Pasmore's pupils are being successful, so that, musically, he is a grandfather and perhaps a great-grandfather. A conservative estimate of the number of pupils studying at present in the school or method established by Mr. Pasmore on this coast would be at least five hundred.

The Audience Liked Him

M. Camille Saint-Saens, the famous composer, who recently visited London for the rehearsals of his new opera, "Helene," at Covent Garden, went one night with some friends to a small music hall in a suburb of the city. As the pianist was a very poor player Saint-Saens took his place during an interval, and improvised so marvelously that the audience forced him to accompany all the songs during the rest of the evening. At the close of the concert the manager approached the great composer and offered to pay him the magnificent salary of one dollar and twenty-five cents a night if he would sign a contract with him.

"I am very sorry," replied Saint-Saens, "but it would not pay me. I get two dollars and fifty cents a night in Paris."

The first day of March, 1905, has been chosen as the date for the first performance at Monte Carlo of Mascagni's latest one-act opera, "Amica," which he undertook to write at the request of the publisher, Choudens. The libretto, by Paul Berel, has for its heroine an orphan girl who is loved by two men; one of them magnanimously gives up his claims and commits suicide, while she, who loves him, arrives just in time to witness it. The cast is to include Calve, Alvarez and Renaud.

A strange story comes from Prague concerning the "national funeral" given to the late Anton Dvorak. The Bohemian Academy of Sciences, the Artist-Beseda, of Prague, the National Theatre, the Conservatory of Music, and the city magistrates participated in the function. The expenses amounted to twenty-two hundred crowns, and the bill, so it is said, was sent to the composer's family.

About Grace Denio Litchfield's words in the poem "Good-bye" John C. Walling has placed a very charming and appropriate musical frame. Mr. Walling is one of the Californian song-writers whose works are well known in the East. He formerly resided in Oakland, where he was organist of the Lutheran church, but for some time past he has lived in Seattle.

The following reliable testimonial speaks for itself:

"I take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful curative powers of Charles Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. For many years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and intestinal catarrh. My California physician brought up my case before the Congress of Homeopathic Physicians held in Chicago in 1901. An eminent specialist in intestinal diseases advised the use of Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. His advice was followed and I have been restored to health.

The study of the five vowels is not all that is necessary to sing in a language, and particularly so in English. Very few English-speaking people are able to sing the phonetics of their language exempt from throatiness. Fundamentally, English phonetics cannot be emitted in singing as uttered in speech. From a vocal standpoint and through ten years of experience in teaching English-speaking singers, Mr. Crepau has made a vocal classification of all the English phonetic sounds. This classification enables English-speaking singers to master all the English phonetic sounds and renders them harmonious and easy to sing.

Letters

Mrs. Atherton's Complaint

The discussion which Mrs. Atherton started over the bourgeois character of American literature still keeps up in a small way; there is a constant though thin stream trickling through the columns of the papers open to letters on the subject, from which it would appear that there is a sufficient number of disgruntled authors of just such stories as she claims to want to see. It is one thing to echo a complaint but quite another to show a remedy. The writers, for example, who come forward to state that they have been "turned down" by timid editors do not adduce any proof to show the editors in the wrong. It is not unnatural for them to imagine all their stories masterpieces, but editors have a larger basis of comparison. Moreover, it is not proved, even though we accept for the nonce, the authors' opinion of their own productions, that there are enough readers ready to assent in their judgment to make it worth while for editors to break ranks. It takes money to run even a ten-cent magazine, and the necessary funds must come from subscribers. True it is the advertising patronage that makes a venture pay, but advertisers will not rush in where readers fight shy. If it could be demonstrated satisfactorily that there is a sufficient patronage waiting for a periodical which would suit Mrs. Atherton and her followers, they would not have to wait long to have their cravings satisfied. Meanwhile, it appears to be chiefly the disgruntled writers who complain, and writers are notoriously loth to spend money on books. Let those who want such virile literature as they cannot now command get together, pledge themselves to support their own magazine, forward their list to some enterprising purveyor of literary goods, and then, stand by their promises. Then, if there is such a thing to be got, their souls will not starve. Meanwhile, why should any editor lose the readers he has by attempting to cater to a class he cannot depend on? It is all very well to decry dollar-making, but without dollars precious little ever gets made.

In enumerating the factors which go towards the "making" of a book, I wonder that the size of the type, the number of pages and the selling price are never taken into consideration. It has to be a very good book in these days which may wind its slow length much beyond three hundred pages and with good, large type at that, not only because we live in such a hurry but because the constant strain of modern life, the brilliant electric lighting of streets and public assembly rooms, as well as of private houses and the dark rooms of modern flats and apartment houses have so affected the eyesight that there are comparatively few people who can bear the continuous application necessary for the size of lettering which was considered plain long after the middle of the last century. And as to cost, there is not such a mountain of difference between the merits of any half-dozen books of the moment, and the one which is fresh from the press and selling at the full price of one dollar and a half is very apt to be passed over for the week-old volume at the cut rate of one dollar and eight cents. There was an enormous sale of "Mrs. Wiggs" last winter, to meet the holiday demand, but "Mrs. Wiggs" was available at eighty cents, just about one-half the price of "the latest." "Mrs. Wiggs" and her pot-boiler successor, "Lovey Mary," together cost about the same as one other volume, and since money has a way of melting like snow during a holiday shopping tour, a few cents saved here and there are a consideration for people with purses not over-full. A pebble in just the right spot may change the course of a river.

White on Tourists

Stuart Edward White wrote feelingly of the genus Yosemite Tourist in the Outlook for August twentieth. Mr. White has been contributing a series of articles on mountain camping, a companion to his earlier work, "The Forest,"—the mountains which he is describing being those in the southern part of California. The tourist, according to Mr. White, is fearfully and wonderfully gotten up in the matter of costume, while as to other preparations for climbing and tramping he—and more particularly she—have never given a thought, and it takes more than short skirts, bloomers and high-laced boots to enable one to travel by trail. Incidentally Mr. White does not think much of Yosemite, which is to say he does not consider it the whole thing. In his opinion there are plenty of other valleys and canyons in the Californian mountains just as worthy of fame. Yosemite is in a way more compact. Everything is right there at hand—and one has but to turn the head or take a few steps to see anything, the result of which is a crowded impression and a lack of perspective. It is a fault not likely to suggest itself to any but a persistent wilderness traveler, such as the author, and just for this reason his comment deserves the more regard. People accustomed to level streets are not good judges of trails, and those whose ideas of height and mass are limited to sky-scrapers in the business districts, are not apt to have a working basis if comparison is to the tourist. We have all met them some time, and Mr. White is our spokesman.

Herr Schabelitz, a Zurich publisher who died recently, appears to have been both original and outspoken. He wrote only post cards, and some of them must have been anything but a joy to receive. In accepting the "Memoirs of Count Arnheim" he wrote, "I reserve the right to correct your infernally bad grammar," which is a right one cannot help but wish other publishers would exercise—if they know when grammar is bad. To another, a would-be historian, the word went out, "You do not want to study history; you want to learn how to write." Alas and alack! What would become of the paper manufacturers, and the printing craft and all its allied trades if only those who had mastered the art of writing were permitted to publish books. The postal authorities at Zurich must be kinder to the publisher than they are elsewhere too, for less than that has been made the basis of a suit for damages, and law suits appear to be quite as profitable to would-be authors in some sections of the world as the writing of boom books.

Joseph Lincoln's novel, "Cap'n Eri's Store," will lose none of its interest from its being known that the incident which marks the climax of the story is a transcript from life. It occurred about two years ago, when two coal barges went ashore, and in an attempt to rescue the crew in the height of a storm the panic-stricken men caused the wreck of the life boat which was sent to their rescue. All but one of the men was drowned and he was saved by the heroic efforts of Captain Mayo, of a wrecking schooner, who rowed out to the shoal in a dory.

Up to date there have been sold seven hundred and eighty thousand copies of "East Lynne." Whether that includes the paper-covered editions or not there is nothing to tell, but is there any one over the age of twenty-five who has not read it? "East Lynne" still sells but the sales are now chiefly confined to classes which make no claim to be educated. It was not always thus, though my lady now professes as much disdain for Mrs. Henry Wood and all her works as she does of melodrama on the stage. There has been a change in the fashion, but that is all. That "East Lynne" is not literature has nothing to do with the matter for it is as much literature as the average best-seller of the day.

And now it is Samuel K. Merwin's "Merry Anne" that is too slangy for English readers, who seem to be unable to stretch their minds sufficiently to take in anything but their own cockneyisms and provincialisms. The continuous complaint recalls an ancient anecdote of a John Bull family traveling on the continent. Mater familias, having overheard some reference to her party as foreigners, kindly undertook to explain matters. "I beg your pardon, but we are English. It is you who are foreigners." If English readers really cannot understand, or even make a tolerable guess at American colloquialisms, who do they attempt to read American books written in the vernacular? There is no more reason why they should read George Ade, or Samuel Merwin, or Wallace Irwin, when they profess to derive neither pleasure nor profit, than why they should invest their money in Greek or German books to hold upside down and stare at in the hope of being mistaken for learned linguists.

Wonderful are the devices of the literary advance agent. All sorts of advertisements that can by any possibility call attention to the wares in stock or the future output of the be-boomed author are diligently sought after or invented, and there is a close rivalry between the book factories and the pickle and breakfast mush men for something with which to catch the eye of the possible purchaser. For a good many years there has been a paying side product of the boomed novel in the shape of guides to places mentioned therein and identifications of characters, with anecdotes pertaining to them. Now we have come to the other extreme. A short story which was printed in one of the August monthlies was accompanied by a foot-note in which readers were given to understand that no portion of the narrative was based on fact.

Other People's Ideas

From "The Battle of the Strong," by Gilbert Parker:

When the tide of life beats high in two mortals, and they meet in the moment of its apogee, when all the nature is sweeping on without command, guilelessly, yet thoughtlessly, the mere lilt of existence lulling to sleep wisdom and tried experience—speculation points all one way. Many indeed have been caught away by such a conjunction of tides and they mostly pay the price. * * * But paying is part of the game of life: it is the joy of buying we crave * * * We would buy, and then behold, we must pay * * * and so on to the last foreclosure and the unmitigable end. * * * One of the two * * * had the nature of those who buy but once and pay the price but once; the other was of those who keep open accounts in the market of life. The one was the woman and the other was the man.

There is no reporting in the world so exact, so perfect, as that in a woman's mind, of the words, looks, and acts of her lover in the first days of mutual confession and understanding.

Philip: It's the people who try to be clever who never are; the people who are clever never think of trying to be.

Love and bitterness, joy and indignation, exultation and disappointment, all in one—how was it these could all exist in a woman's heart at once? Was it because Love was greater than all, deeper than all, overcame all, forgave all? and was that what women felt and did always? Was it their lot, their destiny? Must they begin in blind faith, then be plunged into the darkness of disillusion, shaken by the storm of emotion, taste the sting in the fruit of the tree of knowledge—and so on again the same, yet not the same?

Some natures cling to beliefs long after conviction has been shattered. These are they of the limited imagination, the loyal, the pertinacious, and the affectionate, the single-hearted children of habit; blind where they do not wish to see, stubborn where their inclinations lie, unamenable to reason, wholly held by legitimate obligations.

Love in itself is but a little pleasure; when it is given to the unworthy it becomes a torture.

There is no curtain so opaque as that which drops between the mind of man and the thing it is advantageous to forget.

To flatter is the worst fault in a gentleman, for flattery makes false friends, and the flatterer himself false.

The argument that a few octaves of notes furnish all the music cannot be brought against us as a reproach. We cannot speak a dozen words at once and produce a single impression, any more than we can put the noun before the article as we may strike one note before another.—F. M. Crawford.

A Teachers' Union

For some time past there have been rumors in the air that an effort would be made to organize a union among the public school teachers of this city. The idea has at last taken shape in the form of a very business-like communication from Harry A. Knox, president of the State Federation of Labor, inviting the teachers to send a representative from each school to meet the officials of the State Federation of Labor and arrange the details of organization. Setting aside the fact that a union among city employees is bad public policy, it is difficult to see what benefit would accrue to the teachers themselves were they to organize in this way. Individually certain teachers may have grievances; as a body they have little to complain of. They work about two hundred days in a year and are paid for three hundred and sixty-five. Under the new charter they have been paid regularly and promptly. While the salaries of the rank and file are not princely, neither are they niggardly, and it cannot be denied that many who are occupying special positions receive more than their services are worth. But the prizes of the department are usually the guerdon of political pull; they do not come by way of reward for hard work or as a recognition of special fitness. Unionism will not make them more easily attainable nor bring them any nearer to the ordinary workers of the class room. Whatever professional independence the teachers may now call their own would be sacrificed by allowing themselves to be organized into a union. They would simply be delivering themselves over hand and foot into the control of a Board of Education appointed by a Labor Party mayor. They would become subject to all the coercive methods identified with unionism. If they failed in submission to the labor leader and the walking delegate a loss of position would no doubt result. The question of the open shop could easily arise; the steadfast unionist would not be allowed to teach in the same school with the outsider, and even the children might be deprived of an education if they failed to display their parents' union card. The teaching body has for some years past been making a claim to be enrolled among the professions. A Teachers' Union, with all its possibilities of strikes, boycotts and pickets, and its affiliation with the Laundry Workers and the Scavengers, would put an end to all such pretensions. It is true that there is a Teachers' Union in England, and that it is a powerful and recognized body, but the conditions are so different that comparison is out of the question.

The College-Bred Politician

Last week the voice of David Starr Jordan of Stanford was heard in the land, uttering protest against graft. A little later, William Kent, an exponent of civic reform, was heard in the University of California, advising college men to get into politics and push the movement for political purity. As Town Talk has often pointed out, it is to the idealists of our university that we must look for the highest and most effective efforts to rouse public sentiment against corruption in office. The scholars of the country, devoted to the exposition of truth and contemptuous of the sordid aims of the worldly, are the men to lead the crusade against commercialism and graft. They are the men to incite scorn of wrong-doing in public life, and it is within their power to visit odium on the grafters with such directness as to deter others from engaging in vicious pursuits. It is well to advise college men to get into politics, but it is also well to exercise something more than moral suasion to keep them straight when they are once in. Some of the shrewdest grafters are college men. They make ill use of the learning imbibed in universities. It is their scholastic training that enables them to lead successfully the forces of evil against the moral hosts. There is a notable instance in this community today. It is openly charged that the present demoralization of this community is due to the machinations of a college-bred gentleman, one who is proud of his alma mater, the university of the State, the institution supported by the tax-payers in the hope that it will mould young men into good citizens. He bears the stamp of the approval of that noble institution, he is a member of its alumni association, and he is an alumnus in good standing. If it were the law that a college degree could be declared forfeited on proof of the holder's pernicious influence in politics, the faculty of the university would be empowered to investigate charges of corruption, and the investigation would be watched with a great deal of interest.

The Importance of Behavior

President Wheeler is being praised and widely quoted for his practical and pointed advice to the new crop of college students, but one would like to ask what good a college education is likely to be to young men who need the injunction to wash their ears daily and young ladies who must be told not to receive male visitors in their bed-rooms. If they have not had the home training and association which would make such instruction supererogatory, what possible advantage is the State liable to reap from giving them a chance to flirt with one another for four years? What we need today is not more men and women conversant with the insides of books, but concrete and specific examples of good breeding and gentle manners. A large proportion of the university graduates seek positions as teachers in the high schools throughout the State. Now, any one with good natural faculties and application can take an ordinary text-book and keep far enough ahead of a class to conduct recitations. There are convenient keys and other assistants obtainable by teachers, which enable them to reduce even this much exertion to the minimum. It is not book learning that is needed one-half so much as good behavior, and the co-ed who knows no better than to take young men to her bed-room, and who smokes her cigarettes with them, borrows their scarf pins, parades herself conspicuously in college colors and is prominent at all the fiestas and fandangos is not likely to have the proper effect on the young girl of today, who is vastly more in need of suppression than of encouragement in Hooliganism. By the time young women reach the Freshman stage of their educational career they are eighteen or nineteen years of age, and their habits and tendencies are pretty well fixed. They do not learn new tricks at college half so often as they gain additional freedom to practice the old ones, and their emancipation from restraint often gives them the opportunity they have lacked for doing what they had only thought of doing when at home. There is a lot of nonsense preached and written on the subject of the subduing influences of gentle womanhood on the wild and reckless male, but the simple truth is that the college girl is no other than the female species of the male student. What she does not bring with her in the matter of good breeding she will not acquire. So far from exercising a refining influence on the male students, she is more apt to be an incentive to rudeness. Advice is not needed so much as a better standard of admission which will effectually bar out those of flabby morality, slipshod mentality and physical impurity, and a system by which those who escape through the meshes of the entrance net can be caught and turned backwards.

Making An Example

It was only what might naturally be expected that we had an influx of thieves and thugs to help us entertain our Conclave visitors. That is what happens everywhere, no matter what the occasion which collects a crowd. It is the same in kind, and differs but in degree whether it be the inauguration of a President or the presence of a circus. But now one of our morning contemporaries cries out for the necessity of "making an example" of some of the scamps who have fallen into the clutches of the law. There should be no occasion for making examples, now or at any other time. Law-breakers should receive the punishment they deserve, no matter when they commit infractions, and if they were uniformly punished they would take fewer chances on committing crimes. As it is, we have long periods of leniency when judges feel good-natured, or perhaps when the criminals happen to be more or less of a power in the under world. Either they are enabled to escape arrest, or technicalities are interposed to prevent prosecution or to protect them from punishment. The city comes to be a sort of safe harbor for the criminal element, who flock hither and wax bolder and bolder until some particularly flagrant offense has been perpetrated, or until ordinary citizens are unsafe in the streets after dark. Then comes the heyday of the sensational newspaper, and bad as things really are reports are exaggerated. The cry for "examples" is raised and that very cry forms the basis for pleas of commutation, new trials, reversals of judgment, and a general upsetting of the judicial apple cart, on the ground of persecution, railroading, inflamed public sentiment or anything else that will give color to the argument of unfairness. We do not want special examples made, but we do need a general dead level of severity; not hysterical outbursts in individual cases, but unflinching justice calmly meted out, sentences deliberately imposed and then served out to the last letter. It is not spasmodic vengeance that insures respect for law, but the unhurried certainty that punishment will follow conviction and conviction will walk close to the heels of the crime.

Troubles of Royalty

Already the troubles of the infant Czarewitch have commenced. His name is said to be unsatisfactory to the populace, but that is not by any means the worst of it. A story is being circulated to the effect that the boy is not the scion of the royal family, but the son of a peasant, substituted in place of the fifth daughter born to the Czar and secretly disposed of. If the child were the only royal infant of which such a rumor were set in motion it might gain some credit, but as it is, there is scarcely one of all the European rulers who has not been subjected to some such suspicion. In this instance it is laid at the door of the Nihilists, but far more likely it is in reality, as most such tales are, the work of his own relatives, whose chances of coming to the throne are reduced to zero. Doubts have been cast, in the same way, on the legitimacy of the present King of Spain, as well as upon that of his father, and all his grand aunts. Victor Emanuel II. was accused of being peasant born, and not only was it said that the Empress Eugenie was an illegitimate child of the Spanish Queen, but that Napoleon III. himself was no Napoleon. A story of this kind which has had more than casual assertion to back it concerned Milan of Servia, who is said to have been not the son of Milosh Obrenovitch, but the offspring of his sister Anna and a shepherd of whom she became enamored after the death of her husband. The child was taken into the royal family, which was childless, to save her reputation. The same trick, it will be remembered, was attempted by the late Alexander and his queen, Draga, but was not successfully carried out. As a result of the insinuations, hints and innuendoes, it is the custom in monarchical countries to secure witnesses to the births of royal children. Cabinet ministers and secretaries of state are invited to be present on behalf of the people so that, in case of question, they can testify to the genuineness of the child. In some instances they are introduced into the very room, but more often are disposed in an adjoining apartment with the door open between. In Spain the newborn child is laid on a silver salver and borne by its father into the hall, where are assembled the nobles and grandees of the realm, in order that they may see for themselves, before there is any possibility of a substitution. These precautions have grown largely out of the complications subsequent to the birth of the son of James II. of England, "the Old Pretender." James had made himself so unpopular in religious matters that the people had a dread of seeing him succeeded by a Catholic prince, but in addition there was the purely political element, the adherents of his daughters, and the Hyde faction. Both Mary and Anne found plausible excuse to be absent from the palace when their little brother made his appearance, so that they were unable to give more than hearsay evidence, and good care was taken to cast doubt and create mystery, so that they might, with a show of justice, refuse to acknowledge the legitimacy of the heir. In constitutional countries the presence of the witness for the people is provided for by law, but elsewhere, as in Russia, the monarch himself insists as a matter of precaution. For all that, the tongue of slander is not so easily curbed.

A Shameful Practice

Some of the little "savages" who are on exhibition at the St. Louis Exposition have picked up enough English to know what the term means and enough American "to go on strike." Consequently a number of them refused, recently, to attend the school established for their benefit, claiming that to refer to them as "savage" was a deadly insult which they would not tamely submit to. It is a hopeful sign if the little strangers refuse to be exploited as wild animals, and full time that we had an end put to these "village" exhibits at the big fairs. More harm than good invariably follows in their train, if indeed any good can come of them. Passing over the obvious aspects of the case, the practically naked men and women shivering in an unwonted climate, the more or less lewd dances and other demonstrations which appeal to the prurient-minded, and the utter failure of the effort to reproduce native life by the suggestion of a handful of individuals set down in a strange environment, there remains the consideration of the effect on the people themselves. A few years ago there was an exhibition of African savages in London town and titled society dames went amongst them feeling their muscles, patting brawny backs and conducting themselves in a manner that they would not have dreamed of with men of their own color. They looked upon the Kaffirs and Zulus as they would upon horses and dogs, but the savages themselves took a different view and those who understood something of the languages affirmed that the ladies who invited the chiefs to ride in their carriages or to visit them in their drawing-rooms would have been aghast could they have known how their actions were interpreted. It was not until one foolish girl insisted on marrying her black lover that eyes were opened even a little bit, and those best qualified to judge say that the life of every white woman in South Africa has been rendered less secure as a consequence of society's interest in the Kaffir kraal. Mar-maduke Picthall says English and American women little realize the interpretation put upon their freedom of speech and action when among Mohammedans, who judge by their own standard and boast of the privileges they have but to take. Among the Indians there has grown up a class who expect to live by these public exhibitions. They are not the least intelligent of their tribes, by any means, but often, if not always, those who have been educated in the Government schools with a view to having them act as examples to the flock. But they have imbibed enough civilization to be ready to earn money with the least exertion, so, instead of practicing the handicrafts and the art of husbandry, they revert to the blanket and to the reproduction of savage rites which they are supposed to have been educated out of. So many Indians have been abandoned in Europe from time to time by unsuccessful Wild West shows that the Indian Department at Washington finally stepped in and forbade their leaving the country at all. We saw the same thing happen with the Filipino Fair just after the war with Spain. At first the exhibition was a successful novelty, but when it no longer paid expenses the enterprise was abandoned and the strangers, with neither money nor means of immediate livelihood, were left to their fate, and finally returned to their island home at the expense of the Government. On the other hand, it is an open secret that the Chinese admitted under bonds for exhibition purposes manage to remain in spite of the Exclusion law, and do a thrifty stroke of business in addition by exchanging with some fellow countrymen who wish to return to their native land without parting with the passage money. It is doubtful whether any of the savages, or semi-savages, lured away by concessionaires, have much of an idea what is really wanted of them. It is easy to misrepresent matters, and then to fall back on mistakes in interpretation as an excuse for discrepancies, precisely as the blackbirding pirates secured their "contract laborers" and sold them into slavery. So if the little Filipinos who are so vigorously objecting to their exploitation as savages are in earnest in their protest, perhaps we shall see the end of these useless attachments to national expositions.

A Matter of Taste

BY THEODORE BONNET.

According to newspaper report some surprise was occasioned the other day when a man permitted his wife to obtain a divorce from him, for he might have availed himself of certain indiscretions on her part. His failure to do so was considered odd. Yet it is not an uncommon practice nowadays, in polite circles, for a man to safeguard from public scandal the wife of his bosom who has had the misfortune to dishonor him. And why not? It is an easy way out of an embarrassing situation to shoulder the onus of marital infelicity. It is not unmanly for a husband to have compassion for the woman who has dishonored him, to withhold the instrument of revenge, curb his wrath and stifle his resentment. It is a secret celestial influence that enables men to undervalue the ordinary gratifications of wounded spirit.

Collusive divorces are prohibited by law, but when cause of action arises and separation is imperative, it would be no serious offense against the majesty of the law for the wronged husband graciously to act as defendant with the object of sparing the feelings of his faithless spouse. He gains nothing by branding the woman, and he surely does not conceive it to be his duty to the State to hold her up to public obloquy. Though it is to the interest of society to stimulate prejudice against adultery, and to make the crime as repugnant as possible, it is hardly to be contended that the husband is a divinely authorized scourge of vice. He is no more than he is a monument of fidelity. Nor has he inherited the prerogative of the ancient mob that stoned the adulteress along the highway. However, in proclaiming the infamy of his wife he does not violate the ethics governing the conduct of a gentleman. It is the privilege of proud man to regard an unfaithful wife as a loathsome creature, and to treat her as such, not only by separating from her, but by humiliating her. The moralists of old so decreed, and ancient tradition so prescribes. It is a sentiment handed down to us from the centuries ago that though wives ought to honor their husbands and husbands their wives, it should be remembered that men are a degree higher in the scale of creation than women. Of course it is a strictly masculine sentiment, but it is the basis of an unwritten law that holds women to a stricter accountability than that to which men are subject. The unwritten law is not in harmony with the law of the land, but it is enforced by society, which imposes a penalty for the transgressions of the wife but none for those of the husband. Being sensible of this partiality the charitable husband, the one softened by that true gentility which springs from dignity of sentiment, may be inclined to dissemble for the protection of the woman who has sinned against him. Is it to be presumed that he is not jealous of his honor inasmuch as he has not adopted the popular mode of vindicating it? There are pedants in breeding as well as in learning and they may be able to answer. As for me, I have never been able to understand how a man may vindicate his honor by inflicting punishment on the woman who has brought shame on his home.

In my opinion the strongest argument in favor of the public branding of faithless wives is that the importance of preserving the integrity of matrimony, the axis on which the whole social economy revolves, demands that force of example should never be neglected. But if it were the sense of society that public policy demanded the ex-posure of faithless wives a law would be passed requiring husbands to wield the branding iron. Such is not the sense of society or of the church. In this Christian era it is not believed that any appreciable number of women are virtuous simply because they lack the courage of their passions. Few people agree with that distinguished philosopher, Schopenhauer, in the assertion that female honor is purely utilitarian, arising from the necessity of esprit de corps. He argued that women depend on men in all the relations of life, and that as man possesses all the good things of earth by reason of his superior physical and intellectual power, it behooves women to get her share by conquest. To this end the honor of all women depends on the integrity of each representative of the sex. Each woman is therefore in honor bound not to give herself to man except in marriage, and to remain faithful to the terms on which man capitulates, because infidelity is conduct calculated to frighten other men from making similar surrender.

We who have a higher appreciation of women than did Schopenhauer know that the sense of honor is a species of idealism that had its inspiration in religion, which chastens the heart and perfects character. And yet Schopenhauer was not far from the truth when he argued the interest of the sex in the integrity of each representative thereof. The sex assumes the role of custodian of the morals of each representative, and is most insistent on the expose of delinquencies; probably because of the satisfaction derived from shining by contrast. If there were no bad women in the world virtue would be commonplace. So it is to the interest of the sex that the delinquencies of individual representatives should be exposed. That, however, is not the stimulus to the action of wronged husbands who drag the names of frail women through the muck of the divorce courts, exulting in the great scandal they have precipitated, and too often unmindful of the stain cast on innocent children. It appears to be the exceptional husband who is restrained by a sense of delicacy or by regard for his children. The husband who invites the world to the feast of scandal is usually moved by no loftier spirit than that of revenge. Perhaps he is a salutary instrument operating for the preservation of the sanctity of the home. Perhaps the effect of his vindictive conduct is wholesome. And yet I am inclined to prefer that finer temperament which fortifies a man with the arms of reason against the furious appetite of revenge. I am ever mindful of the words of an old English philosopher, that the great point of honor in men is courage, and in women chastity; that if a man loses his honor in one encounter it is not impossible for him to regain it in another, whereas a slip in woman's honor is irrecoverable. I have no censure or scorn for the husband who, having pity for his erring wife, exhibits magnanimity in the casting off of her without taking the jeering world into his confidence, who in resenting her departure from virtue is mild in his revenge. Generosity toward a woman who has sinned needs no apology.

Larcenous Investment Companies

BY GRANT CARPENTER.

A foreigner who reads the newspapers of this country has some foundation for the belief that the American people have become "mathematically mad." One cannot pick up a single edition of any metropolitan daily without being instantly fascinated by great columns of figures being put through all sorts of fantastic evolutions in bewildering review. "Colonel Mazuma" at the head of a regiment of ciphers is made to represent the fictitious value of the Standard Oil Trust's stock, and as naughty naughts are deployed by battalions, companies, platoons and fours the spectator is given an object lesson in the purchasing value of John D. Rockefeller's income by the year, month, day and minute. When the review is ended the spectator turns away to dream of his own modest income growing from one figure and one cipher a week to a great army of volunteer naughts, only to encounter the redoubtable, a modern Joan of Arc, fiercely battling at the head of a slender column for the inalienable right of every woman to conceal her age and at the same time raise a large family on $14 a week, even though a monstrosity of a hen and a half is busy laying an impossible egg and a half in a given time and a half, and while the public is getting short weight in everything but gold bricks. The fascinated immediately seizes a pencil and paper and enlists in Ann's army of raw recruits instead of trying to figure out the problem of augmenting his own income. Chivalrous, but impractical!

It should be understood, however, that the press is the great public educator, and all of these problems are mere object lessons in the kindergarten of mathematics. They have, no doubt, as much practical value as the sums set down in the average primary arithmetic of the common schools such as: If eggs are 20 cents a dozen and butter 23 cents a pound, what will an omelet souffle cost? With the passing of a few generations a business man who reads his daily paper every morning before going to work and pays strict attention to the prescribed course in mathematics will be able to tell with unflinching accuracy how loud a "squeal" will result when a "sucker" is subtracted from his money, and that with a mere glance at the size of the roll.

Has it occurred to any one of the "mathematically mad" that the amount of time and energy wasted in trying to ascertain the age of a supposititious female, or the amount of happiness obtainable for $14 would have saved working men and women millions of dollars had it been utilized in shedding the light of an exact science upon the contracts sold by get-rich-quick concerns? Is it too late now to calculate how long it will be before the authorities stop such wholesale and barefaced thievery? Not a single paper has submitted this important problem to its readers though the literature of about twenty of these larcenous concerns advertised as "investment companies" shows the crying need of a little education along this line. Here is the contract offered the gullible by one company, which has been pre-eminently successful, because it "offers the most favorable terms to investors," but it differs in no essential particular from the contracts of other companies:

The contract holder binds himself to pay $5 down and $1.50 a week for thirty weeks, making a total of $50. The first payment of $5 goes to the company for its profit; 25 per cent of all payments goes to the company to meet current expenses; 65 per cent goes into a redemption fund to meet the obligations of the company upon the contracts sold; 10 per cent goes into a "reserve fund" which is always "held in reserve" and in no case inures to the benefit of the contract holders. A contract matures in 30 weeks, and "when there is money enough in the redemption fund to the credit of the contract" the holder shall receive $100 worth of merchandise or $85 in cash.

I will concede that I am no mathematician, which, perhaps, accounts for the fact that I cannot convince myself that 65 per cent of $45 is equivalent to $85 in coin, and the problem becomes more complicated when, by the manipulation of the redemption fund but 65 per cent of $30 is left to pay $85 or buy $100 worth of merchandise. The prospective purchaser whose suspicion is aroused by this apparent paradox is assured that a great many do not keep up their payments and their contracts lapse, and are told that the lapses are large enough to make up the deficit; but still only 65 per cent of all money paid in after the first payment of $5 ever reaches the redemption fund whether the contracts lapse or not. By a trick of book-keeping which makes embezzlement easy, more than half of all the money apportioned to the redemption fund out of the payments made on every contract is withdrawn and pocketed by the promoters of the "investment" company, for every time a contract is sold the fund is charged with a liability of $100. $15 is withdrawn and if the contract matures but $85 is paid. Now figure.

Assume that one contract is sold every week for six weeks. (It really makes no difference in the calculation whether one or one hundred contracts are sold). At the end of the sixth week the finances of the company show:

Contract No.	Amount Paid.
1 . . . . .	$14.00
2 . . . . .	12.50
3 . . . . .	11.00
4 . . . . .	9.50
5 . . . . .	8.00
6 . . . . .	6.50

Total . . . . . $61.50

Apportionment of Funds.

To company (6 first payments) . . . . .	$30.00
To company (expense fund) . . . . .	7.87 1-2
To company (reserve fund) . . . . .	3.15
To redemption fund . . . . .	20.47 1-2

Thus the company pockets $40.52½ and the redemption fund has received but $20.47½ for the benefit of the six contract holders.

At the expiration of thirty weeks when contract No 1 matures the six contract holders have paid in $277.50, apportioned as follows:

To company (6 first payments) . . . . .	$30.00
To company (expense fund) . . . . .	61.87 1-2
To company (reserve fund) . . . . .	27.75
To redemption fund . . . . .	160.87 1-2

The redemption fund has already been charged with a liability of $600 on the six contracts, but the promoters know that they will not be called upon to pay more than $85 on each contract, so they immediately withdraw from the redemption fund the difference, amounting to $90.

That leaves a balance of $70.87½ in the redemption fund for the benefit of the six contracts, one of which has already matured. During the thirty-first week contract No. 2 matures and the five remaining contract holders pay in $7.50, of which $4.87½ is added to the redemption fund. It now contains $75.75 and is charged with a liability of $510. During the thirty-second week contract No. 3 matures, $6 is paid in, and the redemption fund swells to $79.65. In the thirty-third week contract No. 4 matures and the three remaining contract holders pay in $4.50. The redemption fund is increased to $82.57½. During the thirty-fourth week contract No. 5 matures, $3 is paid in, and the redemption fund grows to $84.52½. In the thirty-fifth week the last of the six contracts matures, $1.50 is paid in, and the redemption fund contains $85.50 — enough to pay the amount due on the first matured contract. Thus it will be seen that contract No. 2 cannot be paid until six more "suckers" are caught for $50 each, and of all who invest one out of every six may be paid. The financial standing of the company at the end of the thirty-fifth week is as follows:

Amount paid in by contract holders.....	$300.00
Company takes (six first payments)....	$30.00
Company takes (reserve fund).....	27.00
Company takes (expense fund).....	67.50
Company takes (from redemption fund)...	90.00
	<hr/>
Balance in redemption fund.....	$85.50

Despite the fact that lapses are an inconsidered trifle in the calculations of all of the close figuring insurance companies in which policies run for years instead of weeks, it is asserted in the literature of all of these "investment companies" that the immense profit paid to contract purchasers comes from this source, but it may be as well to figure out the percentage of lapses that would be necessary to pay the profits promised. Take the $100 paid in by two contract holders as the basis for the percentages in the division of the money between the promoters and the investors. The company takes and retains:

Two first payments.....	10 per cent
Two $15 withdrawals from the redemption fund.....	30 per cent.
Expense fund .....	22 1-2 per cent.
Reserve fund.....	9 per cent.
Total.....	71 1-2 per cent.

Thus but 28½ per cent of all money paid in goes for the benefit of contract holders. Assume that seven men take out contracts simultaneously, and one of them completes his payments, while the other six pay in $48.50 each, or a total of $291, and then lapse. Of the $341 paid in the company would take 71½ per cent, or $243.81½, and the redemption fund would receive $97.18½. The successful investor who kept up his payments would receive $85 and there would be a balance in the redemption fund of just $12.18½. It is clear then that the man who gambles upon the inability of his less fortunate fellows to make the payments on their "investments" can win only when six out of every seven make all but one of their payments, and then permit their contracts to lapse. If the contract has any value whatever where is the man who cannot raise $1.50 in order to collect $85.

It does not seem possible that human credulity could be so elastic, yet very recently the books of one of the most prosperous of these "investment companies" fell into the hands of a receiver and showed that $160,000 had been taken from the public in less than a year, and in five months the two men who promoted the scheme with the aid of dummy directors divided between them something over $48,000 after all expenses and commissions to agents had been paid, and still had the reserve fund to carry to British Columbia with them. The books showed that the company had outstanding about seven thousand contracts; that less than ten per cent of all contracts had lapsed, and that ninety per cent of all that had lapsed had made but one payment of $5, which was pocketed by the company and was of no benefit to the contract holders. About that time a meeting of the "board of directors" of the company was called, and it was reported, according to the minutes of the meeting that the lapses had not been coming up to expectations. This was accompanied by the recommendation that "something be done." Something was done. The company assiduously circulated reports of its own insolvency in order to force lapses, and then commenced work on the second stage of the swindle. When the holders of matured contracts clamored for their money the promoters told them they were unable to pay at the present time, but explained that they had organized a new corporation which would take up their contracts and pay the money due on them in one year with interest at six per cent. And the men who had been buncoed accepted the promissory note of the confidence operators payable in one year. The contract holders who had not completed their payments were told that if they would surrender their contracts, accept the contract of the new company and complete their payments to it they would receive their money back in one year with interest. Thus those who had not been already wholly fleeced submitted themselves for another trimming.

Though the United States Government has declared the contracts of these "investment companies" fraudulent and denied the use of the mails; though the Attorney-General of this State has commenced actions to revoke the charters of some of these companies; though many of these concerns have collapsed and their promoters have fled with the coin of their contract holders; though thousands upon thousands have been swindled, still contract holders are paying in money in the hope that they will realize on their investments, and stranger still, hundreds of new contracts are being sold every day. The public would be surprised to learn the names of men of professional and commercial prominence in the community who are being caught, and whose names are being used by the swindlers as a bait to catch others.

The crime, and there is absolutely no doubt that the scheme is criminal, is larceny by trick and device. The literature used to entrap the unwary shows plainly that it is a preconceived scheme to wheedle money from the gullible and to keep it. The investor is induced to bet that enough men will not keep up their payments and permit their contracts to lapse to pay him an immense profit, and there is no difference between this game and the one where the stranger wants to see the Mint, is taken to a room and induced to bet his money on a poker hand. It is larceny, LARCENY, LARCENY.

When He Toils Not Nor Spins

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

And he saw that rest was good, and that the land it was pleasant. And bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant unto tribute.— Genesis, xlix: 15.

It has been said of the Bourbon that he seldom dies and never resigns. The missionary in the Orient lives to a hale old age, and he seldom returns to the country whence he came. The climate of China and Japan is dry, invigorating, and conducive in many other ways to longevity. There are diseases, to be sure, that are very fatal to the unsanitary native population, but the missionary is singularly exempt. Two reasons are assigned for this exemption from the ills that the flesh of Asia is compelled to bear—the missionary prayer and the missionary caution. The first thing a missionary learns when he comes into the death zone of the Far East is to look after his stomach. He lives on the fat of the land, well cooked, and avoids the raw water and the raw vegetables. Thus he dodges death's darts "on the firing line" of the East and preserves his precious life for "the glory of God," and incidentally for the regenerating and uplifting influence that he may exert on the immortal part of the heathen with whom he may be brought in contact by force of circumstances.

The missionary is one of the most prolific sources of human supply in Asia. The average missionary family is larger than the average Japanese family. And the Japanese are the parents of many children; there is not a child in Japan past the age of five years that does not bear another, younger child, on its back; and the mothers of Japan sit nursing an infant per mother on every doorstep in the empire. The children of the missionary are a necessity in that they are a perpetual source of revenue at the rate of one hundred dollars per child annually. The foreign mission boards of Europe and America provide this amount for the education of the children of missionaries born abroad. The money thus contributed is, of course, pocketed by the missionary, who placates his conscience with the sophistical syllogism that as he is the teacher of his children he is therefore entitled to this compensation set apart for their education.

I know one missionary family of the Episcopal denomination in Japan who accomplished the "grand tour" of Europe on the proceeds of this "educational" fund. There were in this family four children, a father and a mother, to say nothing of a "chow" dog, who had been taught to stand on his hind legs and bow to the Japanese salutation of "Ojinga." The dog followed the family through Europe, and his intelligence, as manifested in his comprehension of the meaning of this Japanese word, was the wonder of all with whom he came in contact, including the servants of the inns and taverns, who otherwise berated the missionary outfit for their parsimony in the matter of tips and gratuities.

This family had been saving "the children's money" for ten years—ever since the birth of the oldest. The parents, however, had not stinted themselves in respect of excursions back to their homes in Ohio and New Jersey. During their absence from the vineyard the children were in charge of an amah, and the father and mother traveled on the usual "missionary rate" generously fixed by the steamship and railroad companies. I believe this missionary and his wife "returned" to America three times during the period preceding the "grand tour." On their return to Japan they "took the children" and hid them to Nikko to spend the hot summer months of June, July, August, September and October. It may have been wholly accidental that these three journeys to and from America were so timed that they did not interfere with the summer "rest" prescribed for all missionaries laboring in the Oriental vineyard.

My observation of the missionary in China and Japan induces the suspicion that he is forever taking a "rest cure." When the weather is pleasant in the lowlands he makes the pretense of "serving the Master" according to the missionary method; but when the "Great Heat" is imminent he leaves the heathen and his immortal soul to their fate and ministers to his own bodily comfort in the cool altitudes

"Where a wind ever soft from the blue heaven blows,
And the groves are of laurel and myrtle and rose."

In China there are two missionary resorts justly famed throughout the Orient for their recuperative qualities. One of these sanitoriums where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary missionary is at rest, is Kuling, in the Lu Shan, a mountain range dipping down into the Yangtze river out of the Province of Kiang Si. The other is Pei-ta-ho, on the seashore in the Province of Chili, half the distance between Tientsin and Newchwang.

Let me picture the delights of Kuling. At an elevation of three thousand five hundred feet above sea level Kuling's temperature never falls below fifteen degrees Fahrenheit, while careful observation during the summer of 1902 showed that the mean maximum and minimum for July were seventy-six and sixty-six degrees respectively, and for August seventy-six and sixty-three respectively. July and August are the missionary months in Kuling. During July and August every missionary and every mother's son of a missionary in Central China is resting from his arduous toil, in Kuling. At no season, however, is Kuling deserted. Some of the missionary families are resting there all the time.

"The Estate," as it is called, is located in a valley and consists of one hundred and thirty-two houses built of dressed stone, quarried in the immediate vicinity by the cheapest coolie labor. The majority of these houses are of the bungalow type, which means that they are elegant villas provided with all the comforts of a well appointed home. There are also a number of very handsome larger buildings, conspicuous among which is the structure dedicated to the purposes of the China Inland Mission. Even the missionary does not pretend that the bungalows of Kuling are "humble cots," or that they were built of "the few remaining bricks" after a "worthy sanctuary had been erected to the glory of the Most High." But neither does the most conscientious and candid missionary admit that these bungalows are the visible and beautifully tangible result of the pennies, nickels and dimes of innocent and credulous children of the Sunday schools of Europe and America buncoed into believing that their contributions to the foreign missionary funds of their respective churches were for the spiritual and bodily welfare of the poor heathen of China.

Kuling is conducted on "business principles," for the monetary profit of the missionary managers. It is widely advertised as "a summer and health resort," and "admirably adapted for a winter sanatorium." "For winter residence," say these messages to the general public, "the ordinary stone bungalow is quite suitable, but it is advisable that the verandah should be glazed in." Here we have proof positive that the lot of the missionary in China is not an unhappy one—that he lives in stone bungalows with "verandas glazed in," that he enjoys a comfortable income not only from the Sunday school dupes of his native land, but also from the laity of the immediate neighborhood seeking the benefits of a "summer health resort," and the restful recuperation of a "winter sanatorium," and that he unflinchingly practices many of the sordid and deceptive arts of the unscrupulous real estate boomer and the all-round grafter.

Now let us see how the "poor heathen" whose souls are "the constant solicitude" of the "self-sacrificing" missionaries, are treated by these "shepherds" pasturing their "flocks" on the green slopes of Kuling. Preliminary to the specific proof that the missionaries of Kuling use their "converts" as chattel slaves to minister to the missionary luxury of this Chinese spa, I will say that the term "cash" is a designation for an insignificant copper coin, a thousand of which are required to make the value of a Mexican dollar worth in American gold between forty and forty-five cents as the managers of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank—the arbiters of Chinese currency and exchange—may dictate. The schedule of "coolie hire" in Kuling is as follows: Chair coolies, forty cash an hour, one hundred and twenty cash per half day, two hundred cash per day. The half-day is reckoned in the morning till one o'clock P. M., and in the afternoon between one o'clock P. M. and dusk. I will let the curious reader figure for himself how much the "poor heathen" gets from his "shepherd" as his wage may be calculated in American gold. And when he has made his calculation I shall ask him if he thinks this literal interpretation of the Master's charge as set forth in Luke x, 7, is just in its application—if the missionary laborer is "worthy of his hire" is it not fair that the coolie laborer should also be held worthy of more than the pittance of ten cents a day—the average amount of a little Sunday school girl's weekly contribution to the foreign missionary fund?

Have you ever seen a hired chair coolie at work? Have you contemplated the toil of two chair coolies climbing the steep trails that lead to Kuling bearing two hundred pounds of fatted missionary? If it has never been your fortune to see this thing as I have seen it, you can have no conception of the task performed almost daily by these "poor heathen" on behalf of their pampered missionary masters masquerading before the world as "self-sacrificing," "self-denying," meek and lowly disciples of Him who said unto them, "The harvest truly is great; . . . . . go your ways: behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves; carry neither purse nor scrip, nor shoes; . . . . . and into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house."

Cortelyou's Ideas on California

Genial General Stone is just back from the East after propounding that mightily interesting campaign question to Manager Cortelyou: "What's going to be done for California?" with a significant eye the while on the campaign sack. Hoot, lad, but the canny Cortelyou didn't need a phonograph to tell the visiting statesman that on his recent Western trip he had thoroughly sized up the political situation in California and the other Pacific States. He gave his visitor a cordial welcome, extended the glad hand, proffered the freedom of the city, thrust tons of campaign literature upon him, gave him all the counter-signs and grips of the campaign—except a grip on the bulging campaign sack. Why and wherefore? Because California, Lucky California, Golden California, Staunch old Republican California is expected to be wise after the glorious treatment she has received under the last Republican administrations and stand staunchly on the firing line without any bottle medicine, political pap, mucha mazuma, or recourse to the national sugar barrel. The canny Cortelyou indicated that, more than any other State, she had profited through the three great party coups: the acquisition of Hawaii, the war that brought us the Philippine Islands and the building of the Panama Canal. Wherefore should she ask for cash?

Ask Him "What's Doing"

In the last four years the Republican party had given California bountiful chances to reap golden harvests through Pacific trade in lumber, wheat, fruits, and wine and other products developed by Republican diplomacy. Wherefore ask for coin? Take instructions instead; and Stone did. That's why if anyone now asks him "What's doing?" he solemnly hands him a pamphlet on "The National Issues." In a nutshell the battle ground of parties is marked out as centering about New York, and that's where the heavy guns of both sides are to settle the result. Along with the campaign instructions California is promised a batch of good Eastern orators to leaven up the home talent. Secretary Shaw opened up here, Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture will follow at an early date, and others just as strong are in line to swing around the big circle and swell the G. O. P. chorus.

Strategy in The Fifth

Friends of E. A. Hayes are working like Trojans to land him a winner in the Congressional fight. They are highly elated over the fact that the Labor Party has gone to Williams instead of Wynn, who had figured strongly on capturing that element. Naturally the Wynn workers are in a measure flabbergasted by this flank movement. They and the other pencilers have figured out that Williams cannot get all the labor vote; that the best he can do is to play side-show to Wynn and draw off part of his votes. The question is, How many? The Hayes leaders believe the split will push their man to the front by two thousand votes. But even with this promising forecast they're not allowing any votes to pass them. Hayes has split his fighting force into two wings with a view to "Kuropatkining" the enemy. The San Jose wing is dubbed the "Teetotaler Brigade," assigned for service in San Jose, where red lights and red drinks are tabooed. The other brigade, yclept "Old Ironinsides," is harrying the enemy in the dark places south of Market street, where lights are red and the drinks are naturally likewise. Scattered between these two heavy wings Hayes has a lot of picked skirmishers who are continually raiding the Wynn and Williams forces, scattered about San Mateo, Redwood City, Palo Alto and Menlo. He has the ports of Mountain View and Redwood City blockaded with picked crews of lumber schooners so there'll be no repetition on his side of the Port Arthur and Vladivostok disasters. E. A. Hayes declares he has his own fight well in hand, but what worries him and his brother, J. O. Hayes, is the question what effect his success will have on J. O.'s chances in the gubernatorial fight two years hence. J. O. has marked that persimmon for his own and, the voters willing, he is determined to get it. The counselors of the brothers are dubious on the point. But sufficient unto the day is the work cut out for the nominee. The brothers will tackle the matter more vigorously when they come to the gubernatorial bridge two years hence.

Ruef on Another Raid

The thin red lines are drawing very close for the Republican Legislative convention, and heads are beginning to stir the surface of numbers of blind pools. Ruef with his irrepressible raiding proclivities is undertaking to capture the "hopelessly Democratic" districts south of Market street for his Republican party. By the adroit use of labor indorsements, by dubious promises that induce desertions and by the use of several organizations impressed into service by Schmitz, he may succeed in flanking the enemy and winning in some districts. It's simply a raid: nothing will be lost; everything won will be used as a red marker.

Davis in The Fourth

Ex-Governor Gage was in town last week and his appearance created an unusual amount of head bumping among the wiseacres. Of late his visits haven't portended anything in a political way, but on this occasion it did. He came up to press his old secretary, Will Davis, to take the nomination for Congress in the Fourth district, Davis's friends are a unit in believing that he would be particularly strong in that much debated ground. They have been rounding up everyone with any influence on him to urge him to get in and make a fight for the place. As he played a material part in satisfactorily settling several strikes they argue that he stands strong with labor and could split that element against the other side.

Pardee Laying Live Wires

The half-dozen candidates in training to capture the Gubernatorial plum must reckon on Pardee, who is quietly laying his wires to capture a second term "all the while, all the while." Of course Pardee would like to succeed Perkins in the Senate, but unfortunately there is a two-year break at the very point where he would like to step from the Governor's chair into a seat in the United States Senate. 'Tis true he might put in a trusted ally to fill the interim; but though allies may be trusted they're not always faithful. Again, a "machine" carefully constructed to fill that gap may, in time, slip a cog or loose a bolt; in fact, be useless when called upon at the critical moment to do working duty. What changes a little time and a few swiftly-moving events produce on the political horizon. Six months ago Alameda county was agog over the three-cornered bone-cracking contest that was promised when Pardee, Metcalf and Perkins should enter the arena and do battle for the toga. Now Metcalf is in the Cabinet and — well, ask any of the three what he thinks of such a contest now.

"So the doctor thinks you can stand an operation?"
"Yes; he looked me up in Bradstreet's."

Tied One Thousand Marriage Knots

During the next few months press notices referring to the Rev. J. A. B. Wilson will likely be wafted down from the slopes of the Sierras. The Rev. J. A. B. loves advertising. It is as the breath of his nostrils. Though he has been banished to a charge in Grass Valley he will soon be living up to his record as a champion matrimonial knot-tier. The other day he celebrated the performance of his thousandth marriage, at his San Francisco church. He had officiated at that number of weddings since his arrival in this city a few years ago. Whether the Rev. J. A. B. will find his Grass Valley charge a congenial one is a matter for doubt. The church-goers in that town are very conservative in their ideas, and the methods of the modern pulpit practitioner are likely to strike them as being a bit—well, overdrawn.

The Urquharts' Estimation of Bellew

Society has always taken a keen interest in the heart affairs of Mrs. James Brown Potter and Kyrle Bellew. The critics who took his pulse in the Sunday papers seem agreed that "Cora," not "Calais," is written across his heart. And the announcement that Mr. Bellew will again play Mrs. Potter's "lead" hints that her regard for him has been reawakened. Her own family are mightily pleased at this as they have always held Mr. Bellew high in their esteem. Despite the fact that the Urquharts have been domiciled in San Francisco many years and that their social position in the East and South was gilt-edged, they have lived in seclusion since coming to California. The story of the Urquharts and Potters has been frequently told—from the Potter viewpoint. But the reverse side of the shield has seldom if ever been turned for public scrutiny. The "Ostler Joe" incident, the separation of the Brown-Potters and Mrs. Potter's subsequent stage debut have been inked through the press of two continents by the Potter family. But the Urquharts have walled themselves behind a barrier of silence through which only a few of their most intimate friends have penetrated. Several of these friends were discussing the life story of this most interesting family the other day and it was generally believed that Mrs. Potter is getting ready to tell the world her side of the story. Of late she has been writing a great deal in the interim of acting, and the story of her own life is said to be dripping from her clever pen, for she writes fully as well as she talks.

Crash in the Family Fortune

If the World and his wife ever rest their eyes on that story it will clutch their interest to the end. The name of Urquhart is woven into the history of the South. One of the most dramatic incidents in Cora Urquhart's life was the failure of the bank in New Orleans, of which her father was president. Cora was with her mother and dying sister on the "home" plantation when the crash came and she wired her father that the dying child's last wish was to look on her father before she closed her eyes in the sleep that knows no waking. An angry mob, seeing Mr. Urquhart leave the bank and hurry off in a cab, fancied that he was spiriting away funds and attempted to stop the carriage, but by a clever ruse the driver outwitted the crowd and Mr. Urquhart caught a river boat that brought him to his dying daughter's bedside just before her eyes closed forever.

Becomes the Toast of the Smart Set

When Cora Urquhart went on to New York she at once became the toast in the set to which birth admitted her and beauty made her queen. Her marriage with Jimmy Brown Potter tripped on the heels of her debut and the young couple commenced to entertain in a lavish style. It is said that when Cora Urquhart Potter realized that it was the Bishop's money and not her husband's that was oiling the wheels of their expensive household machinery she tersely told James Brown Potter to "go to work." But Jimmy not finding any kid-glove occupation to his taste, his wife made up her mind to solve the riddle of family support by going on the stage. She had already made a hit in amateur theatricals. The "Ostler Joe" incident has been padded out of all proportion by tradition. It is true that Bishop Potter objected to his fair relative's reciting such a selection, but it was not the cause of the divorce as has so frequently been stated. While the Bishop and the papers were making a pretty howdy-do over poor old "Ostler Joe," Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Brown Potter and their little daughter crossed over to London, where Mrs. Potter intended to study dramatic art and make her professional debut. Her friends have always supported their theory that "Jimmy" Potter aided and abetted his wife in her theatrical ambitions by the fact that he accompanied her to London and acted as her major domo in the preparations for her theatrical debut. However, the two kept their plans very quiet until everything was arranged. The then Prince of Wales had signified his intention of being present, and her "opening" was an assured social triumph.

"Jimmy's" Desertion

When Bishop Potter heard that Mrs. Potter was going on the stage he cabled an emphatic remonstrance. "I'll take a run over and square it up with the old man," "Jimmy" told his wife's friends, and with ardently expressed wishes for his wife's success he left for America. And there Fate turned down the last leaf in the book of their married life. For when James Brown Potter came within the Bishop's earshot he was easily won over to the latter's way of thinking, and he, too, peremptorily cabled his wife to come home and give up her stage career. But Cora Urquhart Potter is not made of the stuff that is bent by every breeze that blows. She had made up her mind to go on the stage, she had been encouraged by her husband, and when he withdrew his consent she burned her bridges behind her and made her dramatic debut without a "By your leave" to the socially powerful Potter family. In the "good old Southern set" to which the Urquharts belong Mrs. Potter has been applauded for her backbone, but Newport knows her not, for Bishop Potter is all-powerful there. However she has London at her feet, which is a bit better, to the artistic temperament, than cooling one's heels by the marble mansions of Newport.

"They say these Eastern oysters are full of germs," he said, desperately, as he felt the change in his pocket.

Mrs. Oelrichs's Rockefeller Eye

The Swedish cook, gardener and delivery man who joined hands in a scheme to "stuff" Mrs. Herman Oelrichs's meat bills did not know the lady they were dealing with. Mrs. Oelrichs manages her house with the keen and critical eye of a German hausfrau and has no patience with the methods of the average careless, happy-go-lucky matron who depends on her husband to pay for her loose house-keeping ways. She runs her house as a man of affairs conducts his business and goes over her accounts as carefully as ever an expert bookkeeper makes up his trial balance. Mrs. Oelrichs is not parsimonious—in fact she is a cheerful giver and spends, but she does not believe in fostering the vampires who fasten on most wealthy households. I believe it was Mrs. Oelrichs who first discovered that the French maids, among them her own "treasure," had a profitable side business gained by "knocking" their mistress's clothes and by surreptitiously rendering them unfit for wear. It was the custom of these maids to tell their madames that such and such a gown made her look a fright, and if this "knocking" did not make madame discard the gown, the maid discovered a rent in it which she pretended even her clever fingers could not mend. In this way the maids fell heir to practically new gowns which they disposed of at a fat profit. Mrs. Oelrichs's adept eye saw through these subterfuges and wholesale discharges of maids among her friends followed.

"Jack" Baird to the Woods Again

Although Mrs. Baird was very much worried over her son's quondam devotion to the coquettish Claudia Rogers, I understand that she looked very kindly on the attentions "Jack" bestowed on handsome Louise Brownell, who is also an actress. The Brownells are a very good family and while Louise was at the Girls' High School she was considered the handsomest and most popular girl in that temple of learning. Almost immediately after graduating she joined the Neill company. Her father objected to her choice of a career, but once launched in it he helped her as much as possible by giving her carte blanche in selecting a wardrobe, so Miss Brownell's gowns have been the envy of numbers of struggling young actresses. She played leading roles last year in the stock theatre Neill controls in Seattle and this summer she has been appearing at the Liberty theatre in Oakland. "Jack" Baird has been her devoted admirer beyond the span of his usual constancy, and I hear that mamma Baird was all ready to give her consent when Cupid took to the tall timber, and their romance went a-glimmering.

The Martins on the Move

The stork is hovering over the household of the Walter Martins at Menlo Park. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are to close their Menlo Park place for the winter and are coming to the city to occupy the home of Mrs. Eleanor Martin in Broadway, during her absence in the East. Mrs. Martin expects to leave September twenty-eighth for the St. Louis Exposition where she is to join the Peter Martins. After seeing the Fair she will journey to Newport as the guest of the Peter Martins, through whose prominence she may enjoy the society of Newport's most exclusive set. Mrs. Martin intends making a trip to Europe before returning home, traveling through France, Italy and Egypt, making her longest stay in Cairo. She has many friends on the other side, having always been among the first to entertain titled foreigners visiting the city. Count Grimani, Lieutenant Fuchs and Baron von Horst are a few whose rapid social success was due to her piloting. Through her influence Captain Frederick Johnston became so immensely popular that it proved his downfall in society.

A fortnight ago the daughter of Lily Langtry and her young husband were bundled out of their flat for non-payment of rent. Now comes the news by wire that Dorothy Russell, daughter of the beautiful Lillian, and her husband have been evicted for the same cause. Is the human race degenerating so fast? At their ages the hustling mammas were moving into palaces.

It will be somewhat disappointing to the eligible society bachelors to hear that a number of the attractive young "buds," who were counted on as being among this winter's debutantes, have decided not to make their initial bow this season. Pretty Miss Jennie Crocker, who left last week with her grandmother, Mrs. Easton, for New York, would have been a big favorite this season. Miss Crocker is to spend another year in school in New York before making her debut. So will pretty Ruth Merrill and Edith Sonntag.

Miss Tobin in Original Effects

Miss Agnes Tobin created a mild sensation on Tuesday afternoon by appearing in the shopping district in a white linen suit, the skirt cut ankle length and the coat fashioned somewhat after a pajama jacket. As usual Miss Tobin dispensed with a collar, which hangman's substitute she despises, and so would any other woman blessed with a beautiful throat like Miss Tobin's. Around her neck she wore an exquisite string of pearls, rather a bizarre appendage to a white linen suit. But the fashion of wearing jewels at all times and with all costumes seems to be gaining in favor and a bejeweled effect that would once have been considered very bad form is now the correct mode.

Bitter Contest Between Relatives

I wonder if the blessings that close-fisted old millionaire, I. G. Wickersham of Petaluma, laid up in heaven during his money-grubbing career on this earth have netted him as much content as the fortune he bequeathed his children has brought them. Certainly the court records, since his will was filed, tell the story of as rancorous and bitter a family fight as has ever delighted the lawyers and pricked the fears of supersensitive millionaires trying to compose a will satisfactory to suspicious heirs. In his palmy days I. G. used to declare, with his hard smile, that there was only one way to make money: to loan it at a good, round per cent. As the method he employed was successful in screwing rates out of farmers around Petaluma, Rockefeller, Carnegie and other Captains of Industry would undoubtedly stamp it with approval. So successful was he that he invested large sums in the stock of San Francisco banks and became a director in several of them. He piled up his big fortune with the slow, laborious process of the country money-lender, like Grandet as immortalized by Balzac, and his children have fairly thrown it at each other in litigation, as if it were the hatred and contempt they felt for one another.

Worship of the Golden Calf

The most bitter contestants in the family feud were the two brothers Frank and Fred. Both are now dead, worn out while yet young men by ten years of acrimonious fighting; but they left their litigious spirits with their heirs and the fight goes on as determinedly and fiercely as ever. Wickersham came of old Yankee stock and he raised his children almost as rigidly as his forefather, who charged up his son with board till he was twenty-one and then made him go to work and settle up. But before they were twenty both Fred and Frank discovered that money would produce something else besides so much per cent—that it would buy pleasures. Forthwith they surreptitiously stole away from the staid and set per cent life and hunted in rare gardens along with Omar Khayyam. In time Frank could not disguise the fact that the wine-jars were empty after he had left them. His father became wroth; the wine jars produced family jars and one day, in the period just preceding the Fresno boom, Frank was exiled there, backed by some twenty thousand dollars, "to grow up with the country" and mend his ways. Fred, having more of the Wickersham per cent spirit in him, was put into the bank, from which he made an underground connection with Omar Khayyam's back garden, and jollied along with the poet, careful the while that the latter never in the least interfered with the regular per cent profit coming into the Wickersham bank—wherein he showed the proper Wickersham spirit and justified the discernment of his prudent father.

Fought to the Last Ditch

When the old gentleman died Frank was cut off with five dollars and the rest of the big estate was divided among the widow, Fred and his sisters. Frank, meanwhile, had made and lost tidy sums in Fresno business ventures. Whenever he lost he applied to his father for relief, and received sums aggregating something like one hundred thousand dollars, all of which were charged against him with the regulation Wickersham interest. Fred, being one of the executors of his father's will, and therefore intrusted with the settlement of his estate, insisted that principal and interest in every detail should be paid. Then the battle royal began. Frank stood it stoutly till he lost his money, health and prospects of making money in other fields; then he died, bequeathing the litigation to his widow. It is she who is behind all the aggressive litigation in the present fight and the sisters are the only ones left to oppose her. As the sisters, however, always sided with Fred, and inherited his pugnacious feelings in the matter, the contest goes on as stoutly as of yore. Since the old gentleman died, the mother has passed away and her share of the estate, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, has been added to the contested purse. In addition there is something like two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars in shares of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company which Fred is charged with withholding from the estate at the time he was looking after its interests. Altogether there is a big sum of money to litigate over, which means that the lawyers and the courts will be busy on the Wickersham case for years to come.

Here's the Latest Fad

Percy Y. Harkness and V. L. C. Manning, Lieutenants in the Fourth West Yorkshire Regiment, the famous Prince of Wales' Own, have been delighting the local chappies with the intrepid and startling way in which they have been doing the town. They first attracted attention at the Palace hotel, where they are stopping, by introducing that latest London fad, walking with the hat under one arm instead of on the head. No matter where the two perambulated, about the hotel's sequestered courts or along the crowded thoroughfares, they invariably appeared with their bonny locks free to the heaven-kissing airs and fogs and winds of San Francisco, and their tiles tucked under a protecting elbow. Have the chappies caught on? Rather. A Pacific avenue bank clerk was observed, no later than last Tuesday, shyly practicing the same stunt in Lafayette Square, under the protecting cover of dusk. But these two visiting members of the crack English regiment have done more for the local chappies than that: they've shown them how the Prince's set do a tenderloin. On the night of the last fight they were under Alex Greggains' pilotage and they insisted on a gait that simply shattered the red lights along the way and broke every fizz bottle they passed. Their hats were off as usual, but then after the first hour there wasn't a man in the party who could comfortably wear a tile. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why the members of the crack English regiment have adopted this so-called fad.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Gerstle gave a most successful dinner party at the St. Francis this week, to members of the family. The "family spirit" pervaded the occasion and everyone was radiantly happy. On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Gerstle will entertain Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Buckbee and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Breedon at the Columbia. Later there will be a party supper at a near-by fashionable hotel.

Will Her Allowance Stop

When Laura McDonald marries James C. Sims, the attorney, on the fourth of next month, her friends are wondering if the allowance her uncle, Captain "Jim" McDonald, gave her will cease. Miss McDonald is the elder daughter of the late De Witt McDonald, and at her father's death his brother "Jim" settled an income upon the widow and the two girls. He specified, however, that his nieces' share would cease on their wedding day. He disliked to think that any impecune might benefit by his money. Captain "Jim" was always fond of his nieces, and generous to them, but he had his own ideas of making them earn their gifts from him. On one occasion he promised them a trip East if they would learn to be good cooks. Neither of the girls knew a thing about cooking, but they set to work with a cook-book and quickly mastered the art. Their uncle used to drop in and sample their culinary concoctions but he never manifested any sign of approval. They began to fear that they had not sufficiently mastered the chef's art to fill his ideal. But one day he dropped in at their home and said, after he had tasted a delicious dish of their cookery: "Pack up your trunks, girls. You've got the true skill, and can go East whenever you are ready."

Cut Her Social Engagements

Laura McDonald is a really beautiful young woman, a blonde with a fine figure, and she sings as well as the ordinary professional. When she first entered society she was invited out so much that she found difficulty in keeping her social engagements. "But, mamma," she said, one day to her mother, "wherever I go, they always ask me to sing. I don't think I care to go to parties where I always have to contribute to the entertainment." So in a short course of time, the beautiful Miss McDonald tired of society, and rarely accepted invitations anywhere. Her younger sister, Blythe, is also a beauty, of the brunette order. She was named after Thomas Blythe, the millionaire father of Florence Blythe Hinckley-Moore.

The Sequoia Club will informally open its rooms at the St. Francis on Friday, the twenty-third inst. There is an intention, strong among some influential members, to have the club hold picture shows in its rooms from time to time during the season. The artists all think this a good idea — but see trouble ahead.

The F. M. Chittendens of Fresno are spending a season at Byron Springs.

Paid the Piper Instead

Small things are sometimes fraught with great consequences. In that line it is interesting to note that the disgrace of the two young officers who were recently court-martialed and are now confined to their quarters at Angel Island was due entirely to their failure to settle a small bill. The boatman who brought the officers from this city was not paid for his services, and in revenge he disclosed the matter to the military authorities. The result is well known. Lieutenants Smith and White are now awaiting the action of the President on the findings of the court-martial.

Smart Set in Flight

The number of the smart set preparing to go East is creating a veritable hegira. Nearly all of them put off the date of their summer trip to take advantage of cooler weather and the chance to drop into the St. Louis Fair during its closing days. Among those on the wing, or making ready, are the John F. Merrills, the H. M. A. Millers, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, the Frank Carolans, Miss Bessie Ames, Mr. and Mrs. Judge Van Fleet and Mrs. Frank Deering. Mrs. Eleanor Martin is having a delicious time formulating plans to chaperon her granddaughter, Anita Harvey, to the St. Louis Fair.

Demand More Dancers

The Gaiety Club is to organize again for the winter. It is composed chiefly of the youngest girls in society. Several of the debutantes who belong to the inner circles will become members this winter; among others Miss Anita Harvey, Charlotte Wilson, daughter of the Russell Wilsons, and Margaret Hyde-Smith. This season there will be a slight change in the management. Miss Christine Pomeroy has already been elected president, however, so it is certain to be managed well. Last season the young ladies of the club only invited a few of the choicest of the jeunesse doree, but this winter the girls will endeavor to break the bonds of exclusiveness and extend the courtesies of the club to all dancing men in society. For some time past there have been murmurs among one wing of the club, of the mailed hand held on the invitations sent to the gentlemen. Those invited were of course the very cream of the eligibles, but the debutantes were frank enough to declare that the next season they would endeavor to secure a larger number of adepts in the terpsichorean art. Hence the agitation among certain members to win what they call "the full dancing card" campaign.

Ready to Fire on the "Lena"

Not since the days of Sloat and Stockton has a commander-in-chief of the Pacific squadron made so brilliant a debut in that office as Rear-Admiral Caspar F. Goodrich. Comparatively little known on this coast, where he has been but a few weeks, he found himself suddenly in the lime-light of the world over the Lena affair. Goodrich is the youngest admiral in the line. He entered the Naval Academy at the age of fourteen and has always had the distinction of being the youngest member of each grade he has held. He is only fifty-eight years of age and will not retire for four years. In connection with the Lena incident, it probably occurred to few people that the escorting of the Russian cruiser to Mare Island by the Marblehead was something more than a mere ceremony. The Lena was then, as now, in the actual custody of the United States Navy, and the Marblehead was detailed to see that every requirement was carried out. Had the Lena, for instance, been so foolish as to attempt to pass out of the Golden Gate instead of continuing to Mare Island, the Marblehead was authorized to use force to prevent it, even to the extent of firing upon her.

Resourcefulness of the Navy

There is a growing belief in the ever-readiness of the United States Navy for any emergency. There was a rather amusing instance of this one day last week, when the wardroom officers of the flagship gave a dinner to the officers of the Lena. Four Russian officers were guests, but the question of conversation was a difficult one, as none of the American officers could speak Russian. When the Russians arrived on board it was discovered that one of them could speak English, another French, another Spanish and the fourth German. This was encouraging; but the still more valuable discovery was quickly made that among the American officers there were three linguists who could speak respectively German, French and Spanish. The seating arrangements were made accordingly, and the dinner was a great success.

Comes of a Princely Stock

France has been particularly fortunate in the two latest representatives of her nobility in this city. Count Hubert de Montaigne made friends on all sides while he was here; he has been followed by another popular beau in the Prince of Bearn, who arrived here last week from Washington, where he is a member of the French embassy's staff. He is a princely looking young fellow, with fierce, military moustache pointed upward at an acute angle. His genial manners and jolly disposition make a good impression. He is descended from one of the oldest French families. I am told that one member of this family preferred to use one of his numerous other titles, rather than that of Bearn, on account of being always associated with the world-famed sauce Bearnaise, which takes its name from the family seat.

Wail of Returning Modistes

The advance line of the modistes who look after the confections of the local smart set are just back from Paris, and loud is their wail at the new condition of affairs recently established by the coutouriers of that fashion bazaar of the world. Their tale of woe will wring the hearts of all our Flora McFlimseys. The gist of it is to the effect that the great Paris establishments have formed a combination, a trust if you will, to prevent the ordinary fold of dressmakerdom from getting their original models, except for the tagged prices, and those prices have gone up from one hundred to two hundred per cent. In other words Worth, Redfern and their fellows propose to maintain a Rockefeller grip on every household ambitious to use Paris made gowns. Heretofore dressmakers, and high class garment makers the world over, have had an easy thing every season, when they wanted ideas in the latest fashions, by simply going to Paris in the fall and inspecting the models in the stores of the big modistes and fetching away copies of what they saw. Of course efforts were made to stop them, but various tricks were practiced to get around the vigilance of the Moguls of the models and almost always with success.

Barred by Detectives

The luck of last year is gone forever. This year the best Paris modistes have made a combination to bar everybody from their establishments save the elect of society; in other words, the people who are really known to be anxious to purchase the original dresses on exhibition at the prices asked. A small army of detectives is employed to keep out all others. Measures for detection were carried so far, this season, that the steamer lists and the hotel arrivals from abroad were scanned and every dressmaker or anyone suspected of being an agent of a dressmaker was followed, listed, and when he or she attempted to enter one of the big establishments, stopped at the door and turned back by a smiling detective in citizen's clothes. Protests fell on deaf ears. Ladies looking for cut-rate figures on this season's best Paris models will be pained to learn that very, very few foreign modistes have been able to safely pass these Argus-eyed guards. The result will be of course that very little outside of original models will find the way to America. Of course the local dressmakers don't object to buying these expensive models providing they can get a fair return in profit from their customers. Right there is the rub. Will the customers be willing to pay the increased figures now imposed by the Paris combination of modistes? On this momentous question hinges the season's showing of resplendent finery made by Pacific avenue, Burlingame and San Rafael.

Incidentally, this advance line of dressmakers back from Paris brings the news that this is to be a strictly silk season; nearly all trimming is of silk. Dresses are still made very full with the old leg-of-mutton sleeve; tight below, very full at the top. The corsage is worn extremely high, with a belt—well, with a belt that seems to fairly lift one into the air.

Tilts at the Conventional

I hear that Mrs. John Charles Adams of Oakland will give a series of brilliant entertainments on this side of the bay, which means that our winter festivities will be punctuated by something unusual and bizarre. Mrs. Adams is not exactly the "Harry Lehr" of Oakland, for she can give him points in entertaining sated society folk, so the sleepy-heads in our smart set will sit up and blink when Mrs. Adams beckons them to her home, for she is sure to do something original. Mrs. Adams is a beautiful woman with brilliant attainments. She despises the commonplace and resents conventionality. At the luncheon which she recently gave the table was constructed with a trap door in the centre, through which the entertainers provided to amuse the guests appeared as if by magic and did their "stunts." Mrs. Adams's love for the picturesque is dubbed eccentricity by those who cut their actions from the same bolt of cloth their fellow beings use.

Lives in Ye Ancient Days

Mrs. Adams is a great reader and when she is deep in some "period book" she loves to surround herself with the atmosphere of her paper-bound heroes and heroines. Guests calling at the Adams house on the mistress's day at home are apt to be greeted by an Empress Eugenie or a Princess Mathilde, or some other figure that appeals to a woman's imagination and sympathy. Mrs. Adams gives no explanation of her unusual gowns so her guests are frequently at a loss to know what "period" she is reveling in, unless they happen to be well informed in the particular phase of history, art, or literature in which their hostess is immersed. Mrs. Adams has a penchant for dressing up her little daughter in all sorts of fantastic costumes. At one time she is a little peasant; at another a princess, much to her own delight and the mystification of her father, who declares that it's a wise father who knows his own daughter by her costume.

Mrs. Adams belongs to the Southern set, Mrs. Selton Wright, Mrs. E. W. Newhall and Mrs. A. H. Voorhies being among her intimates on this side of the bay. If she entertains extensively from San Francisco her guest list will largely be made up from that set.

Was Given Up for Dead

Some years ago Heloise, the beautiful second daughter of Dr. H. C. Davis, was injured in a hand car accident in the country. Exactly how her injuries were received no one knew. Her relatives were in doubt whether she had been struck by the lever or had fallen on her head when the party was thrown off the car in rounding a curve. The beautiful girl was picked up for dead. Then followed a death in life, for there came a paralysis so complete that only by a slight motion of the head could the once lively and vivacious girl show movement. For some years she lingered in this state. Her devoted father exhausted every means to restore her to health. She improved some, and became able to sit in a wheeled chair and finally to move her head and arms. On one eventful day she was carried to the opera; she had been a talented musician before her accident. In those days she had written music and composed sonnets of rare beauty of thought and perfection of form. Some of her work was published, receiving high praise from the critics. Then, to the surprise of all her friends, came the climax of a romance. Before she was injured she had been engaged to a young man whose devotion increased after her accident. Finally, in spite of it they were married. It seems incredible that the girl who was given up for dead, who had lingered along so many apparently hopeless months between life and death, should have recovered so as at present to be an ardent automobilist, taking long tours through the State with her husband, C. Elliott, and her maid. Her recovery is said to be all but complete. With the exception of being unable to step out or to rise up and walk, Mrs. Elliott is as active as ever. She is carried from one place to the other. She cannot walk, but she has been able to resume her violin playing—always a source of delight to herself and her friends.

Miss Ethyl Hager's recent daring San Rafael trip dispels the rumor that she was about to employ the crack motorman on the electric railroad as chauffeur in order "to dust and smoke up" her motor rivals on the road.

False Rumor Started

Whoever started the rumor that Mrs. Worthington Ames had invented a pattern for a little boy's garment, or any other pattern, which was snapped up by a keen pattern agency, is lamentably at fault, and sadly "mixed those babies up." Mrs. Ames is devoted to her wee daughter and thinks far more of bringing a happy smile to her face than she does of inventing novel garments for her adornment.

Still Turning Out News

Many ex-San Francisco newspaper men turn up in odd places on this big, round globe. The other day I picked up a copy of a Cornish mining paper published in distant Cornwall, and discovered it was edited by Herbert Thompson, who years ago was an Examiner reporter. There are many old-time Examiner men who remember Thompson in his local reporting days, but probably few thought that when he disappeared from San Francisco he would finally turn up in Cornwall and ready to whip news into shape.

A Babe's Compelling Love

Mrs. Elizabeth Gerberding, president of the Sequoia Club, is a grandmamma for the first time and she is prouder of this honor than over the fact that she is the author of a successful book and several plays. The John F. Merrills are also delighted over their grandson The little fellow's proud parents are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sears Bates. He surely should be the dearest little chap in the world, by all rights, for the marriage of Gladys Merrill and Harry Bates was a real love match and they are still enjoying a perennial honeymoon. The Merrills are very fond of both their children-by-marriage. Mrs. "Johnnie" Merrill, it will be remembered, was Olive Snider. She is one of the most charming entertainers among the younger matrons.

C. K. McIntosh, of the First National Bank, who captured a bold robber the other day, and relieved him of his swag to the extent of a twenty thousand dollar sack of gold, distinguished himself in another way some years ago. He married the prettiest of the Goad sisters, carrying her away from several other suitors. The McIntoshes own a pretty home in Woodside.

Mrs. Holme of Denver, a cousin of Admiral Goodrich, is visiting her relatives, the Orrs, in Berkeley. A number of delightful functions have been given in her honor.

Gilded Union of Hearts

The betrothal of young Bradley-Martin and Miss Helen Phipps, daughter of the multi-millionaire, Henry Phipps, is the talk of every house-party in England, according to my London letter. A rich American and a poor Englishman, or vice versa, would be more fitting, it is claimed; but here again is evidenced the modern policy of the ultra rich to combine fortunes and fortify their class. The wealth of the Bradley-Martins is immense; that of Phipps is over thirty million dollars, made with Carnegie in the famous steel deal where the canny Scotchman drew out three hundred million. The union of two such fortunes means that the wedding will be garnished with that fulsome brilliance which marks the marriages of the very rich in these resplendent days of garish weddings. Already the plan is to eclipse in magnitude and splendor the scenic effects which surrounded the nuptials of Miss Goelet and the Duke of Roxburghe. Enormous orders have already been sent to Paris and a representative of Worth is on his way to Beaufort Castle with a budget of "glorious" ideas. At no residence in Scotland is there such a lively gathering as at this castle. The wedding will not take place there for three months and already those most interested are in lively rehearsal for the grand affair. When the sister of Lord Lovatt was married there, last year, a striking effect was made by all the men dressing in Highland costume. So great a hit did it make that the bride's mother is seriously considering the same detail. The gayest tartans and brightest plaids have been provided for the use of the young guests visiting the castle and the scheme is being "tried out" in the wedding rehearsals.

Troubles of the Rich

But the very rich have their troubles, domestic and otherwise, as well as the very poor, as is evidenced in this same Phipps family. Phipps filis has won unenviable publicity of late through the extraordinary dispute over a divorce he is having with his wife. He charged her openly with being intimate with several friends very prominent in New York, Pittsburg and Washington society. She took her two little daughters and left his Denver mansion for refuge with her lawyers in New York. He pursued her and by a subterfuge succeeded in kidnaping the children. Through court processes she succeeded in recovering them. He offered her three million dollars to give them up to him, and to go abroad and live by herself. She flatly refused. While the lawyers were wrangling over some sort of settlement the wife of one of the co-respondents in the case sued her husband and received three hundred thousand dollars' damages. The irate husband now declares he is innocent and has been adroitly dragged into the horrid mess by young Phipps. He is going to sue him for a million dollars' damages.

United Co-Respondents

The other co-respondents are all in hot water with their families over the unsavory charges preferred against them by young Phipps and they all threaten him with treatments varying from horse-whipping to suits for a million dollars' damages. Mrs. Phipps herself proposes to bring counter suits against her husband and force him to prove his charges or publicly apologize. At last accounts Phipps pere, from Beaufort Castle, where the gorgeous wedding of Miss Phipps is in preparation, had instructed his son to settle with his wife and hush the dreadful story at any price. As young Phipps has over twenty million dollars in his own right he is easily able to undertake the matter. It is understood that, acting under these instructions, he has offered his wife the annuity on a handsome fortune and the right to see her children whenever she pleases. Her friends believe she will accept the offer provided the rankling divorce complaint is withdrawn.

Herman Oelrichs has been entertaining the Livingstone Beeckmans, the Braddish Johnsons and Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, all prominent members of the Newport swagger set. Livingstone Beeckman is related to the Ogden Mills and the Lorillards; he married a daughter of Mr. Thomas, the partner of Senator Bryce. The party passed through this city en route to the Orient.

The Fascinating Fore Girls

There are many who consider Ione Fore, whose engagement with Eugene Hewlett, a San Francisco attorney, was announced this week, the most beautiful girl in Oakland. There is a quartet of Fore sisters, all great beauties, but Ione is regarded as the queen of the lot. It was Pauline Fore, if I remember rightly, who was once engaged to Will Mein, a brother of the frequently reported affianced Robert, but the engagement was declared off almost as soon announced. Both Pauline and Ione are very popular in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara society, for they are as much at home in the south as in Oakland. Mr. Hewlett is a Stanford graduate and also of the Harvard law college.

Daughters of the Confederacy

Judging from rumors which have their origin in Los Angeles, Daughters of the Confederacy in California are not yet through with their political troubles. This year the annual meeting is to be held there, and the dates have been set for October fourth and fifth. The question of electing a State president will come, and already the political pot has begun to simmer, the prospect being that it will be at boiling point before the time of the annual meeting. When Mrs. Sidney Van Wyck, president of the Jefferson Davis chapter in San Francisco, contested with Mrs. Victor Montgomery of Santa Ana for the State presidency last year, it will be remembered that a bitter feeling was engendered between certain of the chapters, and if my informant from Los Angeles has comprehended the situation, this feeling has by no means died out. The club differences between Mrs. Van Wyck and Mrs. Albert Hunter Voorhies of this city is of course held responsible in large part for the trouble, but if I mistake not Mrs. Van Wyck will decline to dabble directly in the annual politics this year, and the southern chapters will be left to fight the battle to a finish, with the northern women as referees merely.

Plans to Divide the Vote

The latest development is that Robert E. Lee chapter will attempt to oust Mrs. Montgomery from the presidency by putting up a candidate from Los Angeles chapter. Those who followed the fortunes of the presidential contest last year will recall that when, through a constitutional error, Robert E. Lee chapter was balked in its intention to put up Mrs. F. R. Thorp of Los Angeles, as a candidate for the State presidency, it threw its strength to Mrs. Van Wyck, joining forces with the North in opposition to the other chapters of the South for her election. The story of the tie vote, which was referred to the National convention, and then back again to the State meeting, is too well known to need repetition. Although Mrs. Montgomery was placed in office, her opponents have not yet done with the matter, and are waiting only for another opportunity to assert themselves. That an attempt has been made to secure a member of the Los Angeles chapter as a candidate is believed to be a secret between leading members of Robert E. Lee chapter, but the story has leaked out, and it is said that the woman desired for the position has refused to run, looking upon the prospective nomination as a doubtful honor, since while it might be a personal compliment, it would come in the nature of a political stroke for the faction which was defeated last year. There is no doubt the former supporters of Mrs. Van Wyck will put up a candidate to run against Mrs. Montgomery, and if the present plan to divide Los Angeles chapter against itself by nominating one of its members fails, there is likelihood that a northern woman will again be put forward, but I have no authority to say that this will be Mrs. Van Wyck, and from all that can be learned at present, my impression is that it will not be she.

It looks as if Los Angeles would capture Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ewing as residents of that place again, unless there should develop in San Francisco a stronger attraction than Mr. Ewing's extensive mining interests in the southern part of the State. Tom Ewing has for years been one of the most successful mining men of the West. He formerly made his home in Los Angeles.

Huntington's Great Ambition

Southern California is rapidly becoming Huntingtonized. Henry E., who has practically deserted San Francisco for the region south of the Tehachapi, is tagging his name to everything down there. There is a Huntington boulevard near Los Angeles, a Huntington building covering nearly a block. Last week Huntington Beach was opened with a brass band. The Huntington trolley lines form a net work all over Los Angeles county; the Los Angeles street railway is Henry's; he is completing the largest electric railway trestle in the world across a portion of San Pedro bay, a distance of nine thousand feet. If all this were not enough, Huntington has just announced that he will soon connect Los Angeles and San Diego by a trolley. They say his ambition is to girdle the globe with a trolley. Certainly he has Southern California in a net of trolley lines. All this has cost millions, but Huntington is already getting a large portion of it back. His suburban railways have paid from the start and the city system was coining money when he acquired it. Before Huntington makes known that he is going to open a section of country by means of his trolley he buys tracts of land along the contemplated line and then holds the property until the road is built and the increase in value is enormous. As a consequence Los Angeles is dotted with "Huntington tracts." He has just been elected to the presidency of the Jonathan Club, one of the biggest clubs of the southland. It has taken the entire upper floor of the great new Huntington building and is fitting up one of the handsomest club headquarters of the West. Mrs. Huntington and her daughters do not like Los Angeles and prefer to live in the rather unpretentious home they own here rather than to go to the handsome Childs place, which Huntington purchased for them in Los Angeles. It covers a block and resembles an English country home.

H. E.'s son Howard, who is associated with him in the trolley business, was best man last week at the wedding of Hugh Stewart, a cousin of the Huntingtons, and Alice Graves, a daughter of J. A. Graves, one of the most prominent of the bankers of Southern California.

Can "Spiel" the Sciences

Several days ago a newspaper man from one of the San Francisco morning dailies was sent over to Berkeley to interview the great botanica scientist, Jacques Loeb, on the parthenogenesis of plants. Arrived at the handsome house in North Berkeley he found a small boy playing in front of the steps. "Is your father, Professor Loeb, at home?" asked the reporter.

"Yes; he is occupied. Is your business of great importance? If not, I'll call our secretary," responded the child.

"I can wait, old man; I must see your father personally."

"Newspaper?" interrogated the youngster.

"Yes," confidentially; "I am from San Francisco, and the only paper of consequence on the coast."

"Well," resumed the child, with an air of abstraction, "if you want to know something about parthenogenesis I can give you the talk about it myself."

But the newspaper man waited and talked parthenogenesis with the father while the youngster stood by, listened, and from time to time nodded his head sagely.

"Pshaw," he ejaculated at the conclusion, "I could have told you all that myself."

The Embarrassment of Talmage

Down in Los Angeles, the Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, son of the great Talmage, is having a hard time trying to win the favor of his congregation. He was called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church of the southern city more than a year ago, but so great was the opposition to him that after a small majority had voted to "call" him nearly half the members withdrew. It was argued by the leaders of the minority that Talmage was too shifty. While preaching on trial in Los Angeles he was interviewed by one of the dailies, and quoted as saying that he was infatuated with the town and people, and would rather live there than in Chicago. Nevertheless he did not get the "call" at that time. Perhaps it was deferred until the people had time to determine whether it was complimentary to have Los Angeles merely preferred to Chicago. But when the Rev. Talmage returned to his Chicago pastorate he found that the interview had preceded him. His parishioners considered it an insult to have a Californian village boomed by a Chicago preacher. The clergyman sought refuge in denial, and later on, when his friends in Los Angeles proposed the "call," a vigorous protest came from those who had read his disclaimer. However he was offered and accepted the citrus belt pulpit, and there he has been preaching sermons on popular subjects, and filling his church though not with a conservative element. Last Sunday, writes my correspondent, he talked of "Labor's Afflictions," and he adopted a conciliatory tone as distasteful to the labor unionist as to the capitalist. In Los Angeles one must take sides on the labor question. According to the capitalistic notion organized labor is an affliction, and from the unionist's viewpoint Harrison Gray Otis is symbolical of capital.

'A Leap Year Fad

One of the local jeunesses d'oree who has just returned from Catalina tells me that the proper thing there this summer is for the young men to wear bracelets. The bracelet fad, however, is different from the one that raged when Hubert Henry Davies sported his arm circlet in San Francisco. The girls at Catalina, as evidence of their admiration for certain youths, put their own precious bangles on the latter's wrists.

Getting Used to Anything

An amusing story is told of a recent luncheon where a wife very young in experience was seated next a lady whose matrimonial experience is considerably greater.

"I ought to be at home," sighed the young wife, "my husband is at home all day every day and it is SO lovely."

"Yes," said the other, with a quizzical smile, "It must be. You know that is the argument against eternal punishment—that one gets used to anything."

FASHION IN CHAMPAGNE.

Speaking of champagnes, our New York correspondent writes that the predominance of Moet & Chandon White Seal at all fashionable functions at Newport, Saratoga, and other watering places is remarkable. The present vintage appears to have caught the taste of the bon vivant, it being pronounced not too sweet, but medium dry, of an exquisite bouquet, and is said to agree best with a constitution taxed to the utmost by a strenuous society life.

Shone As a Searchlight Senter

On Friday night the boards of the University of California gave a long, rambling talk that was a sort of Hearst ball with more. One of the speakers went to some extent to show how the searchlight shone. It was a "Searchlight" shone, every member of which had really been that out-loud Mrs. Senter. The best of it was, the feared harbinger of the "Searchlight" shone, was dyed on the wall by Nature, and quite natural, and all the girls were poked for their complexion. A "Searchlight Senter" would be a shining beauty as far as the girls there are concerned in this case, and I fancy the girls.

San Rafael in a Quandary

Last year Mrs. Willie Babcock was led into accepting the presidency of the San Rafael Improvement Club. At that time the club was leading an aenemic existence. A number of her friends had organized it with the hope of ultimately working some improvement into the bedraggled streets. The organization languished, however, and the organizers, who had lived in undesirable proximity to the Upper Thirteen long enough to know that charmed circle's thirst for the real, real thing, realized that it needed but the magic of Mrs. Babcock's name to galvanize the society into life. As they expected, with her as president, the club immediately became "It." The Upper Thirteen promptly thronged to patronize the Improvement club and every commuter's wife of them donned her "best shirt-waist," and attended whenever and wherever attendance was possible. I am told that some of those who inveigled Mrs. Babcock into accepting the presidency were base enough to circulate the rumor that she intended to give a tea to the entire club on some near and blissful date. However that may be, the Upper Thirteen worked on the streets as they had never worked before. Entertainments were given, trees sprouted, mosquitoes fled, and a very frenzy of improvement seized upon the village. That was a year ago and now rumor is unkind enough to hint that Mrs. Babcock has fled the town before the dire impossibility of keeping the Upper Thirteen at its distance. Everybody knows, however, that the Babcocks make an annual tour abroad, still—people have been known to seek refuge in flight before. At any rate, those who have had any experience with the Upper Thirteen will sympathize with Mrs. Babcock and continue to entertain suspicions.

The Pacific-Union Club expects to move into its handsome new quarters about the end of October. Judging from the "full luncheon tables" during the midday hours the club must be on the crest of the famous wave of prosperity. So crowded have the rooms been of late that seats at the tables have been in great demand and the management has been obliged to notify members that, for the present, local guests must not be invited to lunch.

The University Club is still grappling with the discouraging problem of finance. It begins to look as if in the near future the club would be obliged to reorganize and possibly pass by easy transition into a social club conducted on a more modest scale.

Carted Around as a Show

What sort of a puppet show does the Board of Education purpose making of the pupils of the Chinese public school? Considering the occasion it was well enough, perhaps, to let them appear at the Grand Opera House during the week of the Knights Templar conclave, but can it be called good policy to lend them as an attraction to every benefit or catch-penny performance that asks for them? Are their teachers paid for nothing except to act as exhibitors of these native born Celestials? At Glen Park these Chinese pupils appeared only to be stoned, and ever since that event, when they have been carted around, they have been under police protection.

The Stage

Wizard of Oz No. 22

If you want to see a concoction for the stage made after a recipe from one of the versatile Gilbert's inimitable patter songs, go visit "The Wizard of Oz." On second thought, see it when the original cast comes along. The extravaganza is at the Columbia all right, with some of the most eccentric characters that ever contorted beneath the calcium; but, alas, for an expectant public, the clever material is wrenched, distorted and rendered well nigh inane by as ill assorted a lot of ordinary stage mumblers as ever bludgeoned a promising production with their merciless incompetency. Whatever possessed the Eastern managers to trust the handling of a piece possessing such excellent possibilities to such groundlings passeth the understanding. What might have proved easily the most successful extravaganza in a decade is hammered relentlessly into a curious freak. The management has sent us road company No. 2: it ought to be called road company No. 22. But even the bad acting, poor singing and careless stage management are unable to utterly destroy the intrinsic good points. With ordinary comedians the eccentric Scarecrow and the Tinwoodman would keep the audience cheerful throughout an evening, but with this company the antics of the cow and the lion catch the few frightened laughs that break loose. The costumes are fresh, bright and attractive, and several of the stage sets are the prettiest fairy scenes pictured here in a long while. The management will have to give this enfeebled, road storming "Wizard of Oz" a drastic dose of ginger if they want him to live up to the reputation of his famous Eastern brother.

Andrew Bogart in Opera

"The Serenade," Victor Herbert's most tuneful opera and one of the best of modern musical comedies, is given an excellent presentation at the Tivoli this week. For general all round vocal work, I doubt if the Bostonians themselves could improve upon it. In comparison with the other "fat" parts in "The Serenade," the tenor role of Lopez is very thin, and it was unfortunate that some other opera could not have been selected that would have more fully exploited the art of Andrew Bogart. Save in the one solo that comes toward the close of the opera there is little chance for the singer to use his voice. His rendition of "I Envy the Bird" is given in his well-known artistic style and he has to repeat it three or four times every night. If I had not known that Andrew Bogart was making his debut I should have thought him one of the most experienced stage veterans except that his manner and gestures are infinitely more graceful and convincing than the average tenor's. He avoids the traditional hackneyed gesticulation and puts a certain amount of naturalness into his work that is as delightful as it is unusual. Andrew Bogart's operatic career is assured. The success of the two feminine roles is equally divided between Kate Condon and Dora de Fillippe. The former is a ravishing picture as Dolores and her rich mellow voice is heard to the greatest advantage. Miss de Fillippe sings brilliantly the part of Yvonne. Simms out-Barnabees Barnabee in the role of the Duke. Webb has his old part of the French singing master in which he has improved upon the details. The Alvarado of Carr is admirable. He seems to improve with every hearing.

The Ben Greet London Players

Ben Greet and his magnificent company of London players will again give the beautiful morality play "Everyman" at Lyric hall beginning Monday, October third. Seats will be ready next Monday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, where pamphlets containing a synopsis of the wonderful work may be obtained. The company is the best Mr. Greet has ever brought to America. Reserved seats will be one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents. During the second week "Much Ado About Nothing" and "Twelfth Night" will be given in the Elizabethan manner and Mr. Greet will play his great roles of Malvolio and Benedict.

Needs a Cutter and Fitter

"Miss Mazuma" suggests a gown of good material cut and fitted by a misfit modiste. There's lots of good stuff in it but it is joined very much like the crazy patchwork quilts of a few years back. J. C. Crawford's lyrics are in some instances quite charming, and Arthur Delroy's music tuneful and catchy. But as a whole "Miss Mazuma" is not so good as "The Beauty Shop," Crawford's previous effort. What are really worthy of praise in the production are the ballets, which are very well done. Flossie Hope and Pearl Hickman have an odd duet dance that is attractive and a marvel of agile grace. Georgie O'Ramey seems to be having an off week, for she by no means does justice to the nice fat part given her. Dorothy Morton, however, is the hit of the piece in her song, "Fishing," which she gives with truly Parisian chic. It is in the last act that the best features occur.

"Monbars" at the Alcazar is given with the same admirable finish that characterized the production during the Whittlessey starring season last year. It is a romantic drama, and as such calls for beautiful costuming and scenery. The cast, including Juliet Crosby, is with a few exceptions fully up to that of last year.

An Orpheum Success

Generally when a successful choir and concert singer goes upon the vaudeville stage, expecting to duplicate her classic successes, she fails to make good. There's something about an Orpheum audience that rattles the nerves of a debutante, and threatens disaster almost before the orchestra plays the entrance note. But sometimes singers please at once, and their warm reception gives them the courage to proceed and do their best, without the drawback of stage fright. Mrs. Snider-Johnson, Dr. Stewart's pupil, whose mezzo-soprano voice has often been heard at local concerts, debuted at the Orpheum on Sunday, and that the audience appreciated the excellence of her mezzo-soprano voice and singing was made apparent by the several encores she received. Mrs. Johnson has an easy, graceful stage presence, and that no doubt largely contributed to her Orpheum success. It is an exceptionally good bill this week. Trovolo, the ventriloquist, is way ahead of the average talking-doll-manipulator. His jokes aren't so new, perhaps, as the latest fall millinery, but the way he springs them on the audience, from the mouths of his dolls, is original. Carrillo makes a hit equal to that of last week with his monologue and imitations. The Howard Truesdells have a sketch many degrees better than anything in that line given here for weeks, and they present it with intelligence and vivacity. The Melrose troupe of acrobats are clever and agile.

The Altar of Friendship

It is a pleasure to sit through a play at the Majestic. The theatre is such a bright, artistic place, and the company is almost uniformly admirable. "The Altar of Friendship" is a comedy-drama that impels interest and in it the author, Madeleine Lucette Ryley, has put much of the brilliancy of "An American Citizen," which was a much better play than "Mice and Men," by the same author. Gilmour is really an ideal leading man and one enjoys every moment when he is upon the stage. As Richard Arbuthnot he has a character that blends well with his personality. Miss Reals as Sally Sartoris gives emphasis to all the points in this charming character. Vera McCord, the new member of the company who just arrived from the East, is very good as Mary Pinner, the typewritist. I have never known Eleanor Gordon to do such excellent work as in this play, in which she enacts the part of Florence Arbuthnot.

Another Kremer Triumph

The Central has produced several of Theodore Kremer's money-winning melodramas this season, each of which has gone its predecessor one better in the matter of sensational episodes and climaxes. In "Fallen by the Wayside," a temperance tract of the "Ten Nights in a Barroom" order, the interest centres about the very interesting villain. Henry Shumer acts this star role in the realistic manner which he has acquired by long practice in Central melodramas. His overthrow, in an avalanche that destroys the furniture very much as the gentlemanly villain in "Iris" climaxed his rage over his mistress's defection, is one of the startling incidents in the Kremer play. To Halifax fall second honors, when he rescues a child from what seems sure and swift death by the aid of a derrick, from which he swings. Mayall is the hero, an artist whose appetite for the inebriating cup leads him to become a lightning sketchist in a dive, and Miss Clifton has the teary role of the unfortunate wife. There are several bright specialties introduced, among them dances by the clever Garrity sisters.

The Chinese Drama

The audience was not the least interesting part of the Chinese play at the Grand Opera House during Conclave week. Comparatively few people even of our own city have witnessed a genuine Chinese drama, and consequently the audience hardly knew just what was expected of it, whether to laugh or to applaud, to take the thing in jest or in earnest. Many of the Easterners could not be persuaded that they were witnessing the real thing, something not to be seen at all out of San Francisco, and not even here outside of the Chinese quarter. But the kindergarten songs of the Americanized children from the Chinese public school struck a responsive chord at once, and their little stunts called forth thunders of applause. The little folks certainly were quaint in their rainbow costumes, and their songs and manoeuvres were very fetching, but it was all imitation, and upon the whole not a little absurd. What real association exists in their minds with "Grandpa's Dancing Lesson" or "My Old Kentucky Home?" But the play—the real thing, or perhaps only a piece of the real thing—for I believe a genuine Chinese drama is so lengthy that it must be acted in installments—did not prove interesting enough to hold the audience till the final curtain. True, it was rather incomprehensible, and no wonder, for much of Chinese acting is purely symbolical. Like their other arts, it is in a state of arrested development and has stopped short of realism. The orchestra accompanies the acting as it did in the Greek drama, the instrumentalists occupying the rear of the stage. Chinese music is nerve-racking, not so much in itself as by reason of the diabolical instruments on which it is performed. A certain metal-belled clarinet is particularly terrible. Then there is a small shrill fiddle, a wooden drum, and those immense deafening brazen cymbals which are truly infernal in their effect. The Chinese use the ancient pentatonic scale, our major scale with the fourth and seventh eliminated. Harmony is unknown, and the only recognized intervals are the octave, the fourth and the fifth. To these are attached symbolic meanings; for example, the keynote is looked upon as a man, the fifth as a woman; together they generate all other tones.

Next Week's Bills

"The Wizard of Oz" will continue at the Columbia up to and including Sunday night, October second, with the regular Saturday matinee. Frank Daniels in "The Office Boy" comes next, and then "The County Chairman."

This is the last week of Florence Roberts's enormously successful season at the California.

"The Serenade" is in for a Tivoli run. In preparation to follow is "Der Rastelbinder" (The Mouse Trap Peddler) which is in active preparation. The Tivoli will be the first theatre to produce it in America. The rights to it were secured by Ferris Hartman when he was in Vienna a year ago.

White Whittlesey will only be at the Alcazar two weeks longer. "Soldiers of Fortune" will be revived next week, and for Whittlesey's last week will be given that charming Carton comedy which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin produced some seasons back at the Columbia—"Lord and Lady Algy." For the opening of the stock season, October tenth, another Miller and Anglin success will be given—"The Wilderness." Lillian Lawrence, John Craig and Elizabeth Woodson will all be in the cast.

The Majestic has already won a warm place in the hearts of local playgoers. Oliver Morosco's clever players have become great favorites. A Revolutionary drama, "Captain Barrington," a truly American drama which had a big run in the East, will be presented next week on a lavish scale.

"Miss Mazuma" will be whipped into good shape for its second week at Fischer's. "Down the Line," by Howard Jacot and Herman Perlet, comes next.

Joaquin Miller's Mormon drama, "The Danites," will be a strong drawing card at the Central. It is a play full of stirring incidents, woven about the life of a child who escapes a Mormon

Beginning with a matinee tomorrow (Sunday) at the Grand Fred E. Wright will present the pastoral play, "York State Folks," for a limited two weeks' engagement. "York State Folks" tells a simple village story but full of heart interest. The original cast which was engaged for the first production is still retained. Ray L. Royce, James Lackaye, Harry Crosby, Randolph Currie, Osburn Searle, George C. Westcott, George W. Mahare, Carl Newton, Eleanor Sidman, Lillian Rhodes, a San Francisco girl, Frances Young, Millie Stevens, Grace Russell, the clever children and all the others will be seen in the roles they created. The scenic and property equipment is more elaborate than ever, for there is a new and handsome church scene for the finale, and the effectiveness of the "Maple Lane" scene by moonlight, the "Emporium," the wagon shop scene—all have been enhanced by the scene painter and electrician. Matinees will be given on Saturday and Sunday.

At the Orpheum among the new people will be Urbani and son, remarkable athletes; J. P. Kennedy, the well-known comedian late of "The Billionaire," and Carrie Reynolds, who was so popular here with "The Rogers Brothers in London," in "Captain Kidd." The incidental music for this skit was written by Melville Ellis. James and Bonnie Farley in "The Messenger Boy," and the two Pecks, singers, dancers and imitators, will also be new. The motion pictures will show the principal sensation of "Dreamland," Coney Island.

New at the Chutes will be Pete Baker, monologist, vocalist and dialectician, formerly of Baker and Farren; the Laurels in "La Ciel"; Gus Leonard, the odd musician; Eddie Weston and Bessie Beasley, who succeeded Johnny and Emma Ray in "A Hot Old Time," in a new sketch.

In Financial Circles

The week's business shows considerable expansion, transactions in bonds aggregating $513,000, and 5,939 shares, divided as follows: 1 160 lighting, 659 water, 690 miscellaneous, 75 bank shares and 3,355 sugars.

The bonds of the Associated Oil Companies were liberally dealt in, the bid price remaining $70. San Francisco Gas & Electric showed a little more activity, all offers of stock being readily taken. Spring Valley Water was dull and inactive. In the miscellaneous group Alaska Packers' Association showed a slight weakness and California Wine Association scored another advance of about $2.00.

Sugar stocks did not fully maintain their advance, though considerable business was transacted in them; offerings are light, however. I expect them to take a fresh start upwards before long.

A London Curtain-Raiser

"That Brute Simmons," one of Arthur Morrison's "Tales of Mean Streets," has been done into a curtain-raiser, and is very well received in London, so it is not unlikely to make its way across the Atlantic. It has a somewhat Enoch-Ardeny plot. Simmons was very much married indeed to a widow who looked after him and his belongings to such an extent as to cut his hair and make his clothes, though she was equally innocent in the matters of tailoring and barbering. Before becoming Mrs. Simmons she had been Mrs. Ford, but the first partner of her joys and sorrows had been lost at sea some five years before her second matrimonial venture. Ford, however, turned up and tried to make a deal with Simmons, by which in exchange for good coin, five pounds at first, but by a sliding scale, reduced to one, with a pot of beer "stood out" he would resign all claims to his erstwhile wife. Simmons, who was a good and tractable specimen of his sex, would have remained to the end of his days a victim of wifely solicitude, had nothing interfered, but now he suddenly became impressed with the claim of his predecessor, and took advantage of his opportunity to "slope," leaving Ford in possession. This was far from being on the program of that worthy, who, hearing the good woman ascending the stairs to her lodging, made a perilous exit via the window, a shed and a fence or two, and as none but Simmons knew of Ford's advent, and he himself left no explanation of his sudden disappearance, the desertion of "that brute Simmons" became one of the mysteries of the tenement mansion wherein they resided. The scene, of course, is laid in the East End of London, a section made recently familiar through "People of the Abyss."

J. H. GILMOUR,
Leading man, Majestic Theatre.

Dorothy Tennant has the title role in Ade's new comedy, "The College Widow," which will have its premier in New York at the Garrick on September twentieth. The "college widow" is described by those who know as an unmarried woman, more or less attractive and more or less young, who resides in a college town, and who is usually engaged to one of the students, the engagement being broken for some one of many reasons at the end of the college term. It appears that there was an attractive woman in one of the college towns who actually reached maturity as a college widow. One cheerful winter morning, a college youth telegraphed his father, "Congratulate me. I am engaged to Miss ——" The father telegraphed: "So was I at your age."

MISS JULIET CROSBY,

One of the most popular members of the Alcazar company, who made her reappearance on Monday evening with White Whitlesey in the picturesque romantic drama, "Monbars." Miss Crosby achieved great success in this play when produced at the Alcazar last season.

September twenty-fifth is the day set for the opening of the season of 1904 and 1905 by the Jefferson Square Club. The management of the club has added four additional bowling alleys, making twelve in all. A number of private clubs have been formed and the management will, during the coming season, have six alleys which can be reserved for private clubs. This will be very agreeable to a great many who, last season, could not reserve alleys on account of the limited number. Bowling this season is more popular than it was last year. A great many people who visited the different summer resorts, where bowling alleys were maintained, have taken occasion to practice up on the game, and some very high scores are expected among the lady members of the Jefferson Square Club this season.

Automobile Topics

Dr. Carl M. Lee bought a new Model Cadillac touring car last week. Dr. Lee is the first Chinaman in San Francisco to own an automobile.

John S. Craig, of Woodland, in company with a party of friends, ran his Winton touring car from Woodland to San Francisco on Thursday last.

A. E. Joy and Mr. White, both well known Winton enthusiasts of Watsonville, are at present in this city and will remain here for a few days. They are making their headquarters at the Pioneer Automobile Company's garage.

Charles De Young, who owns a Winton touring car, is taking a great deal of enjoyment out of his machine touring Marin county.

Another Winton touring car has entered the rent service in San Francisco. The machine was purchased by C. H. Stuart, whose stand will be in front of the Hoffman. Mr. Stuart has purchased one of the late up-to-date model Winton touring cars.

F. S. Jacks, agent for the Pioneer Automobile Company for Napa county and vicinity, ran his Oldsmobile tonneau to San Francisco on Monday last. Mr. Jacks has sold eleven Oldsmobiles during the last year. He speaks very highly of the Oldsmobile tonneau, of which he has sold several in his territory, and the owners of same state that their machines are giving most excellent satisfaction. Two loads of Oldsmobile light tonneau cars and runabouts are due to arrive at the Pioneer Automobile Company's garage this week. The tonneaus and all but three of the twelve runabouts have been sold.

The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company has just received this telegram: "Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 17, '04: At Poughkeepsie races yesterday Lee with regular stock Pope-Toledo first in touring car class defeating 20 h. p. Mercedes, 35 h. p. Columbia. Second in Duchess handicap, defeating 60 h. p. Mercedes, Franklin racer, 35 h. p. Columbia and 20 h. p. Mercedes.—Pope Motor Car Co."

Also: "Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 13th, '04: At Providence races Sept. 10th, S. C. Fletcher's 24 h. p. Pope-Toledo stock touring car fully equipped won five mile race, time 6:31 1-5. Same car also won five mile match race defeating Morrison's Peerless cars being fully equipped, time 6:25 4-5. Also in another special match race Pope-Toledo 24 h. p. stock touring car won by nearly a quarter of a mile, defeating H. E. Roger's Peerless, time 5:58 2-5, this being a stripped race, Peerless stripped of everything possible. Pope-Toledo was only stripped 3 tonneau and mud guards. Pope-Toledo stock touring cars won every race entered.—Pope Motor Car Co."

The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company reports there is a great deal of interest displayed in the new model L which is due to arrive in San Francisco about September twenty-fifth.

George P. Fuller will race his Pope-Toledo at Los Angeles in competition for the Lowe trophy, Chanslor cup, Johnson cup and Huntington trophy. The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company has on exhibition at their garage the ten handsome trophies won at the Del Monte tournament, five of them including the Del Monte cup, won by George P. Fuller.

Mr. Ferris, theatrical manager of Minneapolis, who is an owner of a four-cylinder Pope-Toledo, is in town.

Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Gunst with Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Rothschild as guests, drove their Pope-Toledo last Sunday from Burlingame to San Francisco in forty-five minutes. Many Pope-Toledo cars were seen on country runs last Sunday.

Samuel G. Buckbee of the executive committee of the Automobile Club of California, and one of the most enthusiastic auto tourists in San Francisco, made a remarkable as well as extremely interesting run recently in his White steam touring car. Starting from San Rafael he drove his steamer to Petaluma, Santa Rosa, thence to Napa, Napa Soda Springs, to Aetna Springs through the Chiles valley. From Aetna the tour led over Howell mountain to St. Helena, to Calistoga, and then over Spring Hill again to Santa Rosa and home. The run was an exceedingly hard test for the auto, "but I never had the least trouble with my car," said Mr. Buckbee. The hardest part of the run was over Spring Hill to Santa Rosa, a distance of eighteen miles. The incline is four miles of continuous grade from eight to fourteen per cent and no let up, for even fifty feet, the entire distance. "It is the hardest climb I ever wish to put an auto to," said Mr. Buckbee, "and besides the steepness the road is not in very good shape. The run from Napa to Napa Soda Springs is eight miles, and the two miles at the finish are something frightful, almost impassable in spots, but the auto pulled the party comfortably through. The roads as far as Sonoma are in excellent condition."

J. R. Buck, general auditor of the White Sewing Machine company of Cleveland, Ohio, has been in San Francisco the past few days. He is touring the State in a White and intends to make the run shortly to Los Angeles. Last Sunday Mr. Buck and Mr. Gardiner of the White company toured San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley.

George H. Graves of Salem, Oregon, was here last week, and in speaking about automobiling related some very interesting experiences he has had with the motor car in Oregon. Mr. Graves covers all of Oregon for his firm, and in his travels uses a White. "A year ago there were no automobiles in Salem, while now there are fourteen, all being used only for pleasure purposes except my cars," said Mr. Graves. "The country, however, is very unfavorable for automobiling; there are no good roads whatever. All are very rough, and the country is extremely mountainous. At first I was afraid to go over the mountains in my car for fear of breaking down, and in which case one would be fifty to one hundred miles from anywhere. I very seldom have had trouble with my car on the mountainous grades." Mr. Graves said that the hardest run his auto is put to is from Cottage Grove to Ashland, a distance of about two hundred and fifty miles, off the railroad and crossing two mountain ranges with the hills almost straight up and down and the mountains nearly perpendicular.

G. Lambert was one of the many White owners who enjoyed pleasant runs across the bay last Sunday. Mr. Lambert and party made the run to Niles.

The first record run ever made from Los Angeles to San Francisco was accomplished by W. R. Densmore of Detroit, H. B. Larzelere, W. W. Everett and H. A. French in a 1904 four-cylinder Voiture Legere Packard touring car; elapsed time fifty-three hours and forty minutes, actual running time thirty-eight hours and forty-two minutes.

A carload shipment of 1904 Packard touring cars will be received by the Pacific Motor Car company in about two weeks.

Albert Sutton with a party of gentlemen left Saturday noon in his St. Louis car for a little trip and returned Monday morning after having a very enjoyable outing.

Imagine an auto running a distance of six hundred miles under the worst possible road conditions, day and night, without a wink of sleep for the chauffeurs, or even an occasional ham sandwich to keep their spirits up. Yet this is what was done by H. B. Larzelere of this city and W. R. Densmore of Detroit, of the Packard factory, who last week made the best endurance test ever accomplished west of Chicago. This was the first actual continual run record from Los Angeles to San Francisco, and was made in thirty-six hours twenty-two minutes running time. On one shift Larzelere ran the car twenty-two hours without leaving the wheel, rubbing tobacco into his eyes to keep awake, but stopping neither to eat nor drink. Between Soledad and San Juan he drove the car with only oil side lights at an average of forty miles an hour, on the darkest kind of a night. The car was a Packard Voiture Lizeri. The rare judgment of Larzelere on the mountain passes during the night running deserved the praise it was accorded him by the others in the party. It would be hard to conceive the hardship that the two operators of the car experienced on the trip. It is said they lost an even twelve pounds of weight each.

Harvey Dana, accompanied by Mrs. Dana and Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Griffith, arrived at Byron Springs in their Pope-Toledo on Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Samuel accompanied them in their Knox, returning Sunday. They pronounced the roads in excellent condition.

Mr. Harold B. Larzelere, until now sales manager of the Pacific Motor Car Company, has just received an appointment as sales manager with one of the large factories with whom his firm has been doing business.

taught in the Louis Crepau School, another and most important feature is the teaching of the English phonetic sounds. The study of the five vowels is not all that is necessary to sing in a language, and particularly so in English. Very few English-speaking people are able to sing the phonetics of their language exempt from throatiness. Fundamentally, English phonetics cannot be emitted in singing as uttered in speech. From a vocal standpoint and through ten years of experience in teaching English-speaking singers, Mr. Crepau has made a vocal classification of all the English phonetic sounds. This classification enables English-speaking singers to master all the English phonetic sounds and renders them harmonious and easy to sing.

Miss Smith's Recital

Mr. Theodor Salmon's popularity, both musically and socially, and the announcement that his pupil, Miss Lillian Smith of Pittsburg, would be the star in a very attractive program, was sufficient reason for bringing out a large and cultured audience last Thursday evening in the Maple room of the Palace hotel. An evening of music written for two pianos is a novelty even for a San Francisco audience, and the program Mr. Salmon had arranged was refreshing in every way, introducing compositions by French composers which were entirely new, an Italian composer's work and a Weber-Liszt number. Miss Smith proved herself an interesting player. Besides technical skill she displayed much intelligence, warmth and color in her work, and played with finish and elegance. Her stage presence is winning, and taken all in all, Miss Smith made a decided hit, with an audience inclined to be critical, and received hearty and prolonged applause after each number. It goes without saying that Mr. Salmon gave magnificent support at the second piano. This artist is too well known in San Francisco to need more than passing mention. He played by special request a "Romance" of his own, which has become a universal favorite, and as usual called forth a storm of applause, to which the pianist was obliged to bow his acknowledgment many times. Mr. Alfred Cogswell, who is the fortunate possessor of a baritone voice of beautiful quality, sang two groups of songs, and gave his numbers an artistic interpretation such as one rarely hears. He also received a cordial reception from the audience and responded with several encores. The program in full read as follows: Two pianos, Gavotte and Musette, op. 34, Eugénie Piani, Pas des Bijoux de la Tempête, Ambroise Thomas, Viennoise (Lanterne Magique), Godard-Cazaneuves, Miss Smith, Mr. Salmon; song, From out thine eyes my songs are flowing, Franz Ries, Mr. Cogswell; piano, Polonaise Brillante, op. 72, Weber-Liszt, Miss Smith, orchestral accompaniment on second piano, Mr. Salmon; songs, A Red, Red Rose, Hastings, Sunshine, MacDowell, Time enough, Nevin, Mr. Cogswell; piano, Romance, Salmon, Mr. Salmon; two pianos, Valse des Heures des Coppelia, Delibes, Aragonaise du Cid, Massenet, La Sevillane, op. 19, Chaminade, Miss Smith, Mr. Salmon.

The Josef Hofmann Concerts

The sale of season tickets for the three concerts by Josef Hofmann, the great pianist, opens Monday morning next at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. The prices for the course tickets are very moderate so that students and teachers may have the opportunity of hearing the wonderful young artist in all the programs. The greatest advantage of European music study is the opportunity it affords one to hear great musicians, and if Manager Greenbaum continues to bring such fine artists as he has for the past few years and has booked for the coming season, it will be of the greatest benefit to the music lovers of this community. Season tickets can be had as low as one dollar and seventy-five cents for the three concerts. On Thursday the sale of single seats will begin. The prices range from seventy-five cents to two dollars. The three interesting programs, on which appear several works by the virtuoso, have been published in neat form and may be had at the box office. A great novelty will be a group of works by Russian composers at the Saturday matinee.

Gadski to Sing Here in Concert

Manager Will Greenbaum has arranged with Madame Gadski for three concerts to be given during the first week in January next. Gadski has always been one of the great favorites in this city and being the youngest of the great prima donnas is now in the midst of her glory, with a voice still fresh and beautiful. No singer with the Grau company made more friends and admirers than this charming woman and we may expect another Schumann-Heink furor.

Sousa is Coming

John Philip Sousa and his band will be at the Alhambra, under the direction of Gottlob, Marx and Company, for twelve concerts beginning October sixteenth. Sousa is the greatest conductor of the greatest band in existence, and he enjoys a following far greater than that of any other artist before the American public. He is the one American conductor and composer who has won international fame and success, and who is equally popular in Europe and America. Sousa is just beginning the thirteenth year of his present band and is about to embark on his seventh transcontinental tour. He has made three European tours with distinguished success, and is contemplating a fourth in the near future.

SARITA MADERO

One of the most promising juvenile pupils of Madame Ellen Coursen-Roeckel, who made a tremendous hit at the Chilean celebration last Sunday evening, with her scenes from "Carmen." Town Talk gave an extended notice of the success of her own operatic concert last May. Her thrilling soprano voice, acting, fine costumes and artistic make-up have drawn many encomiums lately from the daily press after each public appearance.

A Song Recital

An invitational song recital will be given by pupils of H. B. Pasmore next Thursday evening in Lyric hall. The special features of the program will be the quartet from "Rigoletto," sung by four young people from San Jose; a quartet by John Harraden Pratt, "The Lover's Song," and one by Mr. Pasmore, "What my lover said," to be sung by Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. Basford, Messrs. Nowlan and Pasmore. The celebrated song from Handel's "Il Pensieroso," "Sweet Bird," with flute obligato, in which Mrs. Faull, then Beulah George, and Mr. Elias Hecht, as flutist, made such a fine impression at the last Twentieth Century Club concert; Lo, Here, the Gentle Lark, Bishop's famous coloratura song, is to be sung by Mrs. Gardner with flute. Mr. Niel will be the flutist at this concert. Several promising voices will be heard for the first time—Miss Elizabeth Gorno, soprano, Miss Julia Kinsey, soprano, Mrs. Rose M. Owen, soprano, Miss Grace Needham, contralto, Miss Anna Obermuller, contralto, Charles Trowbridge, tenor, Hadley Lawrence, basso. Frank Figone will sing Handel's "Honor and Arms."

Mrs. Florence Wyman Gardner made the hit of the day at the first meeting of the San Francisco Musical Club. She sang a cycle of songs by Mary Louise Carr Moore, formerly a pupil of H. B. Pasmore, now located in Seattle. The Cycle is very bright and vivacious, with here and there a touch of pathos or dramatic fire, that lend real power to the work. It would really compare well with works by Mrs. Beach, Liza Lehmann and such composers.

The third operatic concert of the Roeckel twins, Maria and Mario, will be given next Thursday evening in Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The program will consist almost entirely of selections from the operas, given in costume.

Big Strike on the Yavapai Mines Reveals the Glittering Yellow Metal. Stockholders Much Excited

Additional Machinery the Only Thing Now Required to Make These Mines Big Producers and Dividend Payers

Four and a half months ago Government work was started on the project, it was Yunnan's first. Many companies, situated there since the late 1940s, had been in business and a kind of stock market was placed on the market. The Government project was snatched up in short order.

ment wired the officers in this city that a rich strike had been made and that the ore was rich in gold. The company sent out a party to investigate and they promptly discovered the rich strike. The gold is of a fine quality and is of a rich color, which can be seen at a glance with the naked eye. The specimens are now on exhibition in the offices of the company in the Chamber Building, corner of Broadway and Wall streets, New York.

The mines of this company are situated in the heart of the greatest gold district in Arizona and it will be a miracle if the company does not become one of the greatest producers in the world.

of this rich ore so far opened up, there was an abundance of good milling ore between the walls at this point, and that the mine and few Arizona miners have encountered the good fortune in that state. The mining State has been one of the great producers of lead in the country. It was in that direction that the famous Iron King, John W. Hays, for nearly 20 years was successfully engaged in the lead industry.

The Morgan story is not a completely short biography, but an elaborated piece of fiction, one of the many fictions the novel, and the larger bookish world of North, takes into the history of which almost every one is conversant—how it raised Senator Clark from the ranks to a great millionaire, giving him an income from the property of over $1,000,000 a month, and for whom he recently received $500,000,000.

Yavapai Development Work

Already a shaft 120 feet deep has been sunk, and as depth is attained the ore increases in richness. A 40-foot drift north and a crosscut 30 feet west absolutely demonstrates the great bodies of ore that lie hidden within this group of mines, awaiting but further development and opening up to place it among the long list of Arizona's great dividend payers and producers.

Particular attention is called to the affidavit of Mr. J. R. Higgins, a worthy man of many years' standing and possessing the highest integrity.

Affidavit of J. R. Hagins

1. J. R. Hagins, being first duly sworn, depose and say: That I am the original discoverer of the group of mines now owned by the Yavapai Gold Mining Company and the superintendent of said mines. I firmly believe that when they are properly opened up they will be on a level with the best paying mines in the district, and will surpass the "Iron King Mine," which I discovered, and for which the owners recently refused $5,000,000.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 11th day of November, 1903.

J. B. HAGINS

Subscribed before me this 11th day of November, 1903.

Q. C. PRATT.

Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco,
State of California.

This property is situated on the same mineral belt as the Great Congress Mine and lies between that and the United Verde, owned by Senator W. A. Clark. The Congress mine enjoys the distinction of having paid $15,000,000 in dividends and still producing as rich as ever. While the United Verde is said to be the richest mine in the world, and stock is now worth $300 per share, it was only a few years ago that this same stock sold for less than $1.00 per share.

Poor Men's Mine

But for the fact that none but comparatively poor men are interested in this property, there would not be one dollar's worth of the mine's stock paid on the market, but an enormous machinery is required and the by-laws of the company prohibit the directors contracting debts in excess of the cash on hand, so as to secure the necessary capital to work this property to the great profit which the stockholders are entitled to, it has been decided to issue another small block of treasury stock on the market, and so long as it will be sufficient to purchase the necessary machinery, when the mine will return the money a hundred fold.

Engineer's Report

George A. Peterson, one of the brightest stars among the engineers on the Pacific coast, who has been acting as consulting engineer at this property in his report of September 24, 1907.

After being in charge of the property for over three months, during which time I have given the property and the district generally the most earnest study and consideration, I have no hesitation in saying that in my judgment the Yavapai has the making of a very rich mine and one that will in the end satisfy every reasonable mining man's expectations. The ledge upon which the ore is found is certainly a massive, or material bearing body of rock. It crops out on the surface for a distance of from eight to ten miles and from this can be hoined from almost any portion of the workings on this property. The big strike seams of about 1000 feet and some less in thickness made at a depth of about twenty feet from the surface, and which we have opened up completely, little or that may be so far the ledge carries a large body of heavy, coarse grained bearing quartz, and only depth is required, as I said before, to prove up the property. The ledge is a contact between porphyry and granite and the vein matter is about seven feet in thickness, consisting of white quartz, carrying gold and considerable amounts in the course of the vein in the two-foot-thick shaft being sunk have encountered pieces of high-grade ore showing more gold. In all my twenty years of mining experience I never knew of a property of this kind where conditions were more favorable for the economical treatment of the ore. In my judgment the entire cost of mining and milling need not exceed $6.00 per ton, so that you can see that the mine has the very brightest prospect of becoming a rich producer."

A good example of this is the use of a very few more thousands of tons of ore which will be obtained not giving sufficient tonnage to justify the cost of a large mill.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors it was arranged for the sale of the limited amount of the treasury stock at a price and upon terms which will be within the reach of every investor.

The purpose of the company in offering its stock for sale is to enable it to carry out the recommendations of its experts, knowing that by adding to its present machinery equipment it will be in a position to quickly reduce the vast ore bodies as they are hoisted from the mine. It was determined at this meeting, however, that not less than 100 shares of the stock should be sold to any one person and that the price should be 35 cents a share, and since the recent strike another advance is considered at the next meeting.

The company also agreed that any amount of stock purchased, from 100 shares up, could be paid for in monthly installments of 3 1-2 cents per share per month, as follows:

No of Shares	Monthly Payments	Total
100 .....	$ 3.50	$35.00
200 .....	7.00	70.00
300 .....	10.50	105.00
400 .....	14.00	140.00
500 .....	17.50	175.00
1,000 .....	35.00	350.00
2,000 .....	70.00	700.00

Protection to Investors

The Yavapai Gold Mining Company was formed with men at its head whose honesty and business integrity cannot be questioned, and who would not identify themselves with anything that had not merit and truth to recommend it.

Every care has been taken for the protection of small investors. The articles of incorporation and the by-laws of the company make the stock absolutely non-assessable. It was further decided at this meeting that these small investors should under no circumstances forfeit any money paid in for stock. That is, if one should subscribe for 100 or more shares, and after making one or more payments be unable to meet an installment, stock for every dollar that has been paid shall be issued to the purchaser.

If there are any readers of this paper who desire to stand in a small way on this wonderfully rich mine, they are advised to write to A. J. Chandler, Assistant Secretary Yavapai Gold Mining Company, Room 611 Crossley Building, San Francisco, and arrangements will be made to get a few of them in on this desirable mine.

Maps, affidavits and information regarding the property will be furnished free upon application.

The Howe Club gave an operatic concert in Native Sons' hall on Thursday evening of last week, the soloists being Mrs. Lillian Merrihew-Pearce, Mrs. J. C. Blaisdell and Mrs. K. E. Kneiss, sopranos; Mrs. John G. Jury and Mrs. Edith Scott-Basford, contraltos; T. Alexander, L. Gilpin and R. R. Muir, tenors; George Stark, baritone; H. Williamson, Geo. R. Bird and W. D. Green, basses; Miss Ruby A. Moore, accompanist; James Hamilton Howe, director; concert master, Charles G. Montgomery. The program consisted chiefly of selections from the operas. In November the club will produce "Paradise Lost" by Dubois; in February, "The Creation" by Haydn, and in May a mixed program of classic selections.

The concert of Madame Fannie Francisca, on Wednesday night, was given too late to be reviewed in this week's issue. The matinee today will draw another crowded house, judging by the advance sale of seats. The program will be: Madame Francisca, aria from "Le Cid," Massenet; Arditi's "Il Bacio" waltz song; "Si mes vers avaient des ailes," Massenet; "Adoration," Rubinstein; "Rossignol" aria, Handel; aria from Delibes' "Lakme"; "Three Green Bonnets," d'Hardelot; "De gefoote Vogelaar," van Rennes; mad scene from "Hamlet," Thomas. Melville Ellis will play scenes from "Louise," by Charpentier, and Newbauer will play two flute solos by German.

On Tuesday evening, September thirteenth, Dr. H. J. Stewart directed the concert at the Children's Hospital entertainment. The soloists were Mrs. B. Apple; soprano, Madame Elsa von Grofe, cellist, Mrs. L. Snider-Johnson, soprano, Miss Ella V. McCloskey, contralto.

Miss Agathe Norman, a pupil of Professor Paolo La Villa, sang at the Dante Alighieri affair on Tuesday evening. The program will be reviewed in next week's issue.

On Wednesday at the meeting of the Oakland Club, in Maple hall of that city, the musical program was directed by Mrs. Jessie Dean Moore, the soprano, and was very artistic in arrangement and carrying out. Miss Alva Countryman rendered Schubert's "Ave Maria"; Miss Elva Johnson, Joseph Dressauer's "Ouvriez"; Miss Ruby Moore, Haydn's "The Spirit Song"; Mrs. Jessie Dean Moore, the Jewel song from "Faust." The accompanist for the singers was Mrs. F. H. Van Tassel. —The Music Critic.

The Soul of an Actress

BY IRENE CONNELL.

Yes, it is true. I am going back to the stage. I detest the tame and colorless life of a society woman. I loathe those stupid teas and receptions where one always sees the same people and hears the same tiresome speeches. In the old days all the wits in town used to throng my dressing room, and to think that now they are crowding round that insipid Rose Alba! Well, after next week we shall see. I am a little stouter now, but I have not gone off in my looks. To think that all shall be mine again, the flowers, the applause and the press notices. Heavens! I did not realize how much I missed them! Ah, the excitement and suspense of a first night in a new role; you never know just what the critics will say. Every evening at the hour when I used to make my entrance I had a strange empty feeling in my heart. For a long time I did not know what it was, but I know now. I love the very smell of a theatre, the gas, the stale air. I love the bustle behind the scenes, everybody getting ready for something; I long for my dressing room with my costumes hanging on the wall, each on its nail, ready for me to slip into. Do you remember the silver gray one with the gray suede boots that I used to wear in "The Outlaws"? That was becoming, wasn't it? In just a week Cecile will be laying out my things and I shall be busy with my make-up, for I am going back to it all again. Rose Alba will be surprised, I warrant you. She thought I had left the stage for good. The papers are always harping on her freshness and good looks. Well, I am several years younger than she is, and if I do say so, much better looking, and when it comes to talent I flatter myself that I have the best of it. Oh, to be sure, we are the best of friends, Rosa and I have always been as fond of each other as sisters, rejoiced in each other's triumphs and all that. No, there is not a suspicion of jealousy between us, merely a friendly rivalry quite natural among artists. I am to appear in a new role, the play has been written especially for me. My husband objected at first, but when he saw how much my art meant to me he became reconciled to my appearance in public. Art is such an exacting mistress, but Theron is the best and noblest of men. He never opposes my wishes, and of course my triumph will be a matter of pride to him, for I mean to triumph. Rose Alba shall not have all the world at her feet. My society friends? Doubtless they will come at least once out of curiosity, but what do I care? What business has an actress in society? She is looked upon like a creature with two heads, a nine days' wonder. If she has any originality she is either criticised or copied. Fashionable life is all sham and twaddle. An actress belongs to a different world. If she is wise she will live in it, marry in it, die in it. Rose Alba has always kept before the public. Bah, it makes me sick to read those eternal notices of her beauty, her chic and her success. But I think it will pique the public to have me come back after a few years' absence and I am sure I can make up for lost time. My heart flutters when I think of it. Well, after next week we shall know.

Old Pictures Worth Saving

The August number of the California Review cannot rightly be called a back number yet, with the city still full of Eastern visitors. It is not one of the catch-penny devices, such as "special numbers" are apt to be, but contains a number of articles especially timely, concerning San Francisco and her enterprises. More particularly to be commended are the pictures, which are well executed and less commonplace than the majority. It is a wonder that our own inhabitants, and more particularly the pioneers and their descendants, have never taken pains to collect and preserve prints of buildings, street vistas, water-front scenes, etc. No one should better realize the changes that have taken place since we were a city of tents set down among the sand dunes, and the middle-aged can recall the time when Lincoln school, with its statue of the martyred president, was a show building, and Market street merchants used to specify their location as so many doors east or west, or opposite Bancroft's building, or when the old St. Ignatius' church, on the Emporium site, was described as being "away out in St. Ann's Valley." Now we have the New Flood building, the St. Francis hotel and the Fairmount, but they do not call forth the same awed wonder that was the portion of the Grand and the Palace in their day. Changes are brought about gradually, but all of a sudden we are reminded that the old order has changed and that we have no tangible reminder of that which has been. Some day, and not so far into the future either, a good collection of these old prints, considered too commonplace to preserve now, will be worth money. There is talk of a Panama Canal Exposition to be held here in 1913, and there are plenty of people now living who have a reasonable hope of surviving the centennial, if centennials are still celebrated in 1950. But aside from all this, there is plenty of good reading matter in the Review, which has been making rapid improvement of late, and now stands well up in the ranks of Western magazines.

The September number of Good Housekeeping is something new under the sun. All the articles are contributed by men, and if any one labors under the delusion that men do not know what they are talking about when they discuss household matters, here is a first-rate chance to be set right.

The biography of Thomas Nast by Albert Bigelow Paine will be published immediately by the Macmillans. Already a good advance advertisement has been worked up through the controversy as to whether Nast was or was not the originator of the popular conception of Santa Claus, and the fact that the discussion has been permitted to take up columns of space in the New York Times is sufficient evidence that the personality of Nast holds interest. The biography will be illustrated by about four hundred of the best Nast cartoons.

As To Sequels

It is reported that Kate Douglas Wiggin is turning over in her mind the advisability of writing a sequel to "Rebecca," in response to the many importunities addressed to her. If those who are desirous of a sequel are to be heard the other side of the question deserves some consideration also. Sequels are very apt to be like the second cup of tea—disappointing, when they are not absolute failures. Children like series of books dealing with the same characters, but it is doubtful whether "sequels" are popular even with them. William Black, W. D. Howells, and Mrs. Wiggin herself, not to mention the others of the innumerable caravan, have taken the minor characters of one story for the principals of another, and we are usually glad to meet them once more and know more about them, but that is a different matter from finishing off a whole set of people. It seldom happens in life that we are able to know definitely just what happens to any coterie, who die and how, and whom the rest marry or do not marry, and how all the children turn out. One or two we may keep trace of, but the others just disappear. They move away or are merged into other sets, and no one can say definitely just how or why it happens. Eleanor Gates says she was tempted to write a sequel to her delightful "Biography of a Prairie Girl," but was held back by "Tommy and Grizel," and no one who was enthralled by Jean Ingelow's "Off the Skelligs," in the days of its vogue can forget the flatness of "Fated to be Free," which followed it. "Rebecca," just as it stands now is delightful for young and old. It is one of the best books for a girl that any wise guardian can hope to find, but what would a sequel be?

The following reliable testimonial speaks for itself:

"I take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful curative powers of Charles Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. For many years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and intestinal catarrh. My California physician brought up my case before the Congress of Homeopathic Physicians held in Chicago in 1901. An eminent specialist in intestinal diseases advised the use of Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. His advice was followed and I have been restored to health.

"Having been connected with schools I have also used Hydrozone with great efficacy on the pupils, in healing all kinds of skin troubles, from abscesses to poison oak.

The modish woman's stationery is as much a part of her nowadays as her dainty wardrobe. Cooper & Co., 746 Market Street, are showing the newest modes in paper and envelopes, dies and seals.

Necessarily, a love story, in which Rebecca was carried through a successful courtship and happily married to her "Mr. Aladdin." One of the chiefest merits of the volume as it now stands is that it meets a long-felt want in supplying something interesting and wholesome for that neglected class, the girls who have outgrown fairy-tales and not yet reached the age of the full-grown novel, those who are too big for dolls and too little for lovers. When there is such an abundance to satisfy the appetites of the adults and the grown-up young ladies, why spoil the one good thing available for the little sisters? If Mrs. Wiggin will write another book approximately as good, using Rebecca and her Riverboro friends as material, it will be welcomed, but we do not want her spoiled.

Stewart Edward White is an admirer of the concise and picturesque language of the genuine cowboy, though he takes the precaution to add that one need not expect to hear them talk off whole pages of epigrams, as they do in stageland or in popular novels. He cites one comment which is really too good to be left buried in the pages of a magazine until the monthly installments of his "The Mountains" appear between covers. Mr. White was reading a novel when one of the men sauntered across and looked over his shoulder, asking, "Well, son, are they kissin' or killin'?" And that is about all there is to the average romance except the times when they are discussing either of the performances.

M. Hugues le Roux has been on a mission to Abyssinia, from which he reports the discovery of an original manuscript containing a contemporary account of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon, from whom the monarch of the African principality claims descent. It may or it may not be a genuine find, but one would be more inclined to give credence to the announcement if M. Le Roux had not already discounted credulity by his claim to the authorship of "La Belle Nivernais."

Norman Duncan, pleasantly remembered for his former volumes, "The Soul of the Street," and "The Ways of the Sea," will shortly bring out another book. Mr. Duncan is professor of rhetoric at Washington and Jefferson College, and though he writes so understandingly of it is said to hate and dread the sea. One of the stories in his last volume, "The Way of the Sea," told of a Newfoundland fisherman who was obliged to let two of his four children die of diphtheria because he could not pay for the anti-toxine for them all. When the tale first appeared the newspapers took the author to task for his slander and misrepresentation of the medical profession, but for all that the basis of the story was fact, easily substantiated by witnesses.

A prominent physician has recently published an article on the subject of Aztec medical knowledge, in which he shows that the aboriginal Mexicans were conversant with many of what are currently believed to be recent discoveries. It is only another instance of nothing new under the sun. Clifton Johnson, in his "Old Time Schools and School Books," does not profess to go farther back than the Colonial history of the United States, nor very deeply into the early years of that epoch, yet one cannot read his book without discovering that all the modern methods, fads and fancies, kindergarten, nature study, manual training, sight-reading and short cuts, were long ago tried and found wanting, and that the very newest thing in text-books is after all, only a modification of something discarded before the modern instructor was born.

Jack London's "People of the Abyss" has been added to the list of books for issue to ships' libraries in the United States navy.

The Potters of Chicago are running some of the most prolific producers of fiction a close race. Margaret Horton Potter will shortly publish "The Flame-Gatherers," in which she goes back to the early years of the thirteenth century. Her scene is placed in India, both far enough away and far enough back to secure immunity from ordinary criticism. Evidently Miss Potter's first experience, in which she chose modern Chicago, has taught her the wisdom of invoking the enchantment which lies in distance.

Other People's Ideas

From "Pigs in Clover," by Frank Danby:

Faith comes in childhood or not at all.

A writer born, not made, has this apart from other men and women, a power of detachment, an impersonal double sense that visualizes the picturesque, the apposite, and sees it apart from its surroundings, framed and made separate. The writer, born, not made, can sit by the deathbed of a beloved one and forget the dying, see the dear face on the pillow, listen to the labored, difficult breathing, hideous with the hoarse death-rattle, and be filled with naught but the difficulty of translating the scene into phrase, of grouping the sentences so as to make the room with its medicine bottles, its white-capped nurse and drug-smells stand out solemn and cold and clear in the black and white sharp outline, the shadowlessness of print.

"In Memoriam" is all very well, but a man wants his dinner. . . . And the woman who can quote "In Memoriam" to a hungry stockbroker is not one with whom it is impossible to quarrel.

There are many things that all men know, and no gentlemen say.

Personally, although I do believe in Platonic love, I don't believe in Platonic jewelry—(Louis).

There is a mystery known to all who know men and women, to all who have insight into, sympathy with, or understanding of their fellow-travelers, but it is blank and incomprehensible to the Pharisees, and to all who would read and run at the same time. This is a mystery that fills the divorce courts, mocks the incredulous, and sets at naught all creeds and convictions. It is that a certain something, subtle, sweet and rare, not a perfume, not a touch, but an echo of both, light, elusive, all-pervading, is the special property of some loose living men, a property that is beyond the reach of analysis, but recognizable in the freemasonry of the passions by all who have realized its existence. It is as the candle to the moth, as the rose to the butterfly, as the magnet to the steel. It is the surface lure of sex, it is an all compelling whisper, almost it seems that to hear it is to obey. But some ears are deaf to it, some few dull ears.

When we pray, those of us who do pray for our babies, that they should be "kept innocent," is it a merciful God who leaves our prayers so oft unanswered?

It is the misfortune of the Jews that one of their community cannot misbehave without earning opprobrium for their whole body. The prejudice is still very vivid and real, however it may be glozed over by civilized thought and cultivated reason.

What a man does for over thirty years habitually, becomes so ingrained that to change conduct is to change individuality.

Woman's fortification is not her virtue—for woman's virtue is the same as man's virtue, no more, no less—her fortification, her bulwark, is her modesty.

There is nothing in the world so cruel as the cruelty of a man towards a woman for whom his passion is dead. There is no power so absolute as the power for torture that a woman puts into a man's hands when she gives herself wholly to him, with no tie between them but her love and his honor.

When vice and poverty join hands they dance lewdly over decency.

ARE — YOUR — KIDNEYS IN PERFECT ORDER?

Thousands and thousands of men, women and even children are going around with weak unhealthy kidneys and neglecting themselves day after day.

THE WEAK SPOT

isn't going to stand the strain many days. You must either do something for yourself quick or be in a condition beyond all medical aid.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, therefore, when through neglect or other cause kidney trouble is permitted to continue, fatal results are sure to follow.

Your kidneys have a great deal of work to do and it is therefore absolutely necessary that they should be in a healthy condition at all times.

Hooper's Parsley Kidney Pills are aiding hundreds and hundreds on to a quick and sure recovery. The effect of this "Godsent" pill is mild and immediate.

People who have tried almost every medicine without effect have been cured entirely after taking a few boxes of these wonderful pills. The name tells you what the pill is chiefly composed of. It is proving to be nature's own cure for that terrible disease—Kidney trouble. The form in which we compound this cure makes it pleasant and easy to take. ### Marriage in The Army

"The army and navy forever! three cheers for the red, white and blue," chorus a band of outraged maidens at General Corbin, who has suggested that officers regulate their heart-beats according to their salaries. General Corbin thinks that the pay of a subaltern is not more than enough to keep his brass buttons polished and that Cupid ought to boycott an officer who has not a private income to pad out his regular pay. General Corbin has run the gamut of experience. His first matrimonial venture was gilded only by his salary, and evidently the General has based his "making both ends meet" philosophy on practical experience. The present Mrs. Corbin, who belongs to the California family of Pattens, is a wealthy woman in her own right, so the General does not have to practice economical tactics and makeshift manoeuvres now. But on the basis of past experience and diligent observation General Corbin paraphrases Kipling thus:

"You may paint it on his tombstone,
You may carve it on his card,
That an officer married
Is an officer married."

Of course impecunious officers will go on marrying just the same for there isn't the slimmest sort of a chance that Corbin's recommendation will be adopted by the military authorities. Fancy the sentimental protests that would inundate the Government if it imposed celibacy on meagrely-paid officers. But when the smoke of Corbin's shot at shoulder-strap matrimony clears away the chances are that a great many people will have a saner idea of what "marrying into the army" really means. Heretofore the army has been regarded by unsophisticated girls as a short cut to society. The worldly wise maiden knows that there is but one royal road to the Smart Set and that is paved with gold. She has figured out that the salary of an officer is not on a par with his social position. She realizes that he can manage tolerably well as long as he plays the lone hand, but the moment he takes a life partner social ambitions must be folded away and put under lock and key. There are just two brands of worldly wise young women who marry into the army — and recently in San Francisco there have been some conspicuous examples of this. The first class does not concern itself with Corbin's injunction against pauperized matrimony. As a rule these young women use the army as a Court of Last Resort from the matrimonial viewpoint, and failing to land a bigger catch content themselves with army life financed from a private fund. This sort of Beatrice has a care that her gold-laced Benedict has sufficient private income to eke out his regular pay. The other kind of sophisticated Miss is the girl who realizes the financial shortcomings of army husbands, but is willing to pay the piper herself. She gives her heart to an officer — and incidentally her purse and the result is he is able to maintain a position in accord with his rank. The unsophisticated maiden is the one who should profit by Corbin's advice. She is the sort of girl who is hanging on to society by her teeth. She is in love with army life as she knows it only through "hops" and teas and dinners. She marries an officer who does his best to stretch his pay to fill in the chinks and cracks of married life, but it's the old story of a cat chasing its tail. The young couple cannot comfortably hold up the social end of the army post, much less the social duties and obligations of the nearest city, and, as a rule, unhappiness roosts on their quarters. If worldly mothers and daughters have the matrimonial status of officers down to such a fine point why are they courted by society, asks the unbeliever. For the simple reason that the Smart Set needs a leavening of the sort of men the army offers. Many of the young chaps who go into the army have the necessary three generations back of them — the others have been disciplined into conduct "becoming an officer and a gentleman." They dance well, they are masters of small talk and they have plenty of leisure time to devote to society, which the more gilt-edged eligibles cannot afford to squander. The Smart Set welcomes the army to a certain niche reserved for them. But when it comes to marrying off their daughters to the gold lace it did not require General Corbin's recommendation to put the sophisticated on guard against the financial shortcomings of army alliances.

The Use of Tainted Money

Mrs. Ballington Booth is in a quandary. She has just been made the legatee to one hundred and two dollars left in a Chicago savings bank by "Doc" Bliss, a notorious burglar. Mrs. Booth says she is in the throes of doubt whether or not to accept the money. "Of course it has been legally bequeathed to me," she explains, "but did he obtain the money in a legal manner. If I could determine that he earned it honestly I should certainly accept the money to aid me in my prison work." As a legatee Mrs. Booth has pared the question of acceptance down to an extremely fine point. Who looks a gift horse in the mouth? Certainly not the managers of our great charity institutions, the faculties of our universities and the every-day heirs that are slipped by kindly Fortune. Where would be the ornate showings of the thriving Chicago university if President Harper inquired too curiously and conscientiously into the source of the handsome bequests with which Rockefeller has dowered that institution? What city, ambitious to capture the donation for a Carnegie library, first asked for information regarding the armor plate scandal? And if inquiry ever had been made who among the judges was gifted sufficiently in the clear light from above to determine whether or no the gift bore the taint to damn it everlastingly for purposes of good. Men have risen out of sin to do most holy work. Paul of Tarsus did not prove too wicked to do mighty deeds in the Master's vineyard and a coin that has been lost and be-fouled in the slums may serve to adorn a chapel or ease the burden of the widow and orphan. If "Doc" Bliss ever stole the one hundred and two dollars it was not with the expectation of devoting it to charity. "Out of evil cometh good," and why not devote what he have to the best use that can be made of it, no matter what its source? Churches have been built, cities founded and nations inspired with riches obtained through greater crimes than felonious entry and highway robbery, and men eminent in the world as divines, educators and rulers of mankind have not hesitated to use them. If public sentiment is all Mrs. Booth fears she need not feel sensitive about accepting "tainted" money for use in a good cause.

Shall We Spend Money in Public Display

J. Alfred Kinghorn Jones is making a belated objection to the display of which the Knights Templars' Conclave was the occasion, on the ground that the money expended was sufficient to place a million (!) poor families on farms of their own in California. This argument of what could be done for "the poor" if this, that or the other thing were left undone is one of the most futile. "The poor" who are really in such desperate need of public relief would not go on farms even if they had the chance; not to go into the matter of where the land is to be found, unclaimed and unoccupied. "Back to the land" is a captivating phrase, but where is the land, and how is Mr. Jones or any one else going to make people go back to it if they do not want to? Time and again the experiment has been tried with tenement families, seemingly promising material, but they will not remain even in a suburban village. One of the great problems of domestic help is how to get servants to go even a short distance out of town. The "poor" admit the arguments of better health and smaller expenditure, but they insist "it is so lonesome." People crowd into narrow alleys and rear tenements, when more comfort is to be found on the outskirts of town, and the same excuse is given: "It is so far away." They demand Market street "just around the corner," other sociable families above and below them, the noise of the trolley, and, above all, somewhere to gad. But suppose these difficulties were overcome, and the poor families transported to ranches of their own, what are they to live on? A knowledge of farming is not born with the city toiler. Success is apt to lie on the yon side of many failures; meantime, they must subsist. It takes capital and will to build even a rough shack, to provide plows and harrows, seed-corn and young fruit trees, and to produce crops. Neither livestock nor fences appear by spontaneous generation, and even chickens are not hatched at a marketable size. Though families may be isolated from neighbors so as to be absolved from the need of clothing for decency's sake, the demands of climate are inexorable, and finally, your city tenement dweller, who is most likely to be an artisan or a factory hand, skilled in some one trade, would be about as much at home on a ranch as a fish in a tree top. Meanwhile the money which is put into circulation amongst electricians, florists, decorators, caterers and a host of kindred tradesmen is just as wisely spent as if it were donated in so-called charity. A similar lamentation goes up whenever some officious reporter takes it upon himself to criticize the sums spent on the floral decorations for some big wedding, or other social function. As to the "back to the land" argument, it is an unfortunate circumstance that all the communal enterprises, the ones which have appealed to the confirmed city dweller, have ended in depriving him of the little he had. Topolobampo, Kaweah, Bellamy, are not names to conjure with.

Celebrating Telegraphy's Success

The most impressive reminder of the quiet revolution that has been wrought in the transmission of telegraph messages since the days of Morse and Field has just taken place in honor of the meeting of the Geographic Congress in Washington. Two signals were sent out to encircle the earth: one was flashed by way of San Francisco and the Pacific cable; the other by way of the Atlantic. The two messages met at Adelaide, Australia, just fourteen seconds after being tapped off from the naval observatory in Washington. To further illustrate the marvelous development and general use of telegraphy, cablegrams in all languages from every nation on the globe were received in reply to the international greetings. Less than five decades has marked this marvelous development in this means of communication between the peoples of our globe. It is hardly fifty years ago that the first cablegram was sent from Queen Victoria to the President of the United States in congratulation upon the first cable connecting the two countries. There is a lapse of only sixty years between Morse's first hard efforts to connect Baltimore with Washington by wire and the wireless messages so easily sent nowadays between distant liners traversing the ocean. No mechanism has done so much for the immense increase in the general commercial activities of man as has the great development in telegraphy.

The War Situation in a Nutshell

Owing to the strict press censorship the novice is able to glean very little from the despatches sent on by the war correspondents regarding the real condition of affairs in Manchuria. From semi-official data, however, and from special letters which have leaked through the lines, the military and naval experts of high class powers have figured out results which each believes will throw important light on the various movements initiated by Russia and Japan. To us Captain Mahan naturally leads the others in the importance of his conclusions. Here are his results: First, that the military and naval movements of both powers have been controlled by the recognition of two facts: that the Japanese navy is inelastic and therefore should not be subjected to grave risks; and, secondly, that delay was imperatively needed by Russia in order to place a preponderant force in Manchuria. With these two fundamental facts before us, it becomes relatively easy to understand the cautious course pursued by Admiral Togo on the one hand and the stubborn resistance of Port Arthur on the other. Captain Arima, the Japanese naval officer who commanded in the first two attempts to block the entrance to Port Arthur, bears out this conclusion in his public declaration that the preservation of the battleships was the dominant motive in Japanese councils when the capture of Port Arthur was planned. It was recognized at the time that whatever naval resources the Japanese might take into the fight would have to suffice to the finish. Their duty, therefore, was to expose the squadron to a minimum of danger, so long as its destructive potency should not thereby be impaired. It is certain that Admiral Togo, blockading Port Arthur, and Admiral Kamimura, who had to deal with the Vladivostok squadron, have not courted conflicts at close range. Hence the frequent employment of the Japanese high-angle fire. The repeated efforts to seal Port Arthur were inspired primarily by the same economical considerations. For this reason the best naval experts of the world think that Russia has taken full advantage of her sea opportunities. She should have assumed an aggressive sea policy with all the destructive forces she could command. With her naval resources, far superior to Japan's, the loss of a few vessels would have been of small moment to her could she have crippled a like number of Japan's. Too much caution was exhibited by the Port Arthur fleet and too much tardiness in despatching the Baltic fleet to the Far East. Captain Mahan believes that the latter fleet, properly equipped to start, could have reached the eastern fleets during this past summer. Had it done so and had the Port Arthur fleet been in the condition of repairment reported on August tenth, the Japanese would have found on the sea, as they have found on the land, two divergent objectives, two mobile opponents, unitedly very superior to themselves, co-operation between which, or even junction, would have been difficult to prevent. Notwithstanding the defeat of General Kuropatkin at Liaoyang, it is scarcely possible as yet to say whether the retention of Port Arthur will prove as determinative a factor in the contest as did the retention of Ladysmith in the South African campaign. Leading experts are converging more and more to the idea that the resistance offered by Port Arthur may prove the turning-point of ultimate success. In a word, Port Arthur means and has meant DELAY, the great need of all defence, and especially of that particular defensive which requires time to organize resources incontestably superior. The stubborn defense of Port Arthur has imposed upon the Japanese two objectives, so that they have to choose whether to concentrate upon the one or divide between the two. These divergent objectives were Port Arthur and the discomfiture of the northern Russian army, a discomfiture indispensable if the Japanese were to control Korea and release Manchuria, the professed motives of the war. In a word, the conclusions to date are: That a grave mistake was made in not despatching the Baltic fleet to the east some months ago, but that that mistake has been to some extent atoned for by General Stoessel's obstinate defense of Port Arthur.

Spanking as a Means to Safety

It is refreshing to see with what unanimity the authorities, real or self-appointed, are coming round to the recognition of the old-fashioned spank-stick as a means of grace. One after another, the educational authorities, the woman's clubs and judges who deal with juvenile delinquents, are dropping into line. They all agree that since the abolition of the rod children have grown more and more unmanageable. One of the latest theories to account for unruliness is that we have exalted athletic training and encouraged the producing of brawn until it is but natural for the well-developed animal to make use of his muscle in the destruction of property, the stoning of automobiles, and other acts of hoodlumism. There is something in this, but there is more in the foolish sentiment which has interfered to save children from home study and home work, thus giving them abundance of leisure for idleness. Another potent cause has been the unwarranted interference of the officers of cruelty societies whenever parents or guardians have considered it necessary to resort to discipline. These societies were organized for a good purpose, but from coming to the rescue of the exceptional child who was being abused they speedily advanced to stepping in between parent and child on the most trivial excuses. Parents were deprived of the guardianship of their offspring or "admonished" or put under surveillance for such trifling matters that there was virtually no other course but to throw their hands down and let things drift. Another object lesson in lawlessness has been the attention given to the complaints which children have brought against their teachers, and the monstrous absurdity of treating with them as equals whenever they have taken it into their heads to "strike." Still another is the manner in which the hoodlumism of college students has been exalted. A generation ago one could appeal to the innate manliness of very small boys. Today, full-grown men, qualified to cast their votes, are encouraged to consider themselves as children and to act as no children should be permitted. The newspapers record at length the rushes and hazings and other misdemeanors, not as infractions of discipline to be punished, but as something highly humorous; and the modern child reads the newspapers. The rush leader and the yell leader and the college athlete, photographed in a state as near to nudity as the law will permit, are the heroes, and the high school boy and the kindergarten kid alike emulate them. Books about children, which were never meant for the perusal of children, are injudiciously put into their hands, and the result is that nine children out of ten have a metaphorical chip on their shoulders and a ready-made grievance at hand. Stephen Crane's "Whilomville Stories," Josephine Daskam's several volumes, and even Mrs. Martin's dear, gentle little "Emmy Lou" have done their share. The children of one of the Eastern cities actually established an "Emmy Lou Club," with the object of "making our teachers be kinder to us." As a crowning work, there have been those abominable colored supplements. Parents, carelessly or indifferently, let their children have free access to the wretched things, and now they begin to realize that the example of the Katzenjammer Kids, Willie, and those promising young descendants of Foxy Grandpa, was not quite so harmless as it looked. From laughing at the antics, it was only one step more to emulating them. The modern child is badly in need of the suppression of his ego. He needs to be taught that what he thinks or wants is a matter of minor importance as compared with the general good. When an impulsive little miss will fling herself overboard because her mother objects to her attending a ten-cent theatre on Sunday, or another swallows carbolic acid because she is rebuked for staying out till the small hours of the morning, there is reason to believe that discipline has been delayed too long. Moral suasion and gentle methods are all very well when they work, but when they fail more drastic measures should be applied. For a full generation now, we have looked on at the do-as-you-like children of go-as-you-please parents, but the turn of the road is just ahead, and it will be a sharp one.

The Eternal Feminine

The woman question is always popping up in some form or other, and in spite of the fact that women have practically ousted men from many employments the tendency is still to take the ground that she is a down-trodden and unconsidered creature in need of more rights or privileges, or something, no one seems to know exactly what. Recently a contributor to a woman's page demanded that girls shall be taught professions after they have left college, falling back on the old argument that if the father's fortune is swept away, or the support of a family devolves on her, she should be prepared to face the issue. In theory this is good logic. In fact it was infinitely better for the stability of the home and family life when women knew less about careers and professions and were content to occupy themselves with home-making. It is true that women do have to undertake the support of themselves and their children very frequently, but it is equally true that in fully one-half of the instances it is their own fault. They are discontented and dissatisfied with the drudgery of housekeeping, and they prefer to teach school or keep books for an employer rather than superintend their households. The result is that some one must be hired to perform the duties naturally belonging to them, while they go abroad to earn the money required to offset the extra expense. The consequence of this is all too often not only a more extravagant and wasteful style of housekeeping, but a husband who practically lives at a club or finds elsewhere the society his wife does not furnish, and sooner or later the pretense of home-keeping is given up. A large number of women who would be content with their household duties if they knew nothing of other occupations are discontented because they imagine they are suffering great loss and hindering their development because of some slight smattering of a profession. So they tease to be permitted to cultivate their voice or to attend a dramatic school, and talk of helping along or having an anchor to windward. Usually the money wasted in these ways would make a substantial nest-egg by itself. Of course none of these promoters of female industry ever comes right out flat-footed and says the object of all these schemes of betterment is to turn girls away from home, if not from marriage, but in the end that is what they all amount to. It is useless to talk of studying a profession or learning a trade merely as a stand-by in case of emergency, because all occupations change so that any one who has stepped aside for a few years will find, on re-entering office or shop, that except the elementary rudiments, it is all to be learned again. Long ago little girls were set at sewing as soon as their tiny fingers could hold a needle, because as long as a woman could thread a needle it was argued that she could hold the wolf at bay. Behold, the sewing machine, and not only was the steel hand implement superseded, but for a long time hand-sewing was too unfashionable for any one to want it. Even such work as button-holes, hemstitching and eyeletting soon went to machine hands. Just a year or two ago women took up the fad of Battenberg embroidery which sold for a good price, and eyesight was wasted over fancy stitches. Today there is a sewing machine attachment which will do as much work in a few hours as an expert hand could accomplish in weeks. It is not a decade ago since typesetting was one of the best paid handicrafts and hosts of men and hordes of women made big wages. Now the linotype has superseded them all. A carpenter once planed his own mouldings, made door and window sashes and stairs. Today the mill hand watches a machine which turns out all the fine work and the carpenter puts together the pieces brought to him. The shoe-making craft is divided and subdivided until the worker at one branch of the trade knows no more of any other part of it than a coal miner does of diamond setting. A teacher who retired from the profession fifteen or twenty years ago after an experience of five years would not be able to pass an examination for a certificate today without a course of special study. It is the same with millinery, dressmaking, and everything else. Nothing can be learned and laid aside till wanted. No woman can carry on two occupations at the same time. Housekeeping is an exacting service which leaves neither time nor much thought for outside affairs, especially if these are children. Unfortunately, when it is attempted it is always the house that is neglected in order that the other affair may flourish. The best that any woman can count on, if she does her duty by her home, is that her knowledge of other things will come in useful there, and while it is always safe to have plans laid for any emergency, it is wise to have them sufficiently elastic to bear substantial modification when the time comes to put them into execution. There is many a girl who has had five or six thousand dollars spent on giving her a college education and the chance of a career, who cannot command a salary of ten dollars a week. The money expended on schooling might better have been put at interest for her benefit, if indeed it is not too often the case that it represents the self-sacrifice and deprivation of her parents—all for nothing.

The Elizabethan Drama

BY THEODORE BONNET.

The immortal bard is in no danger of languishing while Mr. Don. C. Hall, "the eminent Western author and actor," is able to scoff at the wigmaker and scorn the sordid corporation that supplies Mrs. Frank Carolan nee Pullman with her plethoric income. To confess that you are unacquainted with Mr. Don C. Hall is not exactly tantamount to arguing yourself unknown, and yet he is a man of rare distinction in his own broad field of endeavor. You probably never heard of Ben Greet until he came to America to revive interest in the Elizabethan drama and give the cultured pedants a treat, but the British exponent of primitive histrionics had long enjoyed a narrow measure of fame in the provinces of the tight little isle. Mr. Don C. Hall is in my opinion the American Ben Greet. Unlike his British counterpart his modesty is so overwhelming that he has never undertaken to defy the critics of our large cities. He has never even ventured to enlighten the sages of our universities. Content is he, in his shrinking violet fashion, to minister to the thirst for culture that exists far from the madding and irreverent crowd. Not even among the sophisticated of our pretentious cities of the second class does Mr. Don C. Hall seek to stimulate interest in the classic drama as played in the Golden Age of English literature. His academic activities are not exerted for the enlightenment and recreation of the theatre-goers on the rural circuit who are gorged with theatrical pap generously vouchsafed by provincial road companies. No such congested centres of population as Petaluma and Garvanza ever enjoy the effulgence of the lamp of knowledge lighted by the American Ben Greet. His exclusive sympathies are for the benighted of the more remote and melancholy hamlets in the mountain fastnesses; for the uncritical and keenly appreciative lovers of art, those truly ruralites whose principal diversion is train-greeting, who have been sated with nothing but nature, with whose sublime grandeur they have been in such incessant touch that to them her glories have become commonplace. A delicious tonic for them is the art of a Don C. Hall.

Among the hamlets on the circuit of this modest Shakespearean scholar is Sisson, high up among the denuded Sierras nestling at the base of lofty, rugged Shasta.

It was there that I made the acquaintance of this distinguished itinerant star, and now be it for me the pleasure of lifting him from the obscurity of the modestly chosen scenes of his activity.

It was on Wednesday of last week that I picked up on the street of Sisson, a dodger, bearing the announcement that "the literary event of the season" was to take place that evening at the Opera House; that "the eminent Western author and actor, Mr. Don C. Hall, supported by the talented emotional actress, Mrs. Don C. Hall, and a capable company, would present Shakespeare's Immortal Tragedy, Richard III., a play never to be forgotten." It was not the dodger that whetted my curiosity so much as Mr. Don C. Hall in his own propria persona. I saw an enraptured yokel point him out on the street. There was an expression of worshipful admiration on the yokel's face. Richard Mansfield was never beamed upon more ecstatically than was Mr. Don C. Hall by that citizen of Sisson. And the actor is something worth while from a pictorial standpoint. His personality is that of a man endowed by nature for the role of Stormington Barnes of the Elizabethan period. Without the aid of make-up he looks the part. His hair is his most striking feature, and is distinctly Shakespearean, falling profusely over his coat collar. It is decidedly classic hair despite its suggestion of the hall-mark of the patent medicine peddler.

After feasting my eyes on Mr. Don C. Hall I made inquiries concerning the distinguished visitor to Sisson, and learned that he had been there before, and had established himself as a favorite. I also learned that he had made a profound impression on the Sissonites by arriving in his own private car, the "Don C. Hall." Such sumptuousness bepeaking as it does commercial as well as artistic success is indeed impressive. Whoever heard of Ben Greet, the famous British exponent of the sceneless drama, sporting a private car? Was there ever another provincial road company so securely safeguarded against the traditional vicissitudes of the itinerant mummer? Mr. Hall commanded my admiration on the spot. That private car gave me assurance of his genius. And yet I had no idea of his being in Ben Greet's class. However I resolved to attend the performance of the "never-to-be-forgotten" play. And be it truthfully said I went not in the spirit of the scoffer, but rather in the full-blown enthusiasm of a genius-lover.

I found that the Opera House of Sisson is otherwise known as Odd Fellows' Hall, and that it has about one-sixth the seating capacity of Fischer's. The box-office man spurned my quarter-eagle, muttered something about my having too much money, and demanded thirty-five cents "in silver." He was as haughty as the most autocratic box-office man in San Francisco. I humbly apologized for the gold, and took a seat among the elect. The hall was not crowded, a circumstance due, as I subsequently learned, to the stormy character of the night. The first rain of the season was deluging the base of Shasta, and lightning played on the snow-capped summit to the resonant rumbling of heaven's artillery. It was an auspicious night for the dark deeds enacted in the Tower of London by the Gloucester of the private car. Upon my arrival the curtain of alternate red and blue stripes was pulled up, revealing the stage far more barren of scenery than any on which Ben Greet ever showed how they did in Shakespeare's time. There were two exits on each side, and a back-drop consisting of a white sheet, unpainted but somewhat stained. True to Elizabethan tradition, footlights were scorned and the names of the people in the company were omitted from the program. As for the play it was also true to Elizabethan tradition in all save those features that conflicted with the exigencies of the situation as presented to the fertile genius of Mr. Don C. Hall. And, by the way, these exigencies were apparently quite numerous. The salient one arose from the fact that the "capable company" was a bit shy of players. By actual count there were six people in the troupe, and one of them was the orchestra, a young woman who played a melodeon almost as well as Mr. Hall played Richard. As the cast of Richard III. includes some thirty-odd characters, not to mention supernumeraries, the American Elizabethan company was compelled to struggle under a most discouraging handicap. Nevertheless it did not struggle in vain. Everybody save Mr. Hall and his little daughter, who appeared in the role of Clarence's son, trebled up. And notwithstanding the exceptional industry of the troupe it could not achieve the superhuman feat of impersonating the entire cast. It had therefore been imperative for Mr. Hall to suit the play to the personnel of his company. In other words, he adapted the play for mountain climbing, and I presume that his claims to authorship rest upon this achievement, for his version is sufficiently liberal to be entitled to the distinction of originality. And whatever deviation from art there is in his work as an author may be ascribed to a laudable desire to produce a more direct if not nobler effect. It could not properly be termed the gusto grande, but it is a version that demonstrates that more than one-half the characters in the play as written by the immortal bard are superfluous, and that the story of Gloucester's accession to the throne of England and of his brief reign may be told in far fewer scenes than were employed by William of Avon. Indeed in the practice of a most rigid economy dictated, no doubt, by circumstances over which Mr. Hall had no control, the great tragedy was pruned almost to the scantiness of a vaudeville sketch. Augustin Daly, in the heyday of his career, never dared take such liberties with Shakespeare as did Mr. Don C. Hall.

As for the performance it had all the tang of the Elizabethan production. The players had evidently been drilled in elocution by Mr. Hall himself, and they emulated him in everything but the nonchalance that proclaimed him a veteran star. His art may be graphically described as a realistic reproduction of Henry E. Dixey's imitation of the most pronounced mannerisms of Sir Henry Irving. He strutted and mouthed and gasped, and once or twice threatened to choke. I enjoyed his Richard almost as much as I did Ben Greet's Malvolio, and I quite approved of his death, though he was an unusually long time about it, and spoiled the effect by upsetting one of the properties in his writhings. However, if he had not spoiled it the unsympathetic audience would have attended to the matter. The audience was rampant throughout the performance, but good-naturedly so. In a more lawless town a real tragedy might have been enacted, but the people of Sisson have a saving sense of humor. They behaved in a way that reminded me of the Chutes on amateur night. Mr. Hall evidently interpreted their behaviour as warm approval, for he came before the curtain after the third act in all the trappings of his role, and made a speech that seemed like a plagiarism of one of Fred Warde's post-curtain gems. He thanked the audience for their appreciation, regretted the storm, hoped the people would enjoy the prosperity they deserved, and promised to return if he found it "convenient" after his coming tour of the Atlantic States. Between all the other acts a youth regaled the audience with "Johnny, My Old Friend John," and other comic songs, which the people enjoyed as much as they did the "never-to-be-forgotten play." I discovered that he was not an excess player, for when the Lord Mayor of London came on I penetrated the disguise. The make-up was that of the aged dignitary, but the voice was the voice of the comic singer.

At the conclusion of the performance, which surely did not net more than twelve-fifty, I concluded that the private car was a prairie schooner. I was skeptical of the implied prosperity of Mr. Hall, and I tracked Richmond and the Lord Mayor of London from the theatre to the siding. It was easy to follow them for they carried the melodeon between them. On the way I engaged the young actors in conversation, and they explained to me that Mr. Hall wears his hair long because it is suitable to the characters he impersonates, and he detests wigs. I found that the private car was a converted baggage car, and that it was private not to Mr. Hall alone, but to his whole company, his emotional wife, and all the paraphernalia suitable for his Elizabethan productions.

The World's Rejected Guests

BY HARRY COWELL.

Weary wind, who wanderest
Like the world's rejected guest,
Hast thou still some secret nest
On the tree or billow?—Shelley.

From the day, dark and distant, of the primordial speck, our progenitor, even down to our half-lighted day where things, no matter how near, still show themselves as in obscuring dusk, all along the line of our descent, innumerable adjustments of internal relations to external relations—to make use of a pet phrase of Herbert Spencer's—have been made. Of necessity, every one of our forebears must have fitted himself to the world of things as he found them with success sufficient to enable him to arrive at the age of maturity. Of the many called out of nothingness into mundane existence, few are chosen to survive, and they, of course, the best adapted. No wonder that at first sight the earth seems made expressly for the survivors of the endless unimaginable struggle; no wonder that the doctrine of pre-established harmony dies hard; no wonder—and yet; and yet, what is it that makes Shelley's sad fragment so effective? It is nothing less than the fact that all men in whose clay is even the least admixture of the fabled fire have not infrequently felt themselves the world's rejected guests. Hither we have all of us emigrated—whence we know not; we are foreigners every one; those around us speak a strange discomfiting tongue, and we despair of making ourselves understood. With the poet, we watch the stars in their "fiery flight" through pathless space, and the wandering moon "pale pilgrim of heaven's homeless way," and wonder—mindful of our own estate—where they will find them a rest.

There comes over each of us in his season a nostalgia for a dimly remembered native land, a "land of heart's desire," lying somewhere beyond mysterious waters. Ever and anon, the boatman beckons us and we make us all but ready to embark. In the land of our love we build us houses of hope, or, rather, rebuild us houses of memory. We are not natives here; we are but naturalized. How loudly soever we sing earth's praises, we hear in the heart the while a still small voice protesting, proclaiming us traitors to our true country. The pessimism of many a man is at bottom but surpassing patriotism for his own enchanting Nowhere. To homesick eyes the bluest heaven looks grey. We are, as it were, so many waifs and strays from so many planets, or almost so many. What is friend or lover found at last after long years of wandering, but man or woman come hither by happy chance from our peculiar star speaking the half-forgotten but ever familiar speech, and not the intolerable "bar-bar" of the misunderstanding multitude? Friend or lover found; better still, found at last friend and lover in one, and there is pleasant surcease of the loneliness and the longing; and the sweet sense of being at home arises like a rare perfume in the soul. Stranger than ever seem the surrounding strangers; but then, the joy of companionship is thereby intensified; and there is with whom to wonder at the foreigners' monstrous manners, with whom to smile at their quaint customs. Have you never felt lovers regarding you as though you had just come, in native costume, from Timbuctoo or God knows where, it apparently requiring all the politeness at their command to keep them from laughing outright in your face? Do they not habitually talk a language without the least possible meaning to you? Do they not see in each other excellencies indiscernible by your alien eye? The very sight of them, does it not make you smile in your turn and at the same time exacerbate your own private nostalgia?

What in the name of common sense, in the light of Evolution, is the meaning of this, man's discontent, his lack of adaptability, after elapse of selective ages, to his habitat? One would think that by this time the chief survivor of the struggle for existence would find himself here perfectly at home, exquisitely adjusted to his surroundings; but still he bears himself as a foreigner, a wanderer, a rejected guest. Our lips are in the habit of commending as "very sane" the man who seems in every way made for the world as it is, but our hearts condemn and condemn him as "very stupid," "insensible," "unimaginative," and many other opprobriums more or less apposite. We are proud of our misery and will have none of his cow-like contentment. He, too, the earth-born, earth-bred, earth-bound, you may find, has an odd day, a twenty-ninth of February, whereon he makes his little pilgrimage to some hidden shrine in the land of heart's desire, dreams strange dreams, and is nobly discontent.

What, I often wonder, gives us this curious fastidiousness that sets us pacing up and down a world quite unworthy of us; is it a foretaste of better things to come or an aftertaste of better things gone by? Does the mother of the Muses whisper in our soul's ear a word of a world before birth? or one within us speaking for the gods a word of a world after death? Has Science, empress of the immediate passing moment, her pat explanation which the head accepts with humility and the heart rejects with scorn? If she has, I am in blissful ignorance thereof. One thing certain: Our inability to domesticate ourselves in this our place of residence comes not of centuries of singing, "I'm but a stranger here; heaven is my home." The feeling in question may have given birth to the belief in another and better world; the belief in another and better world did not give birth to it. "Here I know myself for an alien," is the almost universal cry of the contemplative sons of men; and many add (the logic is none of mine): "Therefore, there was for me another world or else there will be, or both." We obey the laws of matter not, as might be expected, with unconscious grace, but with the unwillingness of those who have once known greater freedom. We chafe at fetters that have bound us from time immemorial. Princes in captivity are we; philosophers in a court of barbarians, to borrow an idea from a rich man of letters whose name I have for the moment forgotten.

Strange that man, if he really be born to sorrow as the sparks fly upward, should feel himself at home only in the happiness unspeakable that comes of finding a compatriot in a foreign land—a compatriot for friend or lover or both in one, as I have said! Resignation itself in its secret heart admires the man who suffers sorrow as a god used to gladness, whose right gladness is. No man so fortunate but believes himself born to better things. Humility shares the belief with the proudest. The vilest sinner who gains heaven will take it as his meed. Of course he will thank Providence, but, if I know him, it will be for politeness' sake pure and simple. Where sorrow is, we are strangers; Happiness is our home.

Missionary Land Grabbers

BY EDWIN H. CLUFF.

And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house.

And Naboth said to Ahab, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.—I KINGS XXI: 2, 3.

The site of Kuling, the missionary sanitorium of Central China, was acquired in a manner peculiar to missionary methods. There is a law in many of the provinces prohibiting the sale of land to foreigners without consent of the provincial authorities. This ordinance acts in much the same manner as our regulations concerning the filing of deeds. When it was proposed by E. S. Little of Shanghai to provide a summer resort for the missionaries of Central China he had already secured an option on the Kuling property at a ridiculously low figure. Originally the tract thus controlled by Little was much larger than that on which the settlement was finally established. When it came to the knowledge of the taotai of the district that a foreigner was grabbing this choice land that official protested and the matter was referred to the higher authorities and thence to the consuls. Little tried to bully the transaction through the various Chinese yamens on the usual plan of threatening the officials with the consul and the consul's gunboat; but in this instance the native officials were firm and the consuls happened to be honest. The result was a compromise by which only enough land was sold, at a fair price, to accommodate about five hundred lot purchasers.

Perhaps the only lesson to be learned from this missionary deal in land is contained in the circumstance that even a missionary cannot always get everything he covets from the poor heathen. The fact that the missionaries in this instance did not absorb a vast territory by threats of consular jurisdiction in China is anomalous. Usually the demands of the missionaries are complied with by the magistrates almost without question. These magistrates fear the missionaries even more than they hate them, and the missionaries take every advantage of this mental attitude of the Chinese authorities. Much of the land now owned by the missionaries of China or by the missionary societies was virtually confiscated under compulsion by the missionaries. A missionary decides that a certain site will answer admirably for his mission houses—his chapel or church, his schools, and his comfortable mansion constructed of the "few remaining bricks." Having settled on what he wants he goes to the magistrate of the city or village and tells him what he will pay for the property. Sometimes there is haggling over the amount; the magistrate's "squeeze" must come out of the purchase price, and the missionary's "squeeze" must also be considered. In few instances is the profit of the landholder, who is usually a poor coolie, regarded by either party to the transaction. When the bargain is concluded between the magistrate and the missionary there's an end on 't. The owner of the land must take whatever may be offered and he has no redress. He must vacate.

The magistrate is actuated by two motives in thus yielding to the demand of the missionary. It goes without saying that he is as mercenary as the missionary, and consequently the bribe offered by the missionary tempts him. An additional incentive is his fear of trouble. He knows that the consul and the gunboat are behind the missionary, and he has personal or hearsay knowledge of the fact that when a missionary is thwarted in his demands reprisal and retribution frequently follow close on the heels of a refusal to accede to the wishes of these representatives of foreign religions. To escape trouble the small mandarins pay tribute to the big mandarins and these in turn, to procure similar immunity, yield a portion of their "squeeze" to the Viceroy. The Viceroy, of course, are under obligations to the powerful courtiers at Peking and must answer on every demand on penalty of an adverse memorial by the censors, and the certainty that if they do not respond promptly thereafter they will lose their jobs. Even the highest nobility must in their turn divide some of the spoil with Li, the chief eunuch of the Palace, and from this unclean receptacle a moiety passes to the Empress Dowager.

In the case of the missionary who deals with a magistrate, the latter avoids the trouble that the evicted coolie might cause him by passing some of the missionary money on to the next higher official who sends it forward, in a sort of endless chain movement, until it reaches the source of this corruption at Peking. Now the little Sunday-school scholars of America know what becomes of a few of the nickels they so generously and piously pour into the foreign missionary funds of their churches—they go to make fat one of the most despicable wretches in the world, the chief eunuch Li, who is accounted one of the richest men in the great empire of China; they go to pay for the unthinkable debaucheries of the most licentious court on the planet; and finally, they drop into the coffer of the miserly Empress Dowager, whose crimes have been likened to the crimes of Catharine of Russia, the crimes of the Borgias, and the crimes of Messalina.

To avoid trouble with his superiors and to avoid trouble with the foreign powers, therefore, the Chinese magistrate seldom refuses the demands of the missionaries, however grievous may be the trouble inflicted on the victim of missionary greed and rapacity. The peasant producer of all this "squeeze" is of no value whatever individually—in the mass he is of great value and in any condition he is still compelled to pay for the privilege of struggling for his existence.

Is it strange, therefore, that this peasantry are continually incensed against the missionaries? On the other hand, are these poor wretches not worthy of admiration for their forbearance and their restraint? Imagine a similar condition existent in this country! It is safe to say that the newspapers would record a revolution and rebellion every day in every State of the Union. And it is beyond every question that the harpies would be swept out of the land by the rage of the people.

When the conditions in China are fully understood, and when the malign influence of the foreign missionary element is appreciated, it is impossible for the impartial observer to wholly condemn the effort of the secret societies to rid their country of these self-seeking intruders. Perhaps, after all, these are patriots in China as there are in more civilized nations.

The Saunterer

A Chaotic Situation

This week witnesses the close of the Republican County conventions, and soon the legislative campaign will be in full blast with interest centred in the contest for the United States Senatorship. It promises to be a very lively contest. At present the situation is in a most chaotic condition; more so perhaps than ever before in the history of the State. It is the field against Bard (though the latter is far from being a favorite), and every man against him is to the organization true and faithful. The machine operators have only one purpose to achieve, and that is the defeat of the Hueneme statesman, but as to the field it is a case of "Let the best man win and the devil take the hindmost." The machine operators are confident that they have the situation well in hand and are not worrying over the result. They are letting Oxnard, Knight and Flint do all the worrying, but meanwhile the hold-over Senators and those legislative candidates who were not pledged in convention or compelled by circumstances to assert their choice are very much perplexed. They would like to "tie up," but are constrained to await orders. All are foot-loose and fancy free save Senators Ralston and Leavitt, who inaugurated the Knight campaign by laying their hold-over votes at the feet of the magnetic lawyer. Nobody is engaged in the customary task of touring the State and tying up votes. Bard says he does not believe in that kind of politics; Oxnard is satisfied with what has already been done; Knight says he does not want votes tied up and Flint says he has no faith in Senatorial managers.

Grant on the Anxious Seat

It would not be surprising if Ulysses Grant took advantage of this condition of affairs. It is known that during the past two or three weeks he has been casting sheep's-eyes at the toga, though he has declared he will not seek it save in the role of organization candidate. He has not forgotten the snares and pitfalls into which he was led during his bitter experience of six years ago, an experience that made him wise to the advantages of questing the elusive toga along the organization's primrose highway. He will soon learn whether the "feclers" thrown out in the direction of the organization's Holy of Holies fell on stony ground or are likely to bear fruit. So the other anxious candidates will not have long to speculate as to whether Grant is to enter the lists. Some months ago it was rumored that his finances were in such condition that he would not be likely to hazard another campaign, but the fact is he was never better equipped for rainbow chasing. He is much wealthier than when he first appeared on the legislative scene. His big investments in San Diego were supplemented four years ago by successful mining operations in Mexico, and though he is not a millionaire his fortune is very close to the seven-figure mark.

Wealth of the Candidates

Of the four active candidates Oxnard is probably the richest and Flint unquestionably the least prosperous. There was a story going the rounds some time ago that Oxnard was worth a paltry four hundred thousand, but every man in touch with affairs in the financial world knows that such an estimate is ridiculous. His personal interests dominate the American Beet Sugar Company, which represents about twelve million dollars' capital, and he has a private fortune consisting of lands, stock-farms, race horses and ranches worth not less than a million. Bard's fortune is estimated at over a million. Two years ago he was lamenting that he had eight hundred thousand dollars idle in various banks, since which he has made some business turns by which he added greatly to his fortune. He owns a one hundred thousand dollar interest in the Potter hotel, and he is the sole owner of a business block up town in Santa Barbara. Besides he has large interests in Ventura county. In round figures he is worth close to two millions. George Knight is reputed to have five hundred thousand on the right side of his ledger, the most of which came out of the Fair estate, and he has now a large and lucrative practice which keeps his able partner, Charley Heggerty, busy, for Knight has begun to take things easy. Frank Flint had nothing but his salary when he was United States Attorney in Los Angeles, eight years ago, but since he took to private practice and became attorney for the Southern Pacific Company he has managed to hoard up about one hundred and fifty thousand.

After Chairmanship Honors

There is more than the Senatorial contest to engage the attention of the prospective legislators. With Tom Flint out of the Senate there is likely to be an interesting struggle over the gavel of the President pro tem. Senators Leavitt and Pendleton are active aspirants for the chairmanship honor with the chances strongly in favor of the man from the South. However, he may be put out of the running later on by complications growing out of the Senatorial contest. Should Pendleton retire from the field others will promptly step in. Prominent among the possible entries is Senator Selvage of Humboldt. Just now Assemblyman Phil Walsh seems more likely to carry off the coveted Speakership honor. Drew of Fresno is also a candidate, but as he represents the Bard wing of the party his chances of success are very remote. Brown of San Mateo was regarded as a possibility, but evidently he cannot land the nomination in his home county, while McLaughlin of Sutter, who was favored by the organization, was beaten in convention a few days ago by the Cutter faction. Stanton of Los Angeles is still hoping he will land the prize, though he is seriously handicapped by the ambition of numerous candidates in his own county; Flint for United States Senator, Pendleton for President pro tem of the Senate and Stanton for Speaker are a little too much even for Los Angeles.

She—Why, no, but he is a traveling man.

General Corbin's Startling Manifesto

General and Mrs. Corbin are momentarily expected in San Francisco. They will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kohl and it is safe to predict that the General will fidget away much of his time dodging questions on the manifesto he has just issued against officers with inadequate pay committing matrimony. San Francisco is especially interested in this subject, as this has been a great season for "barrack-room brides." An unusual number of girls have married into the army, but in almost every case the young couple do not depend on Uncle Sam to finance them to happiness. With a private purse, no matter whether husband or wife pulls the strings, life in the army slips along on ball bearings. Without it the machinery is almost sure to slip a cog. The same petty rivalry that jolts life in town exists in army circles. Indeed, there are those who claim that strife and bickering and gossip stalk a military fort more cocksure than elsewhere. Witness Blanche Bates's experience at the Presidio. When she left the stage of a local theatre, where she had won provincial fame, for the home of a lieutenant, the "army ladies" acted more like kitchen maids than military dames. They courted occasion to snub the bride, but they soon found that Mrs. Davis knew how to season and serve her remarks red hot so they abandoned verbal persiflage for that sort of silent persecution the secret of which Eve must have handed down to her descendants, so well schooled are the fair sex in it. Had Lieutenant Davis been a man of independent means his brother officers' wives would have truckled tamely enough to the actress bride. But he had only his officer's salary to smooth out the creases in her way. There is no doubt that Blanche Bates, by force of her compelling personality, could have brought them to terms, but she decided the game wasn't worth the candle and went back to the stage.

Gold Lace Pursues Gold Bags

When a wealthy girl marries into the military there is great rejoicing among the socially inclined. Edith McBean's marriage with Dr. Kierstedt was a joyous occasion for the ladies of his regiment. The rumor that she was going to urge him to resign from the army caused consternation among the ladies looking forward to Mrs. Kierstedt as a hostess who could afford to dine and wine them without counting the cost. Dr. Kierstedt still wears the shoulder straps and his wife evidently gets as much pleasure out of army functions as she did out of the Burlingame festivities to which she was accustomed. On the other hand the army ladies hate to have a gilded youth marry out of the fold. Lieutenant Crimmins's marriage with Miss Cole blighted the hopes of innumerable army matchmakers with daughters or sisters ripe for the altar. Pere Crimmins is a "million dollar and over" New Yorker, so his son was a "catch" not lightly to be lost. Of course the ladies of his regiment behaved their prettiest when he chose Miss Cole instead of an army girl, but they were deeply chagrined just the same.

Surprises in Army Marriages

As a rule very ambitious young women do not marry into the army. Mamie McNutt's marriage with Lieutenant Ashton Potter was a nine days' wonder for she was a girl who was supposed to crave power and position and all that sort of thing. However young Potter had the "pull" of his family behind him and their lot has been unusually pleasant. Lieutenant Scott, who carried off Leila Voorhies, is another fortunate young officer whose promotions go by leaps and bounds. Already he is a captain and is stationed in Baltimore as recruiting officer. Lieutenant Carrigan, who recently married Miss Sperry, Mrs. Will Crocker's niece, is another young officer who could in no wise come under General Corbin's ban, for his means and chances of promotion are both far above par. Captain Percy Kessler, who married Lottie Cunningham in his lieutenant days, is another army officer who has no fear of the wolf's ever knocking at his door. Gertrude Eels need have no fear of poverty when she marries "Jack" Babcock in October. And I hear that the Eels' are even better pleased with this second union with General Babcock's family than with the first, for "Jack" is a greater favorite than Conrad.

The Tardy Dailies

Far be it from me to disparage the news service of my illustrious daily contemporaries, or to vie with them in stentoriously celebrating personal achievements, but merely by way of amiable suggestion for the curtailment of the great expense of stupendous enterprise I ask, why pay telegraph tolls when the news may be had by borrowing, politely and courteously, from the columns of Town Talk?

Two weeks ago I told of Admiral Goodrich's complaint to Washington about the shabby treatment accorded the officers of the navy by a committee of the Knights Templar. Instead of taking my tip the dailies waited for the Associated Press to act thereon and a week later they paid for several hundred words of the same story, elaborated and wired from Washington, D. C. They followed the same course in reference to the rumor of the Hotaling-Bates engagement published exclusively in this paper three weeks ago. In wiring the story out from St. Louis the Associated Press, which undoubtedly acted on my tip, represented that rumors of the engagement had appeared in "the San Francisco papers," an inaccuracy typical of the Ass. Press. Town Talk was the only paper in which such rumor had appeared. Similar evidence of wasteful expenditure was furnished by the publication of the despatch from New York about the mutual disappointment of Captain Glen Collins and his wife arising over the discovery that neither was wealthy. The story was published exclusively in Town Talk a week before the Ass. Press put it on the wire. Its reporters consumed that much time in verifying it in New York.

Another Tong War Threatened

The recent visit of the Knights Templar, the Odd Fellows and their hosts of accompanying friends promises to breed the liveliest kind of war in Chinatown at an early date between the tongs on one side and the educational Chinese, or Reform Party, on the other. This splenetic outburst arises over the way the Chinese quarter is being thrown open to visitors on such occasions and the manner in which the resultant cash is divided. Every such swarm of Easterners scatter a pile of money in Chinatown, for the place has been so extensively advertised and is so unique to those living beyond the Mississippi that the Eastern visitor does not believe he has thoroughly seen the Golden State unless he has inspected the Chinese quarter and picked up an armful of Oriental bargains. The tongs believe in a "wide open" Chinatown, with ghoulish, foul smelling, ill-lighted opium joints, "dummy" highbinders in gambling dens, "wicket" windows with "pigeon-toed slave girls," smoke-begrimed, murderous-looking recesses, and any other kind of scenic effect that will attract the Easterner and cajole him into giving up his cash to view the "Yellow Peril" at its worst. They believe thoroughly in transforming Chinatown into the Paris of the bay counties and playing for the money and good will of the whole world of curiosity-seekers. The educational Chinese denounce such a program and declare that the worst sides of Chinese life, such as the opium dens and highbinders' strongholds, have been exploited too long to the eyes of curious visitors; that the system of gathering money by such means has given the Chinese a bad name to the civilized world and that it must stop.

End of Chinatown "Guides"

With this end in view they have asked the authorities to put an end to the "guide" business in Chinatown. The Six Companies have been urged to use all their power to prevent strangers visiting the so-called opium dens. The Reform Chinese claim that there are no longer opium dens of consequence in Chinatown; that the places bearing those names are simply theatrical shows rigged up by ingenious guides as places to steer wandering visitors. They freely admit that opium is still smoked there, but they insist that it is smoked only in the private rooms of lodging houses beyond the ken of guides and visitors. To oppose this revolutionary policy the tongs propose, if necessary, to resort to their old ally—force. They will not give up the graft in sight without a fight. And word has gone out that at the first attempt to close up the theatrical opium joints and slave beauty shops the pop of the gun in the regulation tong war for "open shop" and the white devil's money will follow.

"Bob" Bien Goes on The Stage

Robert Taylor Bien, the erstwhile heart-breaker, has gone on the stage. He is playing a small part in a musical comedy and expects to make a dent in the operatic world. He insists that art not necessity is the magnet which has attracted him to the footlights. But those who have been admitted behind the scenes in the Bien household insist that the wolf is growling on their front doormat. According to these birds of ill omen, Peck pere has withdrawn his support on the principle that young Bien is not too strong to work. When Robert Bien married Arline Peck of Chicago it was thought that he would be able to live the life of the dilly-dally-tante, with never a thought of sordid lucre dimming his pleasure. The Peck sack is long and deep, but evidently some one is pulling the strings mighty tight. I hear that Arline sympathizes with her husband's distaste for the weary grind of commercialism and is very much aggrieved at her family for shutting down on them and driving "dear Robert" into the vulgar ranks of wage-earners. Fortunately young Bien has a voice which he has carefully kept on tap against just such a turn in the wheel of fortune, so it is possible that he will be able to sing his way into prosperity without soiling his hands with trade. I understand that the Pecks simply wish him to prove that he is not an aimless loungeur through life, and they will again handsomely contribute to the support of the young couple.

Famed For Her Unique Wedding

Robert Taylor Bien's marriage with Arline Peck some three years ago was a nine days' wonder. At that time the Chicago heiress was supposed to be engaged to a brother of Charles Simms, who married her oldest sister Buda. Buda Peck's wedding is still remembered as the most unique affair ever perpetrated by Hymen. It was not solemnized in a Chicago church, but in the little chapel near the Pecks' country seat in Wisconsin. The bride was carried to the church in a sedan chair, the bearers being six prominent society men of the Windy City. Behind the blushing bride's unusual conveyance came the six bridesmaids, two and two. The procession caused a great sensation among the gaping villagers. It was at this remarkable nuptial ceremony that the bridegroom's brother won the promise of Arline Peck. However, California climate and Bob Bien's fascination melted that promise and before the tabbies could purr three the young couple had skipped back to Chicago and were straightway married. Previous to Miss Peck's copyright on his cardiac affections he was supposed to have issued the patent to Mae Perkins, the Senator's capricious daughter. Mabel Hopkins, now Mrs. Charley Quinn, was a predecessor of Miss Perkins. While young Bien was studying music in Paris the fascinating Mabel was pedestaled in his heart, but on the ocean voyage home her image toppled over.

Her Eye on the Bank Account

A society chronicler informs her interested readers that Mr. and Mrs. "Jack" Spreckels Jr. have taken a house near the residence which Papa Spreckels is building them. She infers that they have chosen their temporary abode so as to keep one eye on the construction of their new home. They may have had one eye trained on this object but t'other was on their bank account, mark Mrs. "Jack" Spreckels's own words!

The house into which the young Spreckels's have deposited their bag and baggage for the winter is owned by John D. Spreckels. It was formerly occupied by a Southern family not in the smart set. They lived there for years, paid their rent promptly and were among the sugar prince's most desirable tenants. The house is old-fashioned but roomy and attractive. One day the astonished family received notice to leave as Mr. Spreckels desired the house for a member of his own family. Following on the heels of this surprising notice came dainty, laughing Mrs. "Jack" Spreckels herself, who emphasized the notice by telling them that she was going to move in until her own nearby home was finished. "But surely you can find something that will suit you just as well for this winter," suggested her tenant hostess, "we are so attached to the place." "Of course there are lots of houses that would do just as well," acknowledged Mrs. Spreckels, vivaciously, "but you see"—and here she borrowed a knowing, saucy little wink from her own imitation of Anna Held—"Jack's Dad owns this house and we won't have to pay any rent!" Which argument the shade of Blackstone himself could not combat, and forthwith the family moved out and the "Jack" Spreckels's trundled in their possessions. And now, when the first of the month comes around, they are serenely unconscious of the fact that such dragons as lan'lords still infest the civilized world.

"Jack" Spreckels in Training

By all the signs and symbols of Prince Fortunatas the "Jack" Spreckels's ought not to have to consider such vulgar necessity as house-rent and commonplace trifles of that sort. But as a matter of fact "Jack" Spreckels is working on a salary for his stern parent, who believes that such training will train him into a proper appreciation of the right value of money. Of course it's a larger salary than Tom, Dick or Harry would get for the same work, but it doesn't keep the young couple working overtime trying to devise ways to spend it. Papa Spreckels is doing the handsome thing by them in the way of building them a fine home, but meantime clever little Mrs. "Jack" cast about for a proper way of saving rent and she hit upon the plan of moving into one of "Dad's own houses," and captured it though the former tenants wept a leak in the house at having to move out.

Will Go Abroad Together

The Robinson Reillys and the Ashton Potters are planning to go abroad together. They are great friends and in Santa Barbara the Reilly and Potter cottages were regarded as being annexed. The Reillys lived very quietly while in the South, saving up their income for the contemplated European trip. They are at present visiting Mrs. Reilly's sister, Mrs. Charles K. McIntosh, in town, while the Potters are guests of the McNutts. Ashton Potter is in poor health, but as soon as he becomes stronger the trip abroad will be taken.

Kindly Hands About Henry Veuve

Rarely when a man is ill does he find such kind friends as daily rally about Harry Veuve. This once best-known man about town is no longer able to enjoy life as he used, partial paralysis having attacked his body, though leaving his brain as clear as ever. One of his most loyal friends is Tom Williams. When Veuve expressed a desire to see the recent Knights Templar parade Williams promised to arrange it for him. So on the day, the Williams auto chuf-chuffed up to the home of Harry Veuve, and half a dozen strong men carried the invalid to the vehicle. He sat in the motor car and saw the parade, enjoying it thoroughly and suffering no ill effects from the unusual exertion.

A fig for these newspaper separations! In the face of all the reports that Maxine Elliott and her husband Nat Goodwin had separated, she rushed into his outstretched arms, yesterday in New York, on the landing of the steamer from abroad.

The Tobins Connected with the Drama

While James Brown Potter is speeding on his honeymoon with his second wife, Miss Handy of New York that was, the first Mrs. Potter is rehearsing the final scenes of a new play by Mrs. Raoul-Duval, a sister-in-law of Beatrice Tobin Raoul-Duval. It is to be given this season at the Savoy, London. The play will be used as the vehicle for a singular experiment, an exhibition of emotional gowns expressing ideas in colors and curves. The actress's striking personality is to be denoted by a series of costumes in "The Golden Light," and the heroine's moral progress toward perfection is to be indicated in colors. In a way it will portray the ideas of the "aura" cult which has become such a fad in Newport the past winter. A recent this second marriage of James Brown Potter, one of his old friends tells me that he always hoped his wife would return to him, after she wearied of exploiting her charms and talents in public. The daughter, who was a tiny tot when her mother went upon the stage, was taught to love and respect that mother who had left her. The child greatly admired her mamma, and Mr. Potter never permitted any one to disturb "Fifi's" faith. He made it a condition with his relatives that they should never comment, on or criticise any act of Mrs. Potter's. He made no objection to the latter's seeing her daughter whenever she desired to do so.

A Pathetic Curtain Raiser

A story has been told that when Anna, or "Fifi," was about fourteen, and Mrs. Potter was appearing in a New York theatre, Mr. Potter wrote his wife a note and asked her if she would not like to see her daughter. Mrs. Potter replied formally, appointing an hour when she would be disengaged and Miss Potter might call. The girl went, with all sorts of romantic ideas of her lovely mother, and was received as if she had been a stage aspirant. She was seated on a couch set cornerwise, and was given a big bunch of roses and a large photograph of her mother in one of her stage characters. In the course of a quarter-hour Mrs. Potter was called for a consultation with her modiste. When she returned Miss Potter was gone. Several days later when the maid moved the couch she found on the floor a withered bunch of roses and a crumpled photograph.

David Hill's Great Hit

"I see the cartoonists are again ringing in on David B. Hill that old feather bearing the legend 'I am a Democrat,'" said an old politician in the Palace hotel, recently. "How a tag like that will stick to a public man through all his ups and downs. I was present at the time Hill was stenciled with that everlasting mark. It happened during the inauguration of a Democratic campaign in Brooklyn many years ago. Hill was the head of Tammany at the time and he and a lot of other big men in the district were discussing the forthcoming opening and cudgeling their brains for some bright idea to make a hit with the voters. As usual Hill had been hard at work all day and was worn out, but he doggedly paced the floor struggling for the right idea to meet the emergency. In the midst of the general perplexity Charles Fulton, who did newspaper specials for the campaign managers, joined the gathering. Charlie had been drinking and his wits were doing hurdles over sharps and flats; in prime condition to venture a suggestion on any proposition, no matter how big. For awhile he listened to the others. Suddenly he broke out: 'I'll tell you what, Dave. You go right down to the meeting in Brooklyn, step out on the platform, raise your right hand like imperial Jove, give them the steady stare for the proper time and then thunder at them, 'I am a Democrat.' It'll drive 'em crazy if you hit 'em right.' Hill stopped short in his pacing, rubbed his bald pate, and said: 'Charlie, you've saved me. I'll do it.'

Trial of The Suggestion

"When Hill stepped out on the platform before the immense gathering on that memorable night it was fully five minutes before the cheering which greeted him gave him a chance to be heard. Then followed a minute of impressive and absolute silence as Hill faced his audience prepared to deliver his stroke. Deliberately raising his right hand he said slowly, in a voice of thunder, 'I am a Democrat!' Pandemonium followed. Even Hill hugged himself as he looked down on the mad scene. But I've often wondered what he now thinks of the use the cartoonists have since made of his great hit of that meeting."

Fights Shy of Femines

There's one great pianist who objects to being lionized, and that is Josef Hofmann, the dimple-chinned Teuton who is paying his second visit to California. Hofmann's music has not effeminized him. He is an athlete and a manly chap, and away from his music would much rather skate or automobile, or watch a race or a prize fight, than to frequent pink teas and have women make musical love to him. A feminine admirer once asked Hofmann how he kept his hands so white and soft, and he dodged the question by saying: "If music alone occupied my mind I should go mad." On another occasion when he was playing before a woman's club, he said: "I'm not going to give those dear girls anything too strenuous or soul-stirring. Fortified as they are with chocolate and cake, they might grow bolder—and, after all, I am only a weak man!" The reason why the young Teuton is so delightful is that he is absolutely free from pose. He is simple, natural, and possesses the rare gift of humor that sweetens life.

Time Stood Still for Her

On the occasion of one of Josef Hofmann's New York matinees, a pretty girl with a big bunch of violets approached him between numbers and observed:

"Just think, I was present when you made your debut. You were such a dear little fellow!"

"Were you born then?" asked the pianist, with tactful surprise. "Why, that was thirteen years ago."

When Bertha's Helmet was the Fad

The announcement of Miss Bertha Runkle's engagement with Captain Louis Bash of the U. S. Infantry will probably start another boom sale of "The Helmet of Navarre." Miss Runkle is always unconsciously doing things that add to the sale of her book. Last year when she was being lionized by local and Oakland society, the libraries and book-sellers could scarcely supply the demand for "The Helmet of Navarre." The reason for this exceptional run on the Helmet was explained by a society girl in this way: "You see," she said, "when one is to meet Miss Runkle at a tea or a luncheon, one has to know what her book is about. And that is why we are all reading it." Gelett Burgess ciceroned the young authoress about, and incidentally conducted a quiet little flirtation with her, but like Burgess's affair with Mary MacLane, it was strictly platonic. Ashton Stevens described Miss Runkle's fascinating little giggley-gurgle, and immediately it became a fad among Miss Runkle's feminine admirers to giggley-gurgle, too. She made all sorts of friends here, and when she attended the Mardi Gras ball she might have had three partners for every dance had she so inclined.

The "Littlest Girl"

Later on Miss Runkle went to the Orient in company with Katherine Ball, head drawing teacher of the public schools, and when in Hongkong was the adored of two very diligent suitors, an English nobleman and an American millionaire pickle manufacturer, both of whom she declined in favor of the young army officer. She has been more written of than perhaps any other author of a "best seller," probably because her publishers press-agented her as the "littlest girl" among the writers' fraternity. One story that went the rounds about her was to the effect that her brother was a Harvard student, and Miss Runkle wanted to be a Harvard student, too. The hard-hearted faculty refused to let the ambitious girl enter the college sacred to masculine students, but by studying at home she kept pace with her brother and took the final examinations with credit, before a smaller audience. That Miss Runkle has no brother did not spoil the story for press uses. The author of "The Helmet," by the way, is a niece of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, for so many years editor of St. Nicholas.

He: "I'll keep it a secret from my wife."

She: "That is, you think you will."

Tom Driscoll Netted at Last

Tom Driscoll's engagement with Miss Alice Bacon of Santa Barbara will set at rest all the rumors of the San Francisco tabbies that the doughty polo player was engaged to Miss Eleanor McEwen of this city. At one time the polo player was reported as being devoted to Celia Tobin, now Mrs. Charles Clark. But their affair turned out to be only a warm friendship founded on a similarity of taste in athletics. Young Driscoll formerly lived over the bay, but the family moved to this side, and Tom was always identified with the Blingum set. After his accident on the polo field last year he went South to recuperate, and his long stay in Santa Barbara led his friends to suspect that there was more attraction in that quarter for him than the balmy air. Miss Bacon is said to be a very charming young girl, refined and clever. Driscoll is one of the most popular young men about town. Everybody likes him because, though he has loads of money and social position, there is nothing of the snob in his make-up.

Miss Alice Bacon, whose engagement to "Tommy" Driscoll has been announced, is one of the most attractive girls of the younger navy set, being the daughter of Pay Director Albert W. Bacon, U. S. Navy, who was retired nearly two years ago with the rank of Rear-Admiral. The Bacons have long been prominent in Washington society. Mrs. Bacon was one of the Stoughton girls of the capital city, who were unusually popular belles there for many years. The Stoughtons originally came from one of the smaller Pennsylvania towns, but Stoughton pere made most of his money in the hotel business. Bacon is quite a sportsman, and considered one of the greatest experts with rod and gun in the service. He now makes his home in California, following the example of many other older naval officers. In this connection it may be said that Berkeley is fast developing a naval colony. The university town is becoming more and more attractive to retired naval officers, the latest prominent officers to build permanent homes there being Rear-Admirals Merrill Miller and Henry Glass.

An Odd Fellow's Experience

It is a good idea to figure that there is always one more gold-brick coming and that there is no telling how and where you will get it. Last week a visiting Odd Fellow, while walking up Market street to the Mechanic's Pavilion, was accosted by a beggar who pleaded for "just a nickel." The Odd Fellow reached into his pocket, fished out what he thought was a five-cent piece, passed it to the supplicant and walked on. A few seconds later some one tapped his elbow. He looked around and saw the individual he had just aided. "Excuse me, sir," said the beggar, "I know you didn't intend to give me this." He held in his hand a five dollar gold piece. Thanking the mendicant for his honesty the Odd Fellow said: "You are an honest fellow to return this. Take this silver, and good luck to you," handing him about one dollar and a half in loose change. The visitor was telling his experience a few minutes later to some of his friends and took occasion to philosophize upon the honesty that often dwells beneath a tattered coat. "I guess I'll treat on getting the gold piece back," he concluded, laying it on the bar. The drinks were ordered and the bartender took up the coin. He gave it a hard look, went closer to a light and then handed it back. "You'll have to try another," he said, "this is a dummy."

Inherited Valuable Antiques

Pierre Moore, the grandson of P. B. Cornwall, who died this week, recently came into a small fortune. It was bequeathed him by an aunt who died in the East. Among other things his legacy included a valuable collection of old china, and some jewels in antique settings.

Was a San Francisco Boy

Rev. Father A. P. Doyle, one of the heads of the order of St. Paul in New York, who has been appointed rector of the Apostolic Mission House at the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., was a San Francisco boy. He attended the public schools here and then went to St. Mary's College. He has two sisters in the Order of Mercy. The Rev. Doyle is editor of the Catholic World and The Missionary, is a noted lecturer, a prominent member of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, and was the second honorary member of the California Society of New York.

In Town For The Winter

The Ellicotts and Schwerins will pass the winter at the Richelieu. Mrs. Schwerin is Mr. Ellicott's sister, and the two families are most harmonious. Mrs. Ellicott is a Baltimore beauty of a delicate blonde type. Mr. Ellicott was a naval officer, but he resigned to take a position offered him by his successful brother-in-law. The Schwerins came to California from Maryland, a place near Baltimore, called Schwerin's Mills, named after an ancestor of Mr. Schwerin. They had a house in San Francisco some years ago, but of late years have resided in Burlingame, though they come to town every winter.

Return of The Withrows

The Withrows have been back in town for a fortnight. Marie and Eva did not wish to leave London, where they were so popular and successful, but devotion to their mother induced them to return here. The London climate did not agree with Mrs. Withrow's health, and she pined for San Francisco breezes. The Withrows have taken a house far out in Pine street, many blocks away from their old home in the same street. Eva will build herself a beautiful studio in the rear of the house, modeled upon her own plans. The sisters brought with them from Europe a great deal of beautiful carved furniture and interesting bibelots picked up from all parts of the continent.

In The Art World

The Jules Mersfelders have taken rooms in Montgomery street near Merchant, where they will establish their studio. Both Mr. and Mrs. Mersfelder are artists, and when they lived in Chicago entertained delightfully at their studio. I hear they intend giving a series of literary and artistic at homes at their new studio as soon as they are settled.

William Keith has at last had a picture hung in the Corcoran Art Gallery, in Washington. Many supposed that honor had fallen to the Californian years ago, but the painting supposed to be his by casual gazers turned out to be one by Innes, Keith's old master. Keith is a very devoted disciple of Innes, and I have learned that eleven years ago his pictures were rejected at the World's Fair because of their similarity to those of Innes — a ridiculous discrimination, it would seem.

Seven Society Girls as Judges

Society is eagerly awaiting the depositions of the O'Connor sisters and Hazel and Genevieve King in regard to the grim Dolbeer tragedy. Neither the O'Connors nor the Kings were intimate friends of poor ill-fated Bertha Dolbeer, but friendship that hangs by a single thread in one's own country grows strong under foreign skies. When Bertha Dolbeer met the O'Connors and the Kings at the Hotel Regina in Paris she just remembered that they were all from dear old San Francisco and with never a thought of this set or that set to which at home they individually belonged, the girls coalesced into a single party to enjoy the fascinating delights of gay old "Paree." Did Bertha Dolbeer go her smiling way with this crowd of merrymakers? Or did she lapse into strange humors and inconsistent moods? Did she sparkle and dimple and fleck her conversation with finely cut epigrams, as was her accustomed way? Or was she silent and glum and full of drab forebodings of a horrible fate? In short, was the germ of insanity so near the surface that her friends might catch glimpses of its tragic presence? These are some of the questions which the seven society girls who were with her most in Paris will have to answer, and their verdict will be accepted by the smart set, whatever interpretation the law may put on it. As one of the unfortunate dead girl's best friends said, "Those girls who were with Bertha in Paris certainly would have noticed if a shadow had fallen on her mind and her interest in life clouded. They are unprejudiced and have not the slightest reason for adjusting their viewpoint of the case to meet the exigencies of either side." According to Miss Warren, Miss Dolbeer showed no sign of mental sickness though her physical sufferings were obvious. Before long we shall know whether the girl friends who were last in their company noticed anything mentally amiss with Bertha Dolbeer.

A Promising Sunshine "T"

The fourth annual entertainment of the Alden Club of the International Sunshine Society this Saturday afternoon in the Sorosis Club rooms will draw a large crowd of smart people. The affair this year will take the form of an original tea. Among the attractions will be "Thimble-thoughts," "Tea-table Triumphs," "Things-to-tiny-tots," "The Truth-teller," "Trifles," "Tea-Tales," "Towel-table," "Take-me-quicks," and many other things new and interesting. In charge of the affair are: Jean Pedlar, the president, Jennie H. McFarland, Meta Stofen, Lavinia Geistling, Nettie Sexton, Virginia Dare, Cecile Rogers, Elsie Young, Miss Benjamin, Marie Denervaud and Mabel Ayer. The club is very popular and judging by the number of weddings among the members one would think that Cupid has a penchant for Sunshine girls. The latest engagement is that of Alice May, former vice-president, and William Sexton Jr., brother of one of the charter members. Miss May is one of the prettiest girls in the younger set. She is a brunette of rich coloring.

Miss Laura Farnsworth will leave next week for St. Louis, chaperoned by some friends. Later she will go with them to New York.

Chickens As An Aid To Literature

It seems as though there must be some connection between chicken ranches and literature. The Jerome Case Bulls were not the first to take to a chicken ranch as a rest from writing magazine articles, and now Mrs. Will Irwin is helping her husband's father and brother run a chicken ranch in the Santa Cruz mountains. Mrs. Irwin intended to join her husband in New York, after he took up his work and residence there, but her health is not of the best and the Eastern winter loomed before her as an Arctic blizzard. So she has decided to remain with her children on the ranch for a while.

Happy Young Lovers

Cupid had it all his own way in the engagement of Florence Starr and "Joe" Thomas. From a purely worldly viewpoint the match is not a brilliant one for the fiance, well-educated and clever as he is, has his own way to make in this world. As he is a mining engineer, however, that should not be difficult. Walter Starr, Florence's brother, married one of the Moore girls of Oakland. The young Starrs live only a stone's throw away from the "Jack" Valentines, who have deserted Seattle for good and now occupy a cosy house which Mr. Moore gave them as an after-wedding present.

The Stork for an Emblem

The Family Club has an emblem. It was adopted at a High Jinks held last Saturday night at Shasta Springs, whither nearly one hundred members journeyed for an outing beneath the pines. Ned Hamilton led the revels and invoked the spirits of earth and air, of the solar system, of the trees and the rivers, and of everything which the superstitious of the infant world invested with spirits, for aid in the selection of a club emblem. Presently in the branches of a tree appeared an illuminated ciconia alba, and the tall bird was immediately adopted as the club's own with interesting ceremony. Miniature storks soon appeared on coat lapels, and even the bachelors of the club

Became an Historic Personage

Some Californian author on the lookout for a novel-plot might take the Sweeney-McSweeneys, or McSweeney-Sweeneys, two of whom are at war in the courts over the guardianship of an incompetent mother. The head of the local family was a great character in his day, and his name figured prominently in the presidential defeat of Plumed Knight Blaine. He was a cattle and horse-dealer, with a salesyard in Tenth street. In time he amassed wealth and returned to Ireland where he bought an estate and planned to set up as a lord. But he soon discovered that it's ancient lineage and not old estates that compels deference from the Old World peasantry. Sweeney did not renounce his American citizenship, a la W. W. Astor, but he declared America should never again be his home. It was during the Land League troubles that he established himself on his Irish estate. In striving to shield those who were under the English ban he hoisted the American flag and claimed the protection of the United States. Forthwith he was clapped into prison. At once he called upon Blaine, then Secretary of State, to order his release. Blaine found on investigation that Sweeney was holding some small local office in Ireland, Poor Law Guardian or a like position. The Secretary announced that this act on Sweeney's part amounted to a renunciation of American citizenship, since, as an American, he could not hold office under any foreign ruler. No matter whether he had applied for English citizenship or not, the fact that he held any office was sufficient; besides, Blaine argued, Sweeney had no right to break British laws under the supposition that the United States would back him up. Sweeney appeared to regard his Irish property as if it were a consulate, or the deck of a man-o'-war. At any rate no ultimatums were exchanged over his case, but the episode was made a telling factor in the Blaine-Cleveland election; it became one of the many straws that made the back-breaking load that helped to crush the Plumed Knight politically.

Mrs. Leahy will pass the winter with her mother, Mrs. Harrington, at her home in California street. I hear that the stork is hovering over two households in the Harrington family.

That Hot Day at Guantanamo

I am told that the greeting between Rear-Admiral Bowman H. McCalla and Brigadier-General George F. Elliott at the Mare Island navy yard last week was a particularly fervid and picturesque one. The last time these two officers saw each other was in the summer of 1898, when McCalla, then a commander, had the cruiser Marblehead at Guantanamo, and with her and the Dolphin supported the hard fight of the marines, in which Elliott, then only a captain, commanded a company. That was a protracted affair with many anxious days, but it secured the first American foothold in Cuba. McCalla is now a rear-admiral, having been advanced several numbers in his grade for his meritorious services in Guantanamo and elsewhere in Cuba, and Elliott is now the commandant of the entire Marine Corps, his selection having been mainly due to his gallantry on the occasion named.

Captain L. C. Logan, who is to take command of the battleship Ohio, entertained Lieutenant-Commander Buchanan and Lieutenant-Commander Adams at dinner at the Colonial one evening last week. Among the guests were Miss Georgiana Logan and Miss Elsie Logan, well known in Washington society.

Held the Record for Slow Promotion

Major "Tom" Adams, Artillery Corps U. S. Army, whose tragic death, resulting from a street car accident this week, shocked local army circles, was a conspicuous example of the fine officer fallen victim to the stagnation in promotion which cursed the army for so many years and promises again to curse it in the near future. Major Adams entered West Point in 1863, graduating in 1867. He remained a lieutenant until 1898, having spent nearly thirty-one years between his graduation from West Point and his captaincy. I believe this is the record case of the kind.

Ministers on the Verge of Gambling

The Rev. E. E. Baker, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, of Oakland, is in the papers as being a victim of a "get-rich-quick" affair. It would seem that the church is no bar to gambling. Mr. Baker affably but decidedly declares that he "has not lost anything, but, on the contrary, has come out ahead." That, I suppose, makes it all right. It would have been dreadful had the clerical gentleman not known how to play his cards. Just think how mortified the presbyters would have been had their shepherd come out in the hole. He engaged in the laudable pursuit of getting one hundred per cent—which sinners call usury—for his money, at the solicitation of Mr. Kling, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, in Oakland. W. A. Kling, who by the way is announced in the pamphlets of the Beneficial Bond and Credit Company as the general manager of that concern, denies that he is connected in any official capacity with it and says, furthermore, that it is "a lovely company and did everything it promised for me and my friends." Mr. Kling does not seem at all indignant to think that his name has been used without his consent. But there are Oakland people who are wondering if the reverend gentlemen were innocent but gullible, exceedingly gullible. Meanwhile Dr. Baker continues to divide the honors of officiating at fashionable weddings with the Rev. Carson Shaw, the genial rector of the Church of the Advent, East Oakland, and the Rev. Charles R. Brown, pastor of the First Congregational church. Both of these clergymen, by the way, refused, I am told, to indulge in "bonds," giving as a reason that it seemed to verge on gambling.

Bounded by Religious Style

Back of the reluctant acceptance by the Oakland Presbytery of the resignation of the Rev. Hugh Fraser, pastor of the Brooklyn Presbyterian church, East Oakland, is a tale of long discord between parson and people, which grew so bitter that it threatened to end in a rupture of the congregation. The reason of the dissatisfaction is said to have lain with the luxury-loving and fashionable set in the church. They took their pastor's sermons against the sins of the day as personal and declared that they must cease. To this the sturdy old Scotchman replied that as long as he stood in the pulpit he should preach the Lord's message against sinners. He was asked to put on a little more style but this was turned aside as an idle request. More and more the people of the Brooklyn Presbyterian church have desired to have a brilliant speaker. More and more have they sought to take a stand beside the First church of Oakland proper. It is claimed that there is as much wealth in East Oakland as elsewhere and the Brooklyn congregation cannot see why religious style should be bounded by Lake Merritt. Dr. Fraser has already been called to the First Presbyterian church of Victoria, B. C.

Decline to be Snubbed Any Longer

As is usual over in Oakland-across-the-bay, the issuance of cards for the various dancing clubs of the winter is the signal for a big row. It is no use to try and "be pretty" and deny that any unpleasant words have passed between the younger and older sets, for there have been things said that may lead to many a rupture of lifelong friendships. The "Maple Club" set, which is to meet at Reed's hall, are not at all pleased because they have not been graduated to the older set that dances in Maple hall on Friday nights, the Friday Night Cotillion Club, in short. These youngsters are not at all backward in declaring that there is a plot to keep them from meeting the older men. "The real men," as the young girls call those lords of creation who are in business for themselves, are thought to be much more desirable than the college men, who are allotted to them. And this year "La Jeunesse" will also give a series of dances, but whether the younger set can get in there or not is still problematical. Well, if what I hear the "real men" say is an indication of what is to come, the belles of the last few seasons would do just as well to keep the debutantes of next year in their own club. They are a stunning little crowd, nearly all beauties, and among them are some very great catches. Noelle De Golia, Cornelia Stratton, Ruth and Rose Kales, Katharine Kutz, Anita Thomson, Savilla Hayden, Ruth Houghton, Lillian Isaacs, Marion Walsh, Helen Crane, Edna Prather, Bessie Coghill, Edna Orr, Pansy Perkins, Elsa Schilling, Marguerite Butters, Louise Hall, and Lucretia Burnham are a few of the buds whose power is dreaded. "Never mind, little girls, your turn is coming," as one of the leading clubmen said, with a laugh, when he heard of the racket.

Following the report of the treasurer, who announced that there was only sixty-seven cents in the treasury, it was decided by the Junior class of the University of California to place all its officers who handle funds under bonds. The action was really the result of reported embezzlements and loose business management on the part of the student class officers of the college and is already causing a good deal of sharp comment. Under this ruling, P. N. Gray, business manager of the Blue and Gold, will be required to furnish a bond for two thousand dollars; Harry Squires, class treasurer, one hundred and fifty dollars; Harry Encell, chairman Junior farce committee, five hundred dollars.

The Pierce sisters, Mabel and Hazel, are among the Oakland society girls who go in for serious study. The former is trying for an M.A. at the Berkeley university, and her sister has just entered as an undergraduate. But

The Bride Wasn't Superstitious, But—

It was a toss-up whether there should be a wedding out at beautiful "Rosecrest," the home of the Alexander Youngs, in Piedmont, Oakland, last Thursday night or not. The bride, a delicate and sensitive girl, is not given to superstitions of any kind. But there is one thing that she has always declared she would not tempt Providence by doing, and that is marrying in bad weather. It had been intended to have the ceremony in October, but because of the fact that there might be a storm on that date the earlier date was chosen. And then came the worst storm of the year just as the bride prepared to have her veil pinned in place. Really, it did look as though some malevolent sprite were preparing an unfortunate life for the two. I hear that May refused positively to let the ceremony go on, and over one hundred guests awaiting the bridal procession, Mr. Young was obliged to go to his daughter's room to add his entreaties to those of the amused bridesmaids. It required all his strategy to convince the bride that a divorce was not the necessary aftermath of a wedding performed beneath lowering skies. Finally his banter won. The procession down the fine old stairway was a picture in itself. The gowns stood out well against the deep old rose of the paneled hall, and as they entered the French drawing-room the tones of the pale mauve tinted walls and ceilings, where tiny clustered Loves held pendant wreaths of roses, seemed to fit into the scene, so well had the color scheme been planned. I wish that you might have heard the "poem" that Alexander Young wrote in honor of his youngest daughter. It was, in the language of the street, "a peach."

It had been expected that Marietta Havens should catch the bridal bouquet tossed from the head of the staircase to the pretty group of girls beneath. But Miss Anne McNab was the fortunate one; she also got the ring from the cake, so of course there will be another wedding in the McNab family before the end of the year. Two such signs are invincible. And as for Marietta Havens, I have a secret about this same popular little belle: there is going to be an announcement and I fancy it is to be in October. Marietta has been bridesmaid at least thirteen times and there is a certain young man who thinks that when a girl reaches that number she is qualified to have an attendant herself. Now that May is married, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Young are to close their beautiful place for the winter and go to Honolulu, where Mrs. Young finds the climate beneficial and where Mr. Young is nearer his sugar plantations.

Club Life Over the Bay

The Home Club of Oakland has two great cards on its program this Friday afternoon. Fred Hotaling, who lately returned from abroad, and Mrs. Annis Montague Turner, who is here from Honolulu for a short stay, will sing. Mr. Hotaling is down for two French songs. Then Frank Rodolph, who is resting after his vaudeville circuit experience, is to appear in a sketch with Alfred McKinnon.

The district federation of women's clubs will meet in Alameda in November, when Adelphian Club of the Encinal city will act as hostess. In the absence of Mrs. Frank Wilson, president of Town and Gown of Berkeley, who is now in Europe, Mrs. I. N. Chapman, the new president of Adelphian, will preside. Mrs. Chapman has made herself a great favorite since she assumed office. Adelphian presidents never find the office a bed of roses. Mrs. Chapman refused a dozen times to take the office which was finally thrust upon her. She is one of the best-dressed women in Alameda, and the members say it is a pleasure to look upon her when she mounts the platform. At Adelphian's next "open meeting" Miss Blanche Tisdale, who recently returned from an extended trip abroad, will give a talk upon "Six Spanish Cities." Miss Tisdale is the most popular unmarried woman in Alameda just at present, and is daily besieged by callers, I hear. She brought back trunks full of Parisian gowns, and her manners have acquired the subtle Parisian touch that is so attractive to both sexes. Mrs. Will Maddern will talk for the Shakespeare section this month. It is rumored that Mrs. George Perry, curator of the section, is contemplating the production of a play before long. It was the Shakespeare section that gave such a delightful fancy dress ball last year.

The Metcalfs in Washington

Everyone comments upon the youthful appearance of Mrs. Victor Metcalf. She is a very pretty blonde and looks like a girl in the twenties, though she must be nearer forty. The Metcalfs' social position in Washington is on a much firmer foundation than that of most "prominent" politicians' families. The fact that Mr. Metcalf is in the Cabinet is one factor that makes their social status secure; then, too, they are closely related to Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, whose wife is one of the acknowledged leaders at the Capital. Under her wing alone they would be swept into an enviable position socially.

Absurd Show of Secrecy

Col. Chas. R. Morris, the diminutive but choleric commandant of the artillery post at the Presidio, who was recently rebuked by General MacArthur for miscarriage of justice in the court-martial of which Morris was president, makes a good deal of a show of secrecy concerning the Presidio fortifications, but, as far as can be judged, there is a good deal of bluff to it. In spite of the air of mystery and the pompous restrictions placed in certain respects on those who would like to inspect the batteries, it is perfectly easy for any one, whether the spy of a foreign country or an ordinary curiosity seeker, to find out pretty much all that he wants to know about these fortifications. Any one who chooses may walk, ride or stand within a few feet of the Presidio batteries, note the number, locations, calibres and arcs of fire of all the guns there. For practical purposes of attack in warfare, I do not see that any further information is essential for a possible enemy to possess. Col. Morris's whole treatment of the situation reminds one very much of saving at the bung and wasting at the spigot.

The Russian Bazaar, which was moved to St. Louis for a general exhibit at the World's Fair, has returned and opened again at the old stand, 428 Sutter street. They brought back with them a large assortment of antique and rare Russian brasses in Circassian pots, samovars, candelabra, Russian pots, lamps, vases, etc. They also have a rare collection of Russian costumes, old silver, etc. New goods are constantly arriving, each week bringing in new shipments. The attention of the connoisseur and collector is called to the exhibit, which appeals particularly to lovers of the unique in art.

Ashmead Bartlett's Poker Debt

I observe the booming of Mr. Ashmead Bartlett, by Collier's Weekly, with a satisfaction based on the hope that his salary from Collier's is sufficient to sustain the solvency of his draft on the bank of issue. When Mr. Bartlett fared forth to the war in the Far East he fell among newspaper men who in a few games of "draw" on board the Siberia induced him to sign his name to a check on a London bank. Mr. Bartlett was at that time not only himself a newspaper man, representing the London Mail, but he hinted of some distant relationship to the English nobility, thereby fostering the respect and esteem usually accorded to journalists and noblemen. The check was drawn to the order of Tom Johnson of the Cleveland Leader, but the prospective profit of the transaction was to be shared by those who had participated in the game. At Yokohama Mr. Bartlett announced his intention of going to the Japanese front and the others went on to Shanghai. In Shanghai Mr. Johnson casually mentioned to Consul-General Goodnow that he held Mr. Bartlett's check for two hundred dollars. Mr. Goodnow very kindly offered to cash the check, for he had met Mr. Bartlett and was impressed with him most favorably. Mr. Johnson readily acceded to Mr. Goodnow's proposition and the Bartlett check was duly indorsed. In course of time it was returned from the bank in London inscribed in a British clerkly hand, "No good." It was also ascertained by the same mail that Mr. Bartlett's contract with the Mail had long since expired. At last accounts Mr. Goodnow was trying to communicate with Tom Johnson. Now all is apparently once more serene. Mr. Bartlett is one of the Collier stars in the East and his order on the millionaire publisher, now unquestionably in possession of Mr. Johnson, will be honored as soon as presented.

*The Lightning Liquor Cure Co.,
Hayward Building, San Francisco, Cal.*

DEAR SIR:—I cheerfully testify to the merits of the Lightning Liquor Cure. It is certainly a wonderful remedy. I have used it in temperance reform for the past seven years with most gratifying success. It stops liquor crave and cures the effects of excessive drinking more quickly and more effectively than any other remedy I have known. When the patient has taken it faithfully, according to directions, it has always effected a lasting cure. In such cases I have never known it to fail. I gave the cure about six years ago to a prominent journalist who had been drinking heavily for a year. He had been separated from his wife and family on account of his drunkenness and was reduced to such a state that he had lost employment and all self-respect and was living in a room in the back part of a saloon. He had tried everything and every way to stop drinking, but all to no avail. I learned of the case and gave him the Lightning Liquor Cure with the result that from the first dose the appetite for drink was destroyed, and though he lived in the saloon for some days after, he never touched liquor. His self-respect returned, his reform was complete, he went back to his home and family, and is to-day one of the brightest journalists in the country. I could mention more cases than you would care to read, where the Lightning Liquor Cure has done wonders in relieving the effects of drunkenness in all its different stages, from the one-day excess to habitual drunkenness. Your remedy is surely a Godsend to humanity, and should be used in temperance reform by all temperance workers.

Yours for humanity,

REV. E. D. CASEY.

Lightning Liquor Cure Company, San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN:—One box of your Liquor Cure was sufficient to destroy the appetite I have had for liquors of all kinds for ten years. I am thoroughly satisfied that the cure is permanent. I thank you and give you permission to refer anybody to me.

Yours truly,

(Signed)

San Francisco, August 8, 1904.

Lightning Liquor Cure Company, Hayward Bldg., City.

GENTLEMEN:—Yours of even date at hand and although I would prefer you not to use my name outside of your office for the benefit of those of my kind you may use it there. I have been a beer drinker for twenty-five years. I drank it because I liked it, and drank a great deal. Your tablets cured me of this steady drinking. I can drink a glass of beer now, but I do not like it and three or four glasses I cannot drink without being nauseated. Your tablets are pleasant to take and I consider absolutely sure.

Wishing you every success, I am very truly,

(Signed)

GENTLEMEN:—For ten years I have been a habitual drinker of intoxicating liquors, beer and wine. I positively affirm that three boxes of your tablets cured me, and I not only have not taken a drink for four months, but have had no desire to.

Thanking you again, I am very truly,

(Signed)

Above was written three months ago and is good yet.

Yours, etc.,

Jangled Bells in Tune Again

The affairs of the Chauncey Winslows, which have been troubling the tabbies for a few blue moons, are at last definitely settled, it is said. Though the croakers confidently predicted it, there is to be no divorce. Such a consummation has been in the air ever since Mr. Winslow took up his permanent residence in Portland, but not long since he came to San Francisco to pay a visit to his wife and children. It is said that on that visit a truce was declared, to last forever. Society says Mr. Winslow was too fond of his children to give them up, and that at the last moment decided he simply could not do it. He will, however, continue to live in Portland. Chauncey Winslow is considered by many fair debutantes to be the most fascinating man of their acquaintance, since Donald Graham took himself to London. His marriage with Sallie Stetson was his second matrimonial experience, his first wife having been Sophie Eyre, the actress.

Prominent Los Angeles Engagements

A rumor which has interested California for some months, and with which Town Talk concerned itself a few weeks ago, received confirmation last week in the announcement which Mr. and Mrs. J. Ross Clark of Los Angeles made of the engagement of their daughter, Ella Harriet, to Henry Carlton Lee of Cleveland, O. Miss Clark's father is a leading builder of the Salt Lake road, president of the Citizens' Bank of Los Angeles and identified with other large business enterprises. Senator William A. Clark of Montana is a brother of J. Ross Clark. Mr. Lee with his brother, James Lee, has interested himself in the construction of a liquid air plant which has been a pet scheme of the liquid air demonstrator, George Alexander Bobrick, of Los Angeles. No date has been set for the wedding but it is understood that the marriage will take place this fall.

Another interesting engagement announcement which comes from Los Angeles this week couples the names of Miss Lila Fairchild, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fairchild, and John Mott, son of the late T. D. Mott, long identified with the history of Los Angeles. Miss Fairchild is a sister of Mrs. Nathaniel Myrick. Mr. Mott has several well known brothers and sisters, among the latter being Mrs. Henry Van Der Leek. Miss Fairchild is now in the East with her mother and the date for the wedding will be announced soon after their return West.

And No Doubt They Did

Professor Howison, whose fame is not bounded by the Berkeley campus, is very absent minded. When he is searching the back of his mind for some philosophical truth he frequently forgets his lecture hours. The other day a class waited impatiently for him to come forth from his study, and finally a youth knocked on the door and reminded Professor Howison that it was half-past commencing time and the class was doing nothing. "That's right, young man," murmured the professor abstractedly, "just tell them to keep right on doing it."

FASHION IN CHAMPAGNE.

Speaking of champagnes, our New York correspondent writes that the predominance of Moet & Chandon White Seal at all fashionable functions at Newport, Saratoga, and other watering places is remarkable. The present vintage appears to have caught the taste of the bon vivant, it being pronounced not too sweet, but medium dry, of an exquisite bouquet, and is said to agree best with a constitution taxed to the utmost by a strenuous society life.

"NOW IS THE BEST TIME TO VISIT WORLD'S FAIR"

If you are going to St. Louis NOW is the time to go; the journey will be pleasantest and you will be able to see most at the Fair. And remember, this may be the last of the great Worlds Fairs for some years. Take advantage of the "fine traveling weather" and these low rates offered by the Southern Pacific:

St. Louis and Back . . . . . $67.50
Chicago and Back, one way through St. Louis, $72.50

Tickets will be good for return until December 31; you can have choice of routes; you can travel on the Overland Limited or any other Southern Pacific train. Don't forget the dates when excursion tickets are sold:

September . . . . . 28, 29
October . . . . . 3, 4, 5, 6, 19, 20, 26, 27

The Southern Pacific is selling tickets to points further east at very low rates. You can make the round trip to New York for $108.50; to Washington for $107.00. Similar rates to other Eastern cities.

Sold Their Family Treasure

The Mailliards have at last been induced to part with a diary, their most valued possession, in the estimation of bibliophiles. Nobody knows exactly the price paid for the MSS., but as it was insured for five thousand dollars and kept in a fireproof safe in a New York lawyer's office, one may imagine that quite a handsome price was paid for the rare pages. The manuscript is Dr. O'Meara's diary, on the notes in which he based that wonderful bit of Napoleonic history, "Napoleon in Exile, or A Voice from St. Helena." This book made such a stir when it was published, over eighty years ago, that the London police were summoned to protect the publishers from the clamoring crowd desiring early copies. Fancy any one making such a disturbance over one of the "Six Best Sellers" nowadays! The O'Meara diary was acquired by Louis Mailliard, Joseph Bonaparte's private secretary. When his son Adolphe came to California in the early sixties he brought the journal with him. It is in nineteen small books, in plain leather-covers like a tradesman's account-book. But think of the contents, oh, bibliophiles! M. Mailliard bought a ranch in this State, the same ranch described as San Rosario in the novel by Maud Howe Elliott. Mrs. Mailliard was the aunt of Mrs. Elliott and of F. Marion Crawford.

Matie Wilberforce Quietly Married

F. N. Vail, one of Stockton's popular young business men, slipped away last week and was quietly married in New York to Mrs. Wilberforce on her return from a visit in England. Then they wired the fact to their surprised friends. Mrs. Vail was Miss Matie Sargent, only daughter of Ross Sargent, the San Joaquin capitalist who died last year in the millionaire class. She became the wife of Alex Wilberforce, a commercial traveler who lived only about a year, and in a widow's bonnet, piquant Matie Wilberforce was about as saucily charming a little widow as one could wish to see. Mr. Vail is an Englishman and Mr. Wilberforce was an Englishman, indicating that there's one American wife who believes heartily in English husbands.

A Mother's Dying Request

One of the good stories told by a visiting Knight Templar apropos of the particular brand of California climate that happened to be on tap conclave week runs like this: "A Californian mother and her son had been visiting in the East and were about ready to return home when the mother was suddenly taken very ill. The son happened to be some miles from town when word reached him that his mother was dying. Mounting his bicycle he speeded to the place where his parent was staying and hurried to her bedside. She threw her arms about his neck and moaned, "My son, my son, take me home. I'm dying. If I could have only one breath of California air I know I would live." "Wait a minute, mother," soothingly responded the lad, and he rushed from the room. Returning with his bicycle he plunged the blade of his pocket knife into a tire. The dying woman took one long breath and—got well.

THE LATEST ON OUR CITY

One hundred thousand copies of the latest book on San Francisco were printed for distribution at the St. Louis Exposition. Of course it is a guide book, but it is rather above the average guide literature, being ordered especially by the San Francisco Commissioners to the Exposition. Charles Sedgwick Aiken, editor of Sunset, is the author. It is in pamphlet form, illustrated with handsome half-tones showing the principal points of interest in the city.

At the Resorts

Mrs. Henry Wetherbee of Fruitvale has been spending a week with Mrs. L. R. Mead at Byron Hot Springs. Among the many recent arrivals are Mrs. Willis G. Dodd, Mr. W. S. Heger, Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Heyneman, Miss Heyneman, Miss E. M. Warren, Mrs. M. Haaf, Mrs. L. Nolte, Jas. Spanton, Miss McLean, J. W. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Tuska, Rev. Father P. R. Lynch, Rev. Father P. R. Casey, C. D. Laing, H. S. Collins, A. J. Jarvie, Mrs. M. V. Maguire, C. C. Barre and wife, and F. R. Parker of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Neal and T. K. Burkett of Honolulu, Geo. J. Whelan and Miss Alexander of New York.

Recent arrivals at Rowardennan, where the season is still in swing, were: From San Francisco, J. Walter Hay, Dr. Harry E. Alderson, Jerome A. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. George H. De Langton, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence E. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Dimond, Mrs. William M. Pierson, Fred H. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Henshelwood, Mrs. M. A. Rhoades, M. Rhoades; from London: Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Oakey; from Portland, Oregon, Fred D. and Fred S. Kribs.

James Turner is down from British Columbia and is at El Carmelo. Mrs. H. M. Miller, Miss Leslie Green and Miss Flora Miller arrived at El Carmelo last week.

Robert Forbes of Philadelphia was at El Carmelo attending the conference.

Arrivals at Del Monte last week included Baron Keller, Vienna, Dr. and Mrs. P. G. Becker, New York, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Jump, Miss Jump, Philadelphia, Madame Carlier, Mr. and Mrs. Morel, Brussels, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. McNab, Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. W. Metcalf, Clinton E. Worden, Miss Alexander, San Francisco.

It may not be too late to incorporate into the columns of Town Talk the fact of the great interest that has been evinced by the public, and of course especially by the members of the visiting and home Knights Templar, in the remarkable silver Trophies designed and manufactured by Messrs. Shreve and Company of this city. For a week these interesting specimens of the silversmith's craft were on exhibition in the store at Post and Market streets. They included a remarkable emblematic structure called "The Fortress of Chivalry," a Loving Cup of generous proportions and graceful form, a clock some six feet in height, made of silver, onyx and gold quartz, and an imposing Ceremonial Service.

During the week of exhibition there was a constant coming and going of admiring Knights, friends and those interested in our local Art Objects. It is interesting to note that these Trophies were entirely conceived and produced in our city and also that they come directly into touch with other examples of workmanship made in the greater centers of Commerce and Art of the East. Side by side these stand with the handicraft expression of older communities and longer established places of production, but it is gratifying to see that in no detail do they fall short of the standards of excellence established by years of experience and doubtless more constant demand; we may even venture to say that these examples have originality of general scheme which we may fairly attribute to the influence of California upon our Art expression.

We understand that Messrs. Shreve and Company have been in such constant request for descriptive matter, photographs, etc., bearing upon these four examples, not only from members of the Knights Templar but also from other directions where the interest is purely personal or artistic—that they are producing an interesting booklet which pictures and briefly describes the Trophies which have attracted so much attention. The recipients of this little souvenir booklet may look forward to an example of good printing and some interesting matter which will not be cast aside.

"Anna the Adventuress," by E. Philipps Oppenheim, runs through its fourth and concluding installment in the Sunday Call Magazine tomorrow. On October ninth begins a strong and timely novel, "The Grafters," a political story by Francis Lynde. Other up-to-date and entertaining features of the Sunday Call tomorrow will be "The Responsibility of the Press" by Marie Corelli; "Gold Braid and Its Effects" by Jerome K. Jerome; "Adventures of Reuben" by Edward W. Townsend; "A Batch of Love Letters" by Beatrice Herron-Maxwell; "The River Boss" by Steward Edward White; a page of storiottes, and three women's pages:

"I take great pleasure in certifying to the wonderful curative powers of Charles Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. For many years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and intestinal catarrh. My California physician brought up my case before the Congress of Homeopathic Physicians held in Chicago in 1901. An eminent specialist in intestinal diseases advised the use of Marchand's Hydrozone and Glycozone. His advice was followed and I have been restored to health.
"Having been connected with schools I have also used Hydrozone with great efficacy on the pupils, in healing all kinds of skin troubles, from abscesses to poison oak.

In Financial Circles

The records of the Stock and Bond Exchange show quite an increased volume of business in bonds, $598,000 changing hands. Transactions in shares were less satisfactory, aggregating 3,294, divided as follows: 770 lighting, 10 water, 1,070 miscellaneous, 84 bank shares and 1,360 sugars.

Heavy selling of San Francisco Gas & Electric depressed the price down to $61, a loss of 1 1/4 points; after the selling pressure had disappeared a recovery of 3/4 of a point was noted. In the miscellaneous group the lately listed stock of the Pacific States Telephone Company continued to attract attention, scoring an advance of 3 points, closing $116 bid. The company will hereafter pay dividends at the rate of 7 per cent, an increase of 1 per cent.

Sugar stocks while remaining strong were neglected; offerings are readily absorbed, still buyers are not willing to grant concessions. The raw sugar market is strengthening. Keep an eye on sugar stocks! — The Financier.

The Stage

The Alcazar's New Leading Lady

Lillian Lawrence, who will be the leading lady during the Alcazar's next stock season, opening October tenth, is not a stranger to our city. Indeed, she made her debut here. She is not a native daughter for she was born in Alexandria, Virginia, but she came to San Francisco when she was only two years old. While attending the grammar school here, Charles E. Locke, then manager of the Bush street theatre, called upon the principal of the school for thirty-two children to take part in a chess game in "The Royal Middy." Lillian Lawrence was one of the chess players, and this was her stage debut. Locke saw that she was talented, and her parents were persuaded to permit her to remain on the stage. She was transferred to the California theatre where for years she sang in opera. When she was about twenty she cut opera and joined a road company traveling over the State. As Sister Genevieve in "The Two Orphans" she made her most notable hit. Later she played in a stock company in Oakland, and then went East, where she played leads with Rhea, and appeared as Henrietta in "The Two Orphans" with Kate Claxton. A little later she appeared in Frohman's production of "Men and Women," and then after a season of stock in Washington, D.C., became Thomas Keene's leading lady. Her next metropolitan success was in "The Great Diamond Robbery" in which she appeared as Mrs. Bulford. She is an immense favorite in Philadelphia and Boston; in the latter city she was leading lady of the Castle Square comedy company, at the same time J. H. Gilmour, now with Oliver Morosco's company at the Majestic, was leading man. Matinee girls adore Miss Lawrence, and she has loads of tributes she has received from her girly-girl admirers.

The Other Players

A very artistic little booklet has been issued by way of introducing the three new members of the Alcazar stock company who are to appear in "Lord and Lady Algy." General Manager Price has cleverly created interest without provoking expectation, and that is no easy thing to do. Lillian Lawrence and John Craig stand very high in the East. The esteem in which they were held in Boston, while associated for over four years, is evident from the comments of former Bostonians who visit the box office. In fact the Alcazar management has a petition signed by over five thousand Boston playgoers, who vainly sought to induce Miss Lawrence to return there for the coming season. Mr. Craig, in addition to playing over three hundred roles in stock, has been leading man for Mrs. Fiske, Mary Mannering and Viola Allen. The new ingenue, Elizabeth Woodson, is the daughter of a former president of the Memphis Cotton Exchange, who is well known to many prominent business men of San Francisco. Her experience ranges from emotional work with Stuart Robson to a season with The Four Cohans, where she replaced Josephine Cohan in a singing and dancing role. She, too, has played in stock with Miss Lawrence and Mr. Craig. Apart from these new comers the Alcazar wisely retains its established favorites, such as the Misses Crosby, Belgarde, Howe, and Allen, and Messrs. Maher, Connors, Hilliard, Osbourne, Butler and Belasco.

A Pretty Play

"York State Folks" is without exception the best play of village life that I have ever seen. One outgrows one's taste for rural dramas, when one comes to the years when only problem plays are capable of arousing interest, and one feels a strong disinclination to sit through "The Old Homestead" or "Way Down East" in their periodical trips this way. But "York State Folks" is refreshingly free from the features of the typical rural drama. It is original in that it lacks the traditional villain, the city man, and the wronged village maiden. It is simply a collection of village types, woven together with a light plot, and with incidental music and songs far above the average. Myron Cooper, the organist and organ builder, is a beautiful character, and Ray L. Royce plays the part of the patient, kindly old man in the correct key, neither over nor under-pitched. James Lackaye, who is as fine an artist in his way as is the better known Wilton in his, gives a strong portrayal of the "big man" of the village, irascible and overbearing, as becomes one who is the heaviest taxpayer in the place. Of the women Miss Millie Stevens is the best as Mrs. "Lyddy" Martin, the meek, down-trodden wife of the magnate. The stage settings are charming, just suited to the character of the piece.

Ben Greet's Season at Lyric Hall

The Ben Greet company of London players opens its season at Lyric hall on Monday night with a splendid production of the old morality play, "Everyman," under the personal direction of Ben Greet, and every part will be taken by a player of the highest rank. The original music will be introduced and the play will receive a perfect performance in every detail. Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday, the mid-week matinee beginning at half-past three so that teachers and pupils can attend. The second week of the engagement will be devoted to Shakespearean productions in the Elizabethan manner. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights and Wednesday and Saturday matinees "Much Ado About Nothing" will be played with Ben Greet as Malvolio. Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and a special matinee on Friday will be devoted to "Twelfth Night." Mr. Greet will again be seen as Malvolio and Constance Crawley as Viola. Seats for the second week will be ready at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Wednesday morning; prices, one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents.

The best piece of acrobatic work ever seen here is programmed at the Orpheum this week. The two Urbanis, consisting of father and son, do a series of head-balancing stunts that thrill even the Orpheum clientele, which is used to thrilling acrobatic acts. Urbanis is a marvel of physical development. His muscles would put to shame the average athlete of twenty-five years. The other new acts are not so exciting but are very entertaining. The hold-overs are all good, especially Trovillo, the ventriloquist, who continues to keep the crowd laughing heartily at his witticisms.

O'Sullivan in a New Irish Role

That Den's O'Sullivan has by no means lost his voice is proved in a letter from my London correspondent, who tells me that in January the baritone will appear in a new romantic musical comedy entitled "Peggy Machree." It is to be put on at one of the London theatres. The piece was written by Patrick Bidwell, the music by Signor Esposito. The plot centres around an incident in Irish life of the eighteenth century.

Gertrude Fleming, a talented child pianist and high soprano, will give a concert at Steinway hall, Tuesday evening, October eighteenth, assisted by Mrs. Jeanette Cofer, lyric soprano, and Charles Foley, violin soloist and tenor. The young artist will play works of Mendelssohn, Chopin, Bach and other eminent composers, and will sing numbers by Gounod and Ardit. Rudolph Foster will be the accompanist. Those who have heard little Miss Fleming pronounce her a marvel and one who is bound to make her mark in the musical world.

Fannie MacIntyre, formerly leading lady at the Central theatre, has been playing all summer in New York's new stock theatre, in Forty-second street above the Avenue. Miss MacIntyre is the leading lady of the company, which plays melodramas as a rule. She was a great favorite with local audiences when she was at the Central, and when she played Lady Isabel and Madame Vine in "East Lynne," the production was a record-breaker for the Market street playhouse.

MADAME AVERY STRAKOSCH.

Prima donna soprano, who will be at the Orpheum next week. Madame Strakosch, who delighted Orpheum audiences season before last, will receive a warm welcome. She has a splendid voice, uses it with the skill and taste of a thorough artist, and is now doing what so few successfully accomplish—singing popular songs artistically.

"The Danites" Revival

The last time I saw "The Danites" was at the Alcazar, with Marion Convere in the role of the heroine. Ethel Clifton has the part in the Central production of the Joaquin Miller-McKee Rankin play, and invests the role with sympathetic interest. All the other characters are very well acted. Mayall is a virile and interesting Sandy. "The Danites" is a play that should never be permitted to die any more than "'49" should. Both of these works of Miller possess the true early Californian flavor, and as pictures of the past of our State should be preserved.

"Captain Barrington" is by no means so vivacious a vehicle to exploit the talent of the Majestic players as were "The Altar of Friendship" and "The Palace of the King." The really good Revolutionary drama has yet to be written, for neither "Janice Meredith" nor "Nathan Hale" can be said to possess staying powers, and "Captain Barrington" is not in the race at all. It is prettily staged at the Majestic, and acted above its merits.

Charlotte Thompson has had a play accepted by Charles Frohman, by whom she is employed in making over dramas. She is to return to California this winter to fetch her mother, and then they will take a little apartment together in New York. Miss Thompson gave up a certainty in the School Department here for the uncertainty of playwriting and she has made a success of it. Margaret Anglin has been an excellent friend to her.

Celebrated "KNOX" Hats
Eugene Korn, the Hatter, 746 Market Street

Miss Litgreaves, who played the part of the adventuress in "Raffles," is negotiating for the dramatic rights of "In The Bishop's Carriage," by Miriam Michelson, but it is not yet decided whether she is to have them or not, as Evelyn Millward, who appeared with Irving, is after the same part. The piece is, however, surely to be dramatized.

M. L. Alsop, who was such a favorite at the Alcazar, has scored heavily at the Belasco theatre, Los Angeles, in "A Poor Relation." Miss Block is also doing fine work. The Belasco is nightly crowded by the best people in Los Angeles and is offering plays that are a revelation to local stock patrons.

Epigrams in "The Wilderness"

In "The Wilderness," which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin gave during their last Columbia season, and which was to have been produced at the Alcazar, are voiced some clever bits of philosophy. Among those I recall are: "Love is attractive, marriage is more tangible." "Love's eyes may be open but love is blind." "Life is a beautiful thing when it goes straight." "Lies seem to be a matter of temperament." "It is truth that counts." "There is something better in life than dining out and spending time with people one does not like."

Next Week's Bills

At the Columbia Frank Daniels in "The Office Boy," for which Harry B. Smith wrote the libretto and Englander the music, will be the attraction for two weeks, beginning Monday night. Alfred Hickman, one of the original Little Billees in "Trilby," is of the cast, which is said to contain a bevy of beauties. The production is under the management of Charles B. Dillingham, who has fulfilled that office with success for Julia Marlowe, Maxine Elliott, Fritzi Scheff, Lulu Glaser, Louis Mann and other stars, and never spares expense to make his productions scenically perfect.

Fischer's will have a novelty next week in "Down the Line," by Howard E. Jacott, a San Francisco writer, and Herman Perlet, the composer, the husband of Belle Thorne, once the Tivoli's prima donna. The scenes of "Down the Line" are laid in the Presidio, Sanquineti's restaurant, and City Hall Square, the last bathed in moonlight. The local flavor should make it very attractive. "Jemima Green," Shafter Howard's clever topical song, will be sung by Georgia O'Ramey, and Dorothy Morton will sing "Fishing," with new lines. Ada Gordon will be Diana, and give a solo dance, and Flossie Hope and Pearl Hickman will have a new duo dance. A mythological ballet a la Isadora Duncan will be one of the terpsichorean features. A "riotous reflex of city life" is what the management calls its new piece. "Dilly Dally" comes next.

When Eugenie Thais Lawton was leading lady at the Central she appeared once as Camille, to Mayall's Armand, and a San Franciscan who has seen all Camilles from Bernhardt to Anglin, said that Miss Lawton's came nearest to her ideal of the character. Next week at the Alcazar Miss Lawton will play Camille to Whittlesey's Armand. The latter is a favorite role of the star, but he has not been seen in it in several years. Whittlesey's first starring tour, about to be undertaken under a five years' contract with Belasco, Mayer and Price, promises to develop a wide popularity as enduring as that which he commands in San Francisco. He has gracefully relinquished his right to appear in "Lord and Lady Algy," and this comedy will be reserved for the opening of the stock company on October tenth. It will introduce the new leading players, Lillian Lawrence, John Craig, and Elizabeth Woodson. With them will be associated the well-established favorites of the past year.

Scene from Ben Greet's production of the Morality Play, "Everyman," all next week at Lyric Hall.

All those stories that went the rounds, when Stuart Robson died, about "The Henrietta," turn out to be just that—stories. It was said that Robson loved "The Henrietta" more than all his possessions, and that he was so jealous of his fame in it that he desired no other actor to have the opportunity of playing his great creation of Bertie the Lamb. To insure this, it was said that the manuscript and all the books of the play were destroyed after his death. And yet next week we are to see "The Henrietta" at the Majestic. However, it was only upon the payment of a large royalty and the assurance that it would be produced in a first-class manner that the Robson executors granted permission to the Majestic management to present the play. In the Majestic production the part of Bertie will fall to Henry Stockbridge, who has several New York successes to his credit. The Majestic management announces a New York production of that magnificent drama "The Japanese Nightingale" to follow "The Henrietta." The production will include in its entirety the complete New York scenes and costumes and over one hundred people will figure in the cast and auxiliaries.

"York State Folks" has made the greatest hit of any pastoral play that has been produced in this city. It is drawing large audiences to the Grand, where it will begin its second and last week tomorrow matinee. Sunday matinee, October ninth, Pixley and Luders' merry musical comedy, "The Burgomaster," will begin a week's engagement.

"The Serenade" is still drawing crowded houses at the Tivoli. "The Mouse Trap Peddler" is in active preparation.

The Central will follow its revival of "The Danites" with Martin Hurley's thrilling sensational melodrama, "Dealers in White Women." The play is founded on some startling revelations of police investigations into the work of an organized band of conscienceless men and women engaged in a business that strikes at the home, society and religion. One of the scenes of the play shows the underground headquarters of the criminals, and in this cellar, locked in an iron cage, are shown helpless girl victims who are being held for sale to the highest bidder. The play has never before been seen in San Francisco.

At the Orpheum will appear Madame Avery Strakosch, George Felix, Lydia Barry and Emily Barry, a famous comedy trio, new to our city, in "The Boy Next Door"; Hoey and Lee, original Hebrew humorists; Ted E. Box, a London eccentric comedian and whistler, who makes his first appearance in America, direct from Australia. Trovollo's engagement has been prolonged for one more week.

James and Bonnie Farley, in "The Messenger Boy," will begin a limited engagement at the Chutes, as will also Frank Stafford, a clever whistler and mimic, and Marie Stone, a pleasing soprano, who will present their novel sketch, "A Hunter's Game." The Hamlins, singers and dancers, will be new, in their original comedietta, "Music Mad," and Jeanette Laurelle will continue her beautiful spectacular dance "La Ciel."

Josef Hofmann

No pianist that ever played here was so thoroughly liked as was Josef Hofmann. The simplicity of the pianist captured even those who generally fall down and worship only the picturesque such as Paderewski and Sauer. Did you ever watch Hofmann's hands as he plays—note how quietly and inconspicuously they move over the keyboard, without any "play to the gallery"? It is the same with the man outside of his music. Pose is abhorrent to him.

She Wanted a Seat

At one of his Eastern concerts when every seat in the house was sold out, a woman sent word to him that she must see Hofmann on a most important matter before he went on the stage. It turned out that she wished a seat on the stage.

"But, madame, I can't," replied Josef, "I have nothing to do with it. You must see Mr. Wolfsohn."

"I have," she returned, "and he won't do it. It would be breaking one of his strongest rules."

"Well," said Hofmann, "I can't see how I can help you any, for I have only one seat."

The lady beamed.

"Oh," she cried, "you'd be a perfect dear if you'd give me that."

"But I can't."

"Yes you can, if you wish," she persisted.

"Well," answered the poor, pestered pianist, "if you will take it you can have it."

The lady smiled, gratefully.

"I certainly shall," she said, "but tell me where it is, quickly, for I do not want to miss one note of the Beethoven sonata."

"It's on the stool at the piano," replied Hofmann.

He Would Have One

Another time Hofmann gave a piano recital in a Maine city. So much booming was done for the concert by the local manager that everybody within a radius of a hundred miles was going to attend. Lithographs, half sheet hangers, posters, circulars and three sheet posters were to be found in every nook and corner of the city. On the evening of the concert, very close to the time that the recital should begin, Hofmann went to the carriage with his father, which was waiting to take them to the hall. As Hofmann was about to enter it he found that he did not know where the concert was to be given. He called to the man who opened the carriages in front of the hotel and asked him where the Hofmann concert was to be given.

"Up at the City Hall," responded the man. "If that's where you want to go, you had better hurry or else you won't get a seat."

"Well, I guess I will," said Hofmann, as the carriage drove rapidly away.

An Ambitious Young Woman

Since Hofmann took to writing articles for the popular magazines he has been the recipient of many queer letters. One of the funniest was from a woman who lived not far from the great metropolis. It came to him after his article in The Ladies' Home Journal on "How to Play the Piano." It was a letter and in addition to the letter was a photograph of a very pretty young lady. At first Josef thought it was a proposal of marriage, but when he read the letter he was nearly paralyzed. The lady who wrote the letter was the mother of the original of the photograph. The latter was a great lover of piano playing, but knew nothing about the instrument, and was very anxious to learn. Of course, like all people who are anxious to study music, she wanted to begin at the bottom, but neither she nor her mother knew where the bottom was, so they wrote Hofmann asking whether it would be advisable to begin by the study of Bach, Beethoven or Brahms, and if he would undertake to teach the young lady how to play the piano within three months, so that she could appear at an entertainment that was to be given about that time.

Hofmann's Recitals

Hofmann will unquestionably attract the same large audiences he did on his previous visit, when he created such enthusiasm that people stood up and cheered after many of his numbers. The seats for the concerts are now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, where complete programs may be obtained. Among the numbers for Tuesday night are the "Waldstein" sonata by Beethoven, a group of five Chopin numbers, the tremendous "Don Juan" fantasia by Liszt, "Through the Clouds," by Josef Hofmann, and other important numbers. For Thursday night we are promised Schumann's Carnevale, Beethoven's sonata op. 22, some old numbers of Rameau and Couperin, and numbers by Chopin, Tschaikowsky and others. At the Saturday matinee the special features will be two works by Josef Hofmann, a fine group of modern Russian works, Chopin's beautiful B minor sonata and the Liszt arrangement of Wagner's Tannhauser overture. #### Fannie Francisca's Success

San Francisco has probably given more musical artists to the stage than any other American city of its size. In the very front rank of these must be placed Fannie Michaelson, who has patriotically taken unto herself the euphonious cognomen of Madame Francisca. Almost unheralded, she won every one by her beautiful voice at her first concert given at the Alhambra last week. A woman of imposing appearance and delightful personality, her manner attracted the audience from the first. Her voice has the same delicious quality as Sembrich's and Melba's, though her range does not seem to be as extensive as that of those better-known song-birds. The program was a difficult one and gave a splendid idea of the singer's wonderful control and versatility. The mad scene from "Lucia" was in a few respects the most remarkable rendition ever heard here. Madame Francisca's staccati and trills are wonderful and she made free use of them in this selection. She had sung but a phrase or two when it became obvious that it was very difficult for her to refrain from acting the part. She has sung so long in opera that the concert stage must seem a very limited scope for her talents. As a ballad singer Madame Francisca is not so successful—especially in English ballads. Her rendition of Liza Lehmann's "Cuckoo," however, was charming. Melville Ellis accompanied sympathetically, and showed himself to be a clever pianist in two numbers by Schytte and Faure. Louis Newbauer assisted, with his flute. The suite for flute and piano was well done.

At the Alhambra this afternoon Madame Francisca will give her farewell recital, for which there is a big demand for seats.

An Italian Entertainment

The Societa Dante Alleghieri, formed for the diffusion of Italian speech and culture, gave a most enjoyable entertainment at Steinway hall on the twenty-second, the date being chosen to commemorate the entrance of the Italian army into Rome in 1870. An eloquent oration was delivered by Signora Tedeschi, followed by Austin Lewis in English. Signorina Agathe Normani, lyric soprano and pupil of Professor Paolo La Villa, rendered "Regnavi nel Silenzio" and the Polacca from "Mignon" superbly. She is a singer gifted with a fine voice, which she uses after the pure Italian method, her trills and scales being especially noteworthy. Professor Marcellini played some violin solos and Signor Ghisi recited Carducci's "Canto dell Amore." The unique feature of the program was a one-act comedy from the pen of Max Fanzi, an extremely clever young man of the local colony. It was entitled "Confetti Cannonate" and the action took place in Rome, 1870. Signor Fanzi appeared with much success in the principal role. Signora Fanzi-Mussini accompanied the piece with patriotic airs. The program of the evening was well chosen and most successfully carried out, and the future entertainments of the Dante Alleghieri Society will be looked forward to with much interest. Our Italian colony can boast of an array of uncommon and versatile talent.

Miss Agathe Normani will give a concert during October under the auspices and for the benefit of the Pacific hospital.

The Dolmetschs

One of the features of the coming season will be Mr. and Mrs. Dolmetsch and Miss Katharine Salmon in their unique concerts on ancient instruments. These artists give programs of the old masters on the original instruments such as the harpsichord, virginal, viola d'armour, viol de gamba, etc. The programs are charming and attract not only the music lovers but all who are interested in the poetry and arts of the sixteenth century.

Mrs. Lizzie Chamot, Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Miss Sadie A. Uafer, Miss Alice Dunn and Miss Mabel Vanderhoof, active members of the Pianistic Club, will give a testimonial concert to their director, Richard A. Lucchesi, Friday evening, October fourteenth, at the United Crafts and Arts building. Miss Christine La Baraque, the talented blind soprano, who has studied with Mr. Lucchesi for the last three years, will make her farewell appearance on this occasion previous to her departure for the East.

At the next open meeting of the Adelphean Club, Alameda, in connection with Miss Tisdale's talk on "Six Spanish Cities," Miss Helen Swayne, the soprano, will sing a Spanish bolero, Frank Figone, the basso, will sing the Armourer's Song from "Robin Hood," and Miss Carrie Sheuerman, Hugo Mansfeldt's pupil, will play Chopin's etude in E minor and a Liszt polonaise.

At Zinkand's tonight the orchestra will again be under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Stark, who is back at home again after his annual visit to Colorado Springs. Stark's welcome home is sure to be warm and sincere.

Fritz Kreisler, by many considered the most important of the violinists, will pay his first visit to the coast this season under Greenbaum's management.

Sousa opens at the Alhambra October twelfth.

C. E. Mathewson, local manager for the Diamond Rubber Company, left for the factory at Akron, Ohio, on the seventeenth. Mr. Mathewson was summoned East to attend a meeting of the branch managers of the company. He will be away over a month, stopping at St. Louis and Denver on his return trip. Mr. Mathewson has a brother in Denver who is in the automobile business and he will remain a week there.

W. B. Grow, an enthusiastic automobilist of Marysville, has been spending several days in this city, and last week purchased an Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

A. E. Joy, of Watsonville, returned to his home from San Francisco on Saturday last, via Hollister, in his Winton touring car, accompanied by Carl Christensen and wife. The party spent several days in and around San Francisco and in all traveled over three hundred miles without a single disagreeable hitch. The big car arrived at Watsonville on time.

J. H. Durst, the hop grower of Wheatland, is now in San Francisco and purchased an Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car from the Pioneer Company, in which he will make an extended trip through the northern counties of the State.

Mr. La Berge is now the possessor of an Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car which he last week purchased from the Pioneer Company.

After a careful examination of the different makes of automobiles on the coast, Professor Bailey, the well known mining engineer and scientist, who is connected with the Government Geological Survey Department, purchased an Oldsmobile run-about from the Pioneer Company, in which he intends to make a fifteen hundred mile trip, running to Los Angeles and thence to Death Valley.

The Winton Quad has added seven hundred and fifty miles to its record during the past week. In an interview with H. T. Kutzkau, the chauffeur in charge of the machine, he states that during all the time he has driven the machine he has not spent thirty minutes' time in adjusting the machinery.

Information has been received by the Pioneer Company from the J. Stevens Arms and Tool Company, to the effect that the entire output of their factory for 1904 has been disposed of. The 1905 model will be ready for delivery at an early date. The 1905 Stanhope will be practically the same as the 1903 and 1904 models. The Stevens people will manufacture a four-cylinder machine also, but are not ready, at the present moment, to give out detailed information.

The Mobile Carriage Company is in receipt of information from the George N. Pierce Company, builders of the four-cylinder Pierce Arrow, that the first 1905 model with the thirty-four to thirty-eight horse-power engine, side entrance, and aluminum body, has been tested out and has met all expectations. These cars will reach San Francisco in December. Several advance sales have been made.

Dr. Ward, President of the Board of Health, took Mayor Schmitz Sunday as his guest for a ride in one of the doctor's Pierce Arrow machines, which he uses in his practice. The buckboard, as he calls it, is to run without the tonneau, being equipped with a large Rushmore searchlight. This machine he uses at night. Its headlight resembles an approaching warship.

As a result of absorbing the Automobile Transit Company, the Mobile Carriage Company has increased its board of directors from five to seven. The members of the present board are J. A. Marsh, Livingston Jenks, C. K. Harley, H. C. Tilden, C. L. Tilden, Henry H. Davis and Frank E. Hartigan. Mr. Hartigan, in addition to being on the board of directors, will be the general manager of all of the interests of the Mobile Company.

The new 1905 model White touring car has already made a big hit in the East, and local motorists are anxiously awaiting its arrival in this city. One of the latest purchasers of the White steam auto is the amateur "Motor King," William K. Vanderbilt.

During the recent army manoeuvres in the East, Major-General H. C. Corbin, U. S. A., had at his disposal, and used constantly during the manoeuvres at Manassas, three of the new 1905 White steam touring cars. Among some of the prominent officers who were occupants of the White cars during the manoeuvres were: Captain Stuart (Canadian), Major Williams (English), Col. Altamira (Mexican), Major Von Etzel (German), Col. Monte Verde (Spaniard) and Col. Azizibay (Turkish). In discussing the practicability of automobiles for army purposes, Major-General Corbin said: "The usefulness of the White steam cars has been fully demonstrated—in fact, they seem to be able to do everything except climb a tree; I am so enthused regarding their performance at these manoeuvres that I feel that they would almost do that. The roads in this section of the country are the worst I have ever seen, but it does not seem to bother the cars in the slightest. This morning for the final battle my staff left at five o'clock for the Stone House, where I was to secure my horse later. I left my headquarters at six o'clock, three hours behind my staff, and notwithstanding the exceptionally bad character of the road, arrived at the Stone House before my staff. Several automobile concerns were invited and accepted the invitation to have their machines participate in these manoeuvres, but the White steamers seem to be the only ones that were not scared off by the bad roads. Germany and France have adopted to some extent automobiles for army purposes, such as for carrying despatches, etc. From the rapidity with which I personally have been able to move from point to point during the present manoeuvres, owing to the use of the machines at my disposal, there is little doubt about their utility for quick army transportation purposes. The changeable gear which is attached to the White car enables one to ascend a hill as quickly as running on level ground. This is a feature and a good one."

H. D. Rucker of Portland, Oregon, made a remarkable run in his White steam touring car, covering two hundred and forty-six miles in eighteen hours and forty minutes and using just twenty-one gallons of gasoline.

H. J. Goethe of Sacramento came to the city Monday and purchased from the Rambler Automobile Agency one of their model L touring cars.

Dr. J. M. Forest and F. P. Peterson, both of this city, are late purchasers of Rambler touring cars.

Calvin C. Eib, of the Rambler Automobile Agency, has returned from the country after having consummated several sales and reports a prosperous future for the Rambler.

A. B. Costigan and W. R. Densmore of Detroit, Mich., with a party of gentlemen including Dr. J. L. Benepe, A. H. Martin and Mr. McBride, all enthusiastic automobilists, made a very successful run last Sunday to Del Monte in the four-cylinder model L Packard which made the record from Los Angeles to San Francisco a little over a week ago.

A carload shipment of four-cylinder Packard cars left Detroit on the nineteenth of September and will arrive at the Pacific Motor Car Co.'s garage in less than two weeks.

Letters

Anent Henry James

Speaking of Mr. Henry James' felicity in selecting titles to his novels, W. L. Alden suggests that the enterprising London firm which besieges authors with its circulars offering to puff patrons by publishing paragraphs concerning them might do better if they offered to supply taking titles. One of the most original uses that book-titles have been put to was the device of Francis Lynde, who utilized the title of some well-known volume for the chapter headings of "The Grafters." Anent the late returning of Mr. James to the land of his nativity, Mr. Alden remarks that in spite of his long residence in England he has grown more and more American in his appearance, until today no one could doubt for a moment his New England origin. There is a story that some years ago Mr. James occupied apartments in one of the "mansions" of De Vere Gardens, near Kensington Palace. His apartments were the highest up, and his favorite time and place for writing, early morning, on a little balcony, which he shared with the cage of a shrieking parrot. The parrot never seemed to occasion any annoyance, but late in the season, when the grooms took to exercising the horses in the street in the early part of the day, the author developed a disposition like unto that of Tammie Carlyle, and both hard words and flower pots were hurled down upon them, until they desisted, when the writing was taken up once more.

What He Meant

There seems to be a deal of discussion over what Kipling meant by his story, "They," published in the current Scribner. It would be very hard to explain that, for those who do not understand are lacking in one of the senses without which comprehension is impossible. Incidentally it is an answer to Gertrude Atherton's diatribe. She wants to know why magazine literature is commonplace and bourgeoisie, and here is her reply—because the average reader is bourgeoisie and commonplace. There is just about as much discussion of the morals of the characters of this little jewel as there was over Rosalie of Gilbert Parker's "Right of Way," and with precisely the same reason. A blind woman whose intense love of children has called about her the spirits of little ones dead cannot be permitted to indulge her fancy without being brought to book for her "immoralities." There are some things which do not yield to explanation. Those who can understand them can; those who can't, can't, and even the old joke of knocking a hole in their skulls to admit light would not avail.

The Jorio Tribe

Gabrielle d'Annunzio is in a condition of red wrath. Not long ago he produced a tragedy which he called "The Daughter of Jorio," and which proved a great success—so great that it attracted the attention of Scarpetta, the Neapolitan comedian, who immediately announced the approaching production of "A Son of Jorio." This was more than the flesh and blood of d'Annunzio could stand and he remonstrated, only to be met with the pertinent inquiry as to whether he had a copyright on the whole Jorio family, and why the son should not be written about and acted as well as the daughter. Then followed some lively correspondence, all of which found its way into the Italian papers, in which "the father of 'The Daughter of Jorio,'" as they have taken to designating d'Annunzio, lost his temper, and "the father of 'The Son of Jorio,'" (Scarpetta), managed to get a lot of amusement, until finally, the "father of the Daughter" invoked the aid of the law to suppress "the father of the Son," and there the matter rests at present. In the meantime, there is a chance for some one to bring forward the rest of the Jorios.

Some of the points that will be considered at the coming copyright convention at Marseilles are the protection of engineering and architectural works, historical articles, photographs and music, and the question of the right of translation in those localities where several languages are spoken.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's "Youth of Washington" will soon be published in book form. It would not appear possible, at first glance, that there could be anything new to write on this subject, but Dr. Mitchell has certainly succeeded in making the "Father of his Country" something more of a human being than has been done before. Incidentally, also, he has removed Mrs. Mary Washington from her pillar, and shown her to have been an ordinarily faulty woman, and that the virtues of the immortal George were fostered more by his brothers and his association with Lord Fairfax. Dr. Mitchell makes his biography take the form of the reflections and recollections of Washington, an old man, looking back upon the stirring events of his youth, and beside it the swashbuckling Revolutionary romance is a negligible quantity.

Some time ago it was given out that George Moore intended to call his new novel "General Life." Now he comes forward to disclaim ever having considered so commonplace a title. The book is to be named "The Lake," which, to the uninitiated, compelled to make some sort of a guess from the title alone, is just as commonplace and uninspiring as the other.

Jessie Juliet Knox of San Jose will have a volume of juvenile stories out in time for the holiday trade. It is to be called "Little Almond Blossoms," and as far as one may judge by advance notices, seems to be about Chinese children.

Anna Strunsky is passing a few weeks at Agna Caliente, where she is engaged in writing a book.

Alice Prescott Smith's new novel will soon be published by Houghton, Mifflin and Company. Her first, "The Legatee," had a great vogue a year ago last spring. Mr. and Mrs. Smith passed the summer in the East.

Margaret Cameron Lewis intended to come to this coast but decided not to do so.

Gertrude Atherton is in Munich engaged in writing another novel dealing with German life, but with Americans scattered here and there to give it interest on this side. —The Bookworm.

Plaintiff.

CHARLES W. BAIRD,

Defendant.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to:

CHARLES W. BAIRD, Defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, upon the ground of defendant's willful desertion of plaintiff for the period of more than one year continuously, next immediately preceding the date of the commencement of this action, and also upon the ground of defendant's failure to provide for plaintiff the common necessities of life he having the ability so to do, for the period of more than one year continuously next preceding the date of the commencement of this action; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the Complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 5th day of August in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and four

Other People's Ideas

From "The Helpers," by Francis Lynde:

When one has sown the wind, and the whirlwind harvest has begun, it is easy to imagine that the first few strokes of the sickle have gathered in all the bitterness there is in the crop.

It is one of the little martyrdoms of sympathetic souls to invite confidences, and thereby to suffer vicariously for the misdoings of the erring majority.

We are compassionate and charitable in the aggregate, but as individuals we are very unmerciful.

The man who allows his friend to help him in any crisis of his own making should at least be able to give bond for his good behavior.

There is reason to suspect that Shakespeare never went hungry, else he wouldn't have said "sweet are the uses of adversity." They are not sweet; they are damnably bitter. A man may come forth of the winepress with bones unbroken and insight sharpened to the puncturing point; but his capacity for evil will be increased in just proportion.—(Lansdale).

A PLEASANT LAXATIVE
NOT INTOXICATING

I've heard of people who could read your thoughts better than you could think them. (Myra.)

There is a limit to human endurance, and the hardest soldier may find it on a field as yet no more than half won. Fastings and fierce hurrys, wounds, physical and spiritual, and ruthless determination may ride rough shod over Nature's turnpike. But Nature will demand her toll.

With every embrasure gunned and manned the fortress of this life must always be pregnable on the human side; on the last resort one must trust something to the chance of loyalty in the garrison.

It is one of the compensations of man-to-man friendships that they ignore absences and bridge intervals smoothly—uncoupling and upeoupling again with small jar of accounting for the incidents of the lacuna.

There is no such vindictiveness in the world as that which dates back to benefits forgot.

From "The Battle of the Strong," by Gilbert Parker:

It is an eventful moment, a crucial ordeal for a woman, when she forces herself to see the naked truth concerning the man she has loved, yet the man who has wronged her. She is born anew in that moment: it may be to love on, to blind herself, and condone and defend, so lowering her own moral tone; or to congeal in heart, become keener in intellect, scornful and bitter with her own sex and merciless towards the other, indifferent to blame and careless of praise, intolerant, judging all the world by her own experience, incredulous of any true thing. Or again she may become stronger, sadder, wiser; condoning nothing, minimizing nothing, deceiving herself in nothing, and still never forgiving at least one thing—the destruction of an innocent faith and a noble credulity; seeing clearly the whole wrong; with a strong intelligence measuring perfectly the iniquity; but out of a largeness of nature and by virtue of a strong sense of duty, devoting her days to the salvation of a man's honor, to the betterment of one weak or wicked nature.

As a mere matter of statistics, there is no doubt that a couple of talkative people can easily "talk off" ten thousand words in an hour, which is about equal to eight columns of an ordinary big daily paper, and they are not conscious of making any great effort. It is manifestly possible to say a great many things in eight columns of a newspaper, especially if one is not very particular about what one says.—F. M. Crawford.

You women are all alike. You banter and hector and badger us until we are angry with you, and then you magically entice us back into your hearts—Aunt Jane's Hero, Prentiss.

Hearst Making News

If Mr. Hearst still nurses his political ambition he should retire from journalism. While conducting newspapers he is always doing things to stir the wrath of his rivals on the editorial tripod, and as a consequence they are always lying in wait for a whack at his mazzard. To improve his political chances he should cultivate the press, and he cannot do that in the role of a newspaper proprietor while cursed with a fatal ambition to set the pace for his contemporaries. He is always doing big things in violation of the ethics of the profession. Witness, for instance, his latest freak—booming the business of the Californian prune and raisin growers without charging them a cent. Contemptuous of high precedent, he has divorced the editorial and business departments of his papers. His business managers are in tears, seeing not a cent come in over the counter for valuable space devoted by irresponsible editors to the advertising of the products of a lot of farmers. It is by such unworthy tactics that Mr. Hearst perpetuates the scorn of newspaper proprietors who know how to conduct their journals on business principles. At the same time he demonstrates the value of his own advertising mediums, a most grievous offense against the peace and dignity of his contemporaries. It is his knack for doing such things that enables Mr. Hearst to retain the prestige of his papers despite the indiscretions into which he is led by his political ambition. From a newspaper standpoint the biggest and most important "stories" in San Francisco today are those arising out of the monstrous maladministration of the city government. If it were not for the obligations incurred by Hearst in the exploiting of his preposterous political ambition the Examiner would long since have utilized the material at hand in the City Hall in a way that would have aroused the whole State. But Hearst's hands are tied, and the city is the prey of shameless looters. Barred from handling the news, Hearst is at his old trick of making news. That is the art of which he is the past master. In booming the prune and raisin industry he is making news of vital interest to the whole State. But nothing could be of greater interest than the awakening of the conscience of the people of this city, and the arousing of them to a sense of the cold-blooded villainy of the grafters who are today corrupting the morals and defying the decency of a supine and anaemic community.

The Statesmanship of Hoar

In the history of this country it would be hard to find a citizen who devoted his talents more conscientiously and zealously to the promotion of the nation's welfare than did George Frisbie Hoar, patriot, statesman and orator. Massachusetts may scarcely hope to fill the vacant chair in the United States Senate with a worthy successor of the man who spent a lifetime in the public service, and at whose death a great nation stood bereaved. George Frisbie Hoar was a man of high, commanding and intrepid spirit, a bright pattern of Christian virtue, an exemplar in all that makes for good citizenship, an intellectual giant whose integrity stood firm against obloquy, adverse criticism and partisan expediency. His name is a synonym for probity. The correctness of his private life enhanced the dignity of his public character. Imbued with a strong sense of religious duty and a fervent desire to promote the interests of his country, the happiness of mankind ever concerned him more than the mere political advantages that might accrue from brilliant strokes of diplomatic strategy in furtherance of commercial achievement. His name will ever be associated with peace and freedom, with temperate reform, with mild and constitutional administration. He approved neither war nor arbitrary government. He was never misled by prejudice or passion. Born in the little New England town which cradled the nation's liberties, both by heritage and environment he had instilled into his character those elements of patriotism and probity which distinguished him throughout his eventful political career. He numbered among his contemporaries some of the most brilliant statesmen in American history, but he was at all times conspicuous among them for his independence and his fearless advocacy of policies which embodied his own convictions. As an orator he was distinguished for the soundness of his logic and his admirable mastery of his mother tongue. As the effect of oratory depends largely on the character of the orator, his eloquence was always impressive and convincing. It emanated the flavor of high moral qualities. His speeches were softened by the tenderness of a heart full of sympathy for human suffering and hatred of cruelty and injustice. He was a type of the statesmen who have been rare in every period of the world's history, and who earned the highest eulogiums of posterity for their patriotism, conservatism and devotion to the principles upon which depend the security of the state.

Simplicity at the Vatican

Though the pontificate of Pius X has extended only a little over a year, the erstwhile Patriarch of Venice, despite his insufficient preparation for the important duties that have devolved upon him, has taken a firm hold on affairs at the Vatican and shown clearly his purpose to make his administration conform with the principles of ancient simplicity. The spirit of evangelical simplicity that inspired the modest activities of the Patriarch of Venice animates the occupant of the Chair of Peter. It is apparent that he entertains no extravagant notions about the pomp, grandeur and vain display which in other times were believed to be essential to the dignity of the Holy See. In the practice of economy the first expenses ordered reduced were those of a ceremonial which is said to have prompted invidious comparison with the spectacle lar splendor of a Constantinople fete. On the anniversary of his coronation he is said to have stepped out of his "sedia," tired and displeased at being born like a Byzantine emperor on the shoulders of men "who are his brothers in Christ." It is evidently his purpose, while maintaining the prestige of the Vatican, to refrain as much as possible from political activity. He desires that political allusion be avoided in all matters pertaining to Church affairs. Recently he suppressed the organ of the Jesuits in Rome because of certain articles attacking France and Italy. When Queen Elena's first child was expected Leo XIII sent a circular to the Bishops relating to the possible birth of an heir to the House of Savoy. When recently an heir to the throne of Italy was expected a similar letter was looked for, but none emanated from the Vatican. Pius X saw no reason why he should repeat the act of his predecessor. He does not believe that the dignity of the Holy See will suffer from non-interference in political affairs that do not concern it directly. In the course of time, no doubt, the modest simplicity of the Vatican will be reflected in the affairs of the Catholic Church all over the world.

Political Catch-Phrases

Some statesmen have a great aptitude for the coining of catch-phrases that appeal to the mob rather than to reason. To that class belongs President Roosevelt, whose flamboyant nature scorns deliberation and accuracy. He loves to juggle with words in a way that produces pleasing sounds. As for instance when, in formulating his letter of acceptance he wrote: "A party fit to govern must have convictions." A very pleasing phrase, at first blush, but upon reflection it will appear that a party with convictions is not necessarily fit to govern. Convictions often spring from sophistry, and sometimes from a lively sense of self-interest. The Republican party has convictions that are far from creditable, and that render it unfit to govern in a manner consistent with the principles of the Constitution. The convictions of the Republican party were responsible for the failure of the majority in Congress to ratify the reciprocity treaties provided for in the Dingley Bill and consistent with the policies enunciated by Blaine and McKinley. It was in deference to the convictions of the Republican party that the majority in Congress prevented the investigation of frauds in certain departments of the government at Washington. President Roosevelt himself has convictions that are not conducive to good government, convictions that prompted Judge Parker to remark, "If we would retain our liberties and constitutional rights unimpaired, we cannot permit or tolerate at any time or for any purpose, the arrogation of unconstitutional powers by the Executive branch of our government." Mr. Roosevelt has convictions that have brought about a centralization of political power, and vindicated him in his own judgment in exercising monarchical functions. No doubt he has exercised those functions conscientiously and achieved results highly beneficial to the country, but unfortunately he has set a very vicious precedent that might lead to disaster.

Wiping Out The "Forbidden Lands"

Experts have figured out that it has cost the English Government about four million dollars to gain a foothold in Thibet. English journals think the stronghold is well worth the price of admission. Part of this sum will come back to businesslike Britain in the five hundred thousand dollars which the Thibetans have been fined for daring to defend their land and being so presumptuous as to oppose modern civilization as devised by England for heathen development. By the treaty of Lhasa, imposed on Thibet, English forces will establish a stronghold for three years in the Chumba valley, a hollow in the Himalayas affording an excellent vantage point to guard the southern portal to the country. With this foothold it will not be long, of course, before Britain opens up the country by building roads for her own use; those roads will naturally be used by travelers and traders, and by such means Thibet will be joined to the highways of the world and the "Forbidden Land" will be a thing of the past. Indeed, here gates were practically thrown open to the world last month when the British guns hammered them in. Again has the thin red line been the entering wedge that has opened up a barred and locked Asiatic country to the insistent, commercial West. The Russo-Japanese war has forever thrown down the fence hedging in Corea, and nothing remains in Asia to be "civilized" by the hungry leading powers except the buffer states and the fat Chinese empire. Jealousy is all that saves them. But like all the black and yellow skinned nations of Africa and Asia, they are to discover that commerce, in looking for a market, insists on invading all lands unless defended by a bigger gun than it commands.

The Everlasting Tolstoi Wail

Count Tolstoi is represented as being bowed down with grief because, in spite of his well-known sentiments against war, his sons have gone to fight for their country's battles. It makes a pathetic picture to fill the pages of the Sunday supps., but really, what would you have? It is late in the day to point to the superiority of example over precept. Count Lyof Tolstoi has been talking of peace for lo, these many years, but his attitude is that of one who is going to have peace if he breaks every head within reach to secure it. Nominally he opposes resistance, bloodshed and all the variations of disagreement. Theoretically, he is a sort of saint and martyr, passively suffering all things rather than set a bad example by resistance to any ill. In reality Tolstoi is one of the most aggressive and combative of men. He does not carry arms nor take part in street brawls, it is true, but if there is any question or situation on which he has not recorded his dissent from the accepted view, it must be because he has not heard the question. There is an apochryphal story of a newly-landed immigrant who was accosted, as he came down the gang-plank, and asked with which political party he affiliated with. "I d'know yet," said he, "but if yees have e'er a gover'mint, I'm agin' that." That is practically the attitude of Tolstoi. He is "agin" every one and everything but himself. He has a perpetual quarrel with religion, government, art, literature, the drama, the army, the navy and the educational system. He is at war with personal cleanliness, not to say neatness, as well as with the decencies of speech, and the patience with which he is tolerated both by the Russian Government, as well as by his neighbors, goes far towards nullifying stories of intolerance and despotism in the Czar's domain. It is well within the bounds of probability that Tolstoi has told his sons they must not bear arms, and much good has he done by it, when he has displayed so conspicuously the chip on his own shoulder, and paraded the perpetual challenge to "tread on me coat-tail." The love of peace is like his great charity, which consists in looking on at the struggles of the peasantry who are reduced to distress through the need of a few cents to purchase spades, rakes and other primitive articles of husbandry. Does the hand go under the theatrical peasant blouse to reach the fat pocketbook? Not much! There is an excellent opportunity for the poor to practice charity towards each other. Much as is written about the backwardness of Russia, the Tolstoi estate is actually behind the times even for that country. In the matter of drainage, water supply, fire protection and road making the example it sets is no better than that in ethical matters; but then, the "good count" is made fairly comfortable by the exertions of his wife and children. For the rest, it furnishes copy, both for him and for a horde of scribblers.

Suppressing Toadstool Authors

W. D. Howells is traveling in Europe, and it is said that his family, or such of them as have remained at home, are kept busy returning manuscripts of poems and stories which aspiring young authors have forwarded to him for criticism (or commendation). His address is kept secret but the writers are informed that it is not practicable to send their lucubrations to him and his absence is to be so prolonged that it would be unfair to retain them till he returns, a kindly softening of the "letting down" process. Doubtless Mr. Howells is annoyed by such solicitations. Every author is. Even the society penny-a-liner is besieged by others who want to "be taken on" and helped to earn pin-money, but in this particular case it is only chickens coming home to roost. Mr. Howells has been the greatest glad-hander of the century, with the possible exception of Gladstone. What an author, an editor, or even a candid friend should do when an attack of cacoethes scribendi makes its appearance is to gently but firmly discourage its development. There is not the slightest danger that budding genius will be suppressed. Incipient authorship is no more a symptom of genius than incipient stage-fever indicates great histrionic talent. Generally the disease is wrongly diagnosed. It is restlessness, youthful conceit and unwise fostering in equal proportions. True genius cannot be discouraged. It will have its expression in spite of all the barriers placed before it. There is more danger of encouraging a two-penny talent into believing itself heaven-sent inspiration than there is in killing genuine power. Any embryo writer who can be turned aside by what an editor or an author says concerning his efforts either has not the capacity he imagined or else he lacks perseverance. At any rate he does not believe in himself and for that reason alone he will be weak and unconvincing. Mr. Howells himself preached an eloquent sermon on this very subject in his novel, "The Minister's Charge," but like other preachers, he has failed to follow his own rules of conduct.

The Bugbear of Heredity

A recent attempt on the part of a child to remove a whole family by poison has given a southern contemporary a chance to harp once more on the old string of prenatal influence, and to quote as another "awful example" the case of a child who showed tendencies to cruelty, traceable to the fact that its father was a butcher! The theory is that because the father was engaged in slaughtering animals for food, the child could not resist the temptation to slaughter his playmates for amusement. There might be some reason to make note of the circumstance if there were any evidence, statistical or otherwise, to show that the offspring of butchers preponderate amongst criminals with a tendency towards personal violence. The mere fact that the child's father was a butcher goes to prove nothing. In all likelihood it was an ordinary case of lack of discipline. Instead of allowing the youngster to make his father's means of livelihood an excuse for his bad temper, he needed some lively exercise superinduced by the application of a rod. This doctrine of heredity and prenatal influence has been carried to such an attenuated point that if one were to take stock in it there would be nothing to do but look on helplessly while the world went to destruction. Quite recently a professor in one of the medical colleges discussed the subject with great freedom. The meat of his discourse was that the prenatal theory is chiefly charlatanry and humbug. He stated in plain words that if pregnant mothers were so susceptible to momentary impressions, whether of sight or of contact—if their nerves were in such an excitable condition that they could mark or mar their unborn children, there is far better reason to assert that these deformities and stigmata would affect their own bodies. In cases where children are born deficient in the number of their limbs and the deformity is laid to some shock to the mother, he asked, and pertinently, it would seem, what becomes of the missing members, for if the child were originally designed perfect in form, the members must have been well developed at the time that they are popularly believed to have been eliminated; and finally, he inquired, what would be thought of the mental capacity of a botanist who would assert that analogous deficiencies found in flowers were attributable to the "nervous shock" experienced by the mother plant. Yet one theory is as plausible as the other. Undoubtedly children do inherit the characteristics of their ancestry, and undoubtedly, also, a large amount of what is conveniently laid at the door of heredity and prenatality is the outcome of imitation on the part of the child and "let-it-alone" discipline on the part of the parents. It is so much easier to blame the grandfather than to correct the grandchild. If it is true that the father having been a butcher furnishes the excuse for the son to be a murderer, how did it happen that every family could not boast of a murderer in the days when, to use the old phrase, every household "killed its own meat?" We badly need a resurrection of the old doctrine of personal accountability.

weeplful wail amongst the second-rate English authors because the Americans are crowding them in the home field and even invading the colonies, American books having built up an appreciable sale in far away Australia. An old literary magazine, dated six years ago, contains a lament from the American authors that they have no show at all beside their British cousins. They complain that American royalties ran from ten to fifteen per cent while those of England ranged from fifteen to twenty-five. With the colonial market to depend on in addition, the British author could afford to sell his American rights at a sum which left competing American authors the sorry alternative of either accepting starvation prices or going at something else for a livelihood. It is always to be noted the first-class writers take no part in these lamentations except to express their sympathy for their wailing brothers. If there really is any ground this time for the English complaint, it cannot be laid to the treatment which American books receive at the hands of the British reviewer; for, with a few exceptions, they do not seem to be able to catch the point of view of American authors. If a situation is not such as is to be met with near the Strand, it is very apt to be condemned as too improbable; and if the author expresses himself in the vernacular which the subject demands, that settles it. It is all one whether it be Will Irwin's "Picaroons," or whether Merwin's lake smugglers, or Wister's cowboys hold the centre of the stage. American authors who do not use the English of Piccadilly and Mayfair seem unintelligible to most English critics. Now, over here, we manage to make a tolerable guess at the Essex dialect in Hardy and the Dartmoor of Phillpotts. The "kailyard" fictionists had no cause to complain of a cold reception, and J. J. Beal is encouraged to come again in spite of his Edinboro Scots. When a writer has anything worth publishing, there is no doubt but what he will find a satisfactory audience. When it is only a choice between mediocrities, it is a good thing that Americans have been cured of their predilection for cheap lords and questionable ladies. The average reader was in just as good position to check up probabilities as was the small boy with his old-fashioned yellow-back dime novel to gauge his chances of becoming a great Indian exterminator.

New Views on The Growing Handicap Marriage

Marriage still ranks as the human knot that everlastingly baffles the race. Bishop Potter has just launched one of his most emphatic protests against divorce on the ground that it will surely drag us back to barbarism, and now comes Mrs. Craigie with the intrepid declaration that woman's unselfishness is the growing handicap to marriage. Her philippic is directed against those who declare that woman's increasing selfishness and extravagance are responsible for race suicide and domestic unhappiness. Mrs. Craigie's attack is at once vehement, bold and forceful. She insists that where women's feelings are in question they are not selfish enough. She holds that it is the suicidal unselfishness of the woman which makes the selfishness of the modern bachelor possible. Bachelors are not all misogynists, and the fact that a man remains unmarried is no proof that he is insensible to the charms of woman's companionship. Then Mrs. Craigie comes straight to the point: "Why should the average vain young man, egotistic by organism and education, make sacrifices for any particular woman while so many are too willing to share his life without joining it? Modern women give bachelors no time to miss them, no opportunity to need them; their devotion is undisciplined and becomes a curse rather than a blessing to its object. It is quite true, also, that any young unmarried man in quest of ornamental or picturesque appointments is discouraged by his superiors and boycotted by their wives; they are not content to remain with other young couples of their own status, and they confuse the yearnings of snobbery with honorable ambition. On the other hand, a large number of men and women are constitutionally unwilling to marry, not because they are selfish, vicious or incapable of affection or shirk responsibilities, but because they lack overmastering impulse; they will not accept compromise. Sometimes they meet their loves too late, and their fate is tragic. All fates are not domestic, and if some find sorrow in marriage, others find it in singleness; some not anywhere, and, isolated, live serenely enough, contented with mild friendships and no human ties." George Meredith, who is credited by his admirers with unequalled powers of analyzing the human heart and motives, is likewise to the fore with a new suggestion to solve the domestic riddle. He declares that marriages for forty years, forty hours or forty minutes, at the option of the contracting parties, is the panacea. Foreseeing complications as to children, he turns them over to the State, which is to care for their education out of a fund to be provided for that purpose. Like other iconoclasts he makes no provision for the conflict of obligations and social bewilderment certain to follow such an arrangement. This novel system may be George Meredith's humorous way of handling a lance in the great controversy. And so the vivisectionists in art, literature and the pulpit analyze the product turned out unremittably by the minister and the divorce court, and the great unperturbed human race continues carelessly and amiably upon its way doing pretty much in marriage as it always has done.

Plundering the Heathen

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

And the Lord gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required: and they spoiled the Egyptians.—EXODUS XII: 36.

It is announced in a recent despatch from New Haven that the missionary section of Yale University has accepted forty thousand dollars "blood money" from the British Government, or, as it is described in the euphonious phrasing of diplomacy, "indemnity paid by the Chinese Government during the Boxer insurrection for the murder of two English missionaries."

This money was offered to the China Inland Mission and refused. Then it was offered to the Chinese Government who, with fine sarcasm, declined to receive it. Finally it was given to the American association. There is no evidence that the Yale missionaries asked for the money or that they sorrowed deeply to see this pariah "indemnity" begging for shelter from chapel to yamen—wasting its possibilities on the desert air of heathendom. We only know that the Yale missionaries accepted the money and propose to use it for building a foreign missionary college at Chang-sha. With the "few remaining bricks," no doubt, the missionaries will erect "humble cots" similar to those in the Presbyterian and the Methodist compounds of Peking; or, if the architecture is in accordance with the Yale taste, like the stone bungalows of Kuling, the Italian villas of Ching-kiang and Wuhu; or the Swiss chalets of Pei-tai-ho.

It has long been established in the computation of life values in the Far East that a dead missionary is more valuable than one who lives and has his being. The live missionary is a continual expense, and it is only when he is killed by a Chinese mob, that he becomes a pecuniary asset in the missionary market. At home these missionaries could not earn an average of fifty dollars a month in any business. They could not even compete with the native grafter. In China, however, they have no difficulty in enriching themselves while living, and when martyred they invariably enrich all with whom they are in any way related.

Imagine the early Christians of Rome demanding "indemnity" from Nero for the "martyrs" that were torched by that implacable tyrant and flung to the lions to add sanguinary zest to the gayety of a pagan holiday! When the Italian Government demanded indemnity from the United States for the murder of Italian citizens by a mob of Americans during a riot in New Orleans several years ago, the price finally fixed did not exceed one thousand dollars per corpse. If the Italian Government had been dealing with the Chinese Government they would have demanded and received twenty thousand dollars for each dead man. When indemnities for the Boxer outbreak were finally awarded the Italians received twenty-six million six hundred and seventeen thousand and five Haikwan taels, each tael worth in American money about seventy-four cents. Of this amount the wife of the Italian Minister received two hundred thousand dollars for diamonds which she said she had lost. It was the first information that the world received that the wife of the Italian Minister had any diamonds worth appraising—in all the legation fetes and receptions the diamonds of the wife of the Italian Minister had sparkled dimly in the glitter of the jewels on the wives of other Ministers. Moreover, it is a mystery unsolved to this day why the wife of the Italian Minister did not take her diamonds with her when she fled from the Italian Legation to the British Embassy.

The Yale missionaries who have accepted this "blood money" will probably argue that twenty thousand dollars per dead missionary is a mere bagatelle in comparison with the price paid by China to Germany for the two missionaries alleged to have been killed by a Chinese mob in Shantung in 1898. The contention will be as logical as anything discussed in the theological seminary of Yale. It is true that the price paid for the British missionaries is as nickels to dollars when we compare it with the principal that Germany exacted from the Chinese for the two missionaries that disappeared in 1898.

Germany had long plotted in Peking for a slice of Chinese territory. Opposed by British and Russian influence at the capital the Germans were persistently denied and a colossal trick was resorted to for the purpose of gaining the diplomatic end. Two missionaries were sent into the interior of Shantung province expressly instructed to irritate and bullyrag the Chinese with their preachments of the Christian doctrine and their insults directed particularly at the ancestor worship of the natives and the memory of Confucius, whose birthplace and tomb are in this province. Riots were, of course, the consequence, and one day the missionaries disappeared. Coincidentally with the accusation that they had been murdered a small army of marines were landed from the German squadron at Kiaochow, and a demand for reparation preferred by the German Embassy against the Chinese Government. Even the British and Russian Ministers could not put the courage of refusal into the hearts of the Chinese and a treaty was signed giving Germany virtual control of a province nearly as large as California.

It was never proved that the German missionaries were massacred as had been charged. The bodies were never produced, and the Chinese of Shantung have always denied that any white men were killed during the riots of that period. The Chinese also claim that they have indisputable evidence that the two missionaries said to have been "martyred" are at this moment living in fatted luxury in one of the missionary societies of Berlin. Then came the treaty—one version of which is in Chinese and the other in German. The Chinese rendering of the convention merely gives the Germans right of settlement on Kiaochow bay with certain restricted rights in two railroad concessions. The German interpretation of the treaty provides that "if at any time the Chinese should form schemes for the development of Shantung, for the execution of which it is necessary to obtain foreign capital, the Chinese Government, or whatever Chinese may be interested in such schemes, shall, in the first instance, apply to German capitalists. Application shall also be made to German manufacturers for the necessary machinery and materials before the manufacturers of any other Power are approached."

And we of America are "strenuously" contending for the "open door" in China! It is safe to say that there will be no open door in Shantung as long as these robber Germans can maintain this forged treaty. It is because a final victory by the Japanese would wipe this treaty from the blue books, that Germany is so eager for the success of

Russia. If the Japanese are permitted to control the policy of China this great political crime would not only be exposed in all its hideous proportions, but the criminals would be forced to yield their plunder.

The seizure of Shantung in reprisal for the unproved murder of two German missionaries was one of the direct causes of the Boxer uprising in that province. The other causes were the aggressions of other missionaries in North China.

Things Outgrown

BY HARRY COWELL.

When I was a child, I spake as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child; now that I am become a man, I have put away childish things.—Paul.

The life of man is bounded by uncertainties. "We are not sure of sorrow, and joy was never sure." And awhile back I fell in with a centenarian who had begun to have doubts of death. Yet of one thing existence gives us every assurance: Despite the fact that not infrequently Monotony makes the vault of heaven a vast sarcophagus and we beneath it already of the number of the dead, we may rest assured of Change; and change in ourselves, whether it be from childhood to manhood or from bad to worse, we are ever pleased to call growth. Not only does the I that now is differ from each one of the infinity of I's that link us with homogeneous babyhood, but it is, I would have you understand, my good sir or madam, a bigger and better I that has of necessity outgrown things innumerable. Men, I may say in passing, have banked upon the vanity of man.

This "now that I am become a man" is the prologue to many a tragedy; have you not found it so, fellow-subjects of sovereign Change? To grow pari passu with our friends is not given to all of us. A pair of young lovers travel awhile side by side along the same road, but, as Fate will have it, bound for different destinations. Before long—at five and twenty, say—the road forks; at thirty, they are still, it may be, within hailing distance of each other; at forty, they are a hundred miles apart. And how, I pray you, Sir Moralists, are they who speak as children, and feel as children, and think as children, to foretell the forking of the road? Certain poor relations of ours, quadrumanes, came with us no short bit of the great journey—what fitted us fitted them—but man has forever and a fraction thereof outgrown the monkey's way of life. Here's a tale Mistress Wind, the most inveterate of gossips, once told me. You will take it for what you think it worth: "Somewhere, somewhere, in the distances, two simple cells found themselves in juxtaposition and enjoyed it. (This last the wind whispered in my ear); and each promised the other, or rather, each promised itself—sex was then but dimly dreamed of—an eternity of such bliss. In the course of time, however, one came to be a man, the other a snow-alga." And the wind went off laughing and crying together, leaving me to wonder what might be the exact moral or immoral of the story.

A smile and a tear, say I, for things outgrown, but no scorn; and for the strange little fellow, my outgrown self, whom once these curious garments fitted to perfection, a smile and a tear also, and no scorn. By some quaint, infelicitous association of ideas, my first love and my first pair of long trousers tend to suggest the one the other. Both I outgrew in next to no time. Inconstant? Yes; but you surely don't blame me for not remaining faithful to my first ——— fill in the blank to suit yourself; to go wrong is impossible. Dear Rosalind, Leonora, Annabel, or whatever your beautiful name; precious pants whose cut and color have now passed beyond recall: long ago I outgrew both, as I have said; and when in fancy I put my present self in the old relation to you, the picture strikes me as being not a little incongruous, and yet I laugh not. What things in this sorrowful world have once been to us a source of great joy ought to be forever sacred; so are you sacred to me.

To make a football team, to do the hundred in ten and a fifth, to win a trophy in a tennis tournament—these and many the like trifles were once matters of tremendous moment to a me that is no more. It is with feelings of surprise, superiority, and I know not what, that he see our old ambitions—garments of youth outgrown—on the backs of the poor. We reread without a single heart-throb a book-love of our childhood, and lay it down in disgust, exclaiming: "And to think that I spent sleepless nights because of that!"

At times—the mood is ever master of my eyes—the world appears to me in the guise of a school-boy wearing an outgrown belief; and it then looks, I am forced to confess, very ridiculous indeed. "Poor fellows!" I say to myself, thus restraining my laughter, "he must surely be an orphan." We are forever coming across little breeches of belief, rags and tatters of thought, that once kept the world warm. Greece we do not easily outgrow; we are still, so to say, too small for her beauty; but in science the unlettered gamins of our streets could give lessons to the greatest of Athenians. That unmistakable geniuses should have held it truth, this monstrous proposition or that, seems scarcely credible, in spite of their own unquestionable testimony; and yet, some day, doubtless, much of our own mind-wear will seem at best absurdly small to a grown-up world. "Did that fit me once?" the world will ask, incredulously, holding up a ridiculous little idea; and it will smile as you have smiled, as have I.

When we have finally put away friend or more than friend as a childish thing which we have outgrown (not "grown away from," mind you), we big folk have a sorry tendency to forget how deeply our little selves loved. Surely persons of such large discernment, such impeccable taste as we never went into ecstasies over so much wood and wax and tow! Thus have I heard ultra-Wagnerians swear with ten thousand "Banner-motiv" oaths that they "never really did care for Italian opera." I know a musician now wedded to Beethoven and Brahms — in art, thank God, we are not required to be monogamic — who, like many another, when a boy, had quite a serious love affair with Liszt. This he one day confessed to me in his cups.

Drunk or sober, he denies it "before company." In private, when in perfect control of his tongue, he never seeks to minimize the outgrown sentiment by referring to it as "a passing fancy," "a flirtation of the first of April," "belittling it in many a well-worn phrase and even becoming inventive to that end. Once in love with Liszt — nonsense! Well, when he was five years old, perhaps — a mere child. At ten, the thing could never have happened; etc.

What, I have often wondered, were the thoughts of Turgenev's hero of "A House of Gentlefolk," him who loved Lisa, whom Lisa loved, as he looked upon the wife who had wronged him, but whom, faithful or false, he was fated completely to outgrow. Poor Lisa never knew — poor Lisa never does know — that it was not the man she loved, but another of the same name, who had once been the adoring husband of that worthless woman.

In what relation do I stand, pray tell me, to my countless little outgrown selves? What have I to do with the little likes and dislikes of these ancestors of mine? Surely no just Providence will ever saddle me with their sins. I, for my part, ask not of man or of God the least consideration on account of any virtues that may have been theirs. But without them I had never been: May they rest in peace.

Race Culture

BY THEODORE BONNET.

Under the luminous title, "The Risen Sun of Civilization," Professor L. Larkin utters an eloquent appeal for race-culture. And to that end he urges the institution of a permanent exposition in buildings of granite and steel to endure, "in which the entire people would be instructed and advanced beyond degree." A visit to the St. Louis Exposition inspired the appeal, for Professor Larkin was profoundly impressed with "the enchanting cascades," the "wilderness of pillars," the "wondrous statues, sculptures and dreams in plastic art." "Great is the mind of man!" exclaimed Professor Larkin, standing on the porch of Festival Hall, as he viewed the gorgeous splendor of the ephemeral spectacle. In the enthusiasm of the moment the eminent academician sat down, and like one in close touch with the Deity, to whom had been revealed the story of the Creation, wrote how man in the process of evolution emerged from microscopic bags of glue.

Great is the mind of Larkin enlightened by revelation! He scorns theory; his is the dictum oracular. Standing on the porch of Festival Hall he descried the sun of civilization just risen above the horizon, and he felt that it was rapidly approaching the meridian. Probably a similar thought entered the mind of the Chaldean when he opened an orifice in a water-jar on the morning of the equinox, just as he saw the upper limb of the sun cut the horizon, and who, as a result of his experiment that day, established the first unit of space and time. Perhaps, as Professor Larkin says, the mind of man is capable of unlimited expansion, but to what extent has it expanded since the men of Mesopotamia, in observing the orderly recurrence of phenomena in the stately progress of the heavenly bodies, laid the foundation of science and established the fundamentals of mathematics? With the lore of the ancients as a basis for investigation we have made much progress, civilization has developed, we have increased our store of knowledge, and aided by the results of earlier researches we have made new and important discoveries, but we have done little to warrant the conclusion that the human mind has evolved to a higher capacity for original effort than it enjoyed several thousand years before the Christian era.

In the slow development of man, according to Larkin, through millions of years, from the primitive protozoa to the crowning product of evolution—the human biped—there may have been intelligent design inherent in the thing itself undergoing development; or it may have merely obeyed unconsciously the laws of evolution. Or, perhaps the particles of protoplasm were endowed with instinct. It is hardly likely, however, that they availed themselves of the experience that went before, as man does now. It is more likely that they kept on blindly improving, but perhaps with the help of God, though Larkin does not say so.

But scientific discussion is not my purpose; I merely wish to observe that Professor Larkin was carried away with enthusiasm when he stood on the porch of Festival Hall, and viewed the brummagem splendor destined to fade away at the close of the exposition. That ephemeral scene is hardly such as to justify the conclusion that the mind of man can be expanded to any degree he may desire.

Rather is it evidence of his impotency, for despite his efforts at expansion along esthetic lines he has not succeeded in making much progress.

"The architecture," says the learned gentleman, under the intoxicating spell of the electrically lighted scene, "has not been surpassed in the entire history of the world," and then he tells us that it is a display of the splendors of the Dorians, the Ionians, the Corinthians and the Tuscans. In other words, it is mere testimony to the skill of modern artists in copying the work of the ancients, and perhaps of the mediæval geniuses. Professor Larkin might have noted that the skill of the copyists is not as great as that of the men by whom the designs expressive of their own perception of the beautiful in nature were executed.

From the stony pages of imperishable records scattered along the valleys of the Nile and Euphrates, and throughout Hellas, we learn that despite the progress of civilization and the expansion of the human mind, the art of the ancients is far from being surpassed nowadays. In the early centuries of the Christian era, under the influence of a spiritual and mystic religion that furnished the artist with the beautiful ideal, many masterpieces of art were contributed to the treasures of modern civilization, but in recent years of doubt and questioning the chisel and brush have been influenced to a great extent by old models. The artist whose models are expressions of his own thought, of his own perception of beauty arising out of his own environment, is a rara avis. This is a philosophic age and in such the fine arts have invariably degenerated. The reasoning spirit destroys the imagination. There are too many Professor Larkins in the world who think they know all about the evolution of man. It was only the other day that Professor de Vries undertook to smash the Darwinian theory into smithereens, and about a year ago that other eminent scientist, Lord Kelvin, expressed his contempt for the theory of a fortuitous concourse of atoms by declaring it to be utterly absurd to suppose that a crystal, a sprig of moss, a microbe or a living animal could be made by a number of atoms falling together of their own accord. A plague on all these pestiferous scientists who rob nature of her charms and lead weak minds into atheism! They all remind me of the words of Montaigne: "If nature should one day be pleased to reveal her secrets to us, oh heavens! what error, what mistakes shall we find in our paltry sciences."

Race-culture was promoted by the legislators of antiquity, but not by mixing art and science. Knowing that scientists perplexed their understanding, they discouraged abstract studies and lavished honors on artists. It was the Greeks who put Socrates to death. Many pointers in race-culture are to be obtained from the ancients. We have yet to learn the importance of the hereditary principle so clearly demonstrated in Egypt, where it was not uncommon for the profession of architect to be practiced in one family through a score of successive generations. It was in that country, under the influence of the world's oldest civilization, that the superior excellence of art is to be traced to genius accumulated by force of heredity, and where the art of building so as to give permanence and beauty was successfully cultivated from the earliest period of which there is any record. The fact is that we have made comparatively little progress in art, and what progress we have made in architecture has been in technical construction rather than in artistic design. We are like the Romans, who devoted themselves to modifications rather than to the development of new art. Like that purse-proud people, we are peculiarly unoriginal in art. We are practical and imitative. The Romans employed foreign geniuses to ornament their palaces. They imported artists as we import paintings. They patronized the art of others with a patronizing air.

We have not, by the way, even the ability to work in stone that the Egyptians enjoyed. Strangely inconsistent with the theory of evolution is the fact that man has forgotten more than he ever knew, so far as sculpturing is concerned. He has not managed to expand his mind sufficiently to ascertain how the men of Memphis handled the obdurate strata of nature's rocky bed. In their hands the hard and unyielding crystalline rock was as so much soapstone, which they carved and figured at will and perfect ease. How they achieved the marvelous results with the bronze chisels that have been discovered in their quarries and stone-yards no man at this late day knows.

Race culture is a great thing, but in a commercial, philosophic age, it is ridiculous to point with pride to the achievements of the modern plagiarists of the art world. Though the dust of centuries has settled on the ruins of the cities of the Tigris, Euphrates and Nile, enough remains of those ancient palaces and monuments to vindicate the great intellectual force of the people who built them and gloried in their splendor, and to prove the decadence of modern art if not the limitations of the human mind which, according to Locke, who had the temerity to differ from Larkin, are at so small a distance from us as to be alarming.

A permanent exposition such as advocated by Professor Larkin would be a great institution. Plaster palaces built for a day to give impetus to artistic taste, and develop appreciation of the beautiful, are not impressive. The grandeur of a work of architecture is in proportion to the sense of permanency that it imparts. However, the fleeting glories of a World's Fair are not without effect. The glories of the Chicago Exposition were soon reflected in the homes of people throughout the country. It was followed by an esthetic awakening. The old-style interior decoration of a tawdry and often vulgar character was soon succeeded by artistic ornamentation that had its inspiration in the displays made at Chicago, and in the discussions provoked during the exposition. The effect of that Fair was expressed in the agitations for Cities Beautiful that arose in all parts of the country; and a striving for individuality in architectural design was one of the many beneficent results of an artistic character. If the esthetic faculties could receive such stimulus from a transient show, how much more could be accomplished through a permanent institution!

Hunting Song

The yachtsman sings of the bounding waves
 And a life on the deep blue sea—
 Of a bark that bows to the crested surge,
 And the breath of the ocean free.
 But give me the dog that is keen on scent,
 And a gun that is tried and true,
 An-autumn day when the dawn wind stirs,
 And the woods that are steeped in dew;
 There is the sport that is best of all,
 In the light of the forest gray;
 For what can excel the keen delight
 Of hunting at break of day?

Let others sing of the trout that leap
 From the pools in the rippling brook,
 And the thrill of joy as the click-reel hums
 When the "good ones" rise to the hook.
 But sing me the song of the sylvan glades
 And the echoing shotgun call
 As it rings out clear on the autumn air,
 From the marsh to the low-ground wall;
 Ah, that is the song I love the best,
 And a song that is sweet alway—
 The song that breathes the autumn woods—
 Of hunting at break of day. W. T. O.

Now for Ducks

BY ROBERT MACE.

MISS ANITA C. HOSMER, After a day on Suisun Marsh.

This is the season of the year when the enthusiastic duck-hunter begins to feel a thrill in his veins and a sensation of restlessness that he cannot overcome. The fever is in his blood. His sleeping hours are disturbed by visions of wildfowl. He dreams of shooting into a flock of decoys, or falling out of a boat, or he fancies himself luring the large juicy birds to their death by calling to them in their own language. As the fifteenth of the month approaches his dreams grow more realistic and vivid. It is not unusual for him to cry out in his sleep as he sees a number of flocks pass out of range, refusing to be beguiled; or perhaps he almost smothers while holding his breath as a solidly massed flock attempts to pass directly overhead at a height of about thirty yards; steadily he follows the flight of a plump drake whose jet-black neck is sharply defined from the snow-white breast, and he swings his gun rapidly ahead, one—two—three feet, and the pressure on the side of his bed which he mistakes for the trigger increases until he stops circulation, and then, crack! the sound of the old gun awakes him, and much to his astonishment he finds that no death-dealing shot has cut short a worthy bird's career.

But the feverish duck-hunter will soon be in his favorite haunts on the Alviso and Alvarado marshes. You will soon see him wending his way to the ferry in attire suitable for roughing it, and loaded down with all the paraphernalia peculiar to his kind. You will meet him in bunches on the Oakland boat—going with a smile of anticipation on his countenance, or coming with a face eloquent of triumph or perhaps with something akin to disappointment in his demeanor.

But no matter what happens, you will find that the duck-hunter is an optimistic chap. His favorite pastime makes him so. He always has apologies on tap for the birds. He is always convinced that he had a good time. It is the salt air that exhilarates him. He thinks that it is the shooting but it isn't. A combination of salt air and nervous anticipation is a great tonic. Besides, he endures hardships that are diverting, and above all he gets his mind off business, and adds a new stock of stories to his repertoire. Every duck-hunter is skilled in the art of personal narrative, and it does no harm to indulge him. You have probably heard all his stories before, and he may bore you, but don't be impatient. There is nothing more stimulating to the imagination than hunting. In pictorial language inscribed on granite shafts the hunters of ancient Chaldea told whoppers about their exploits with wild animals, and the habit has been strong in the Aryan race ever since.

The Saunterer

The Dolbeer Case

Not since the Von Schroeder libel suit has there been such a flutter in society over impending developments in a court contest as that which resulted from the issuance of commissions to take testimony in the Dolbeer case. It is naturally repugnant to young women to become involved in a public controversy of scandalous import. Those who are most familiar with all concerned in the Dolbeer case do not look for sensational developments, but from the hints that were thrown out at the beginning it is likely that the contest will abound in vague suggestion and shadowy intimation. Lawyers with feeble cases have a habit of doing such things. Though I know nothing of the merits of the Dolbeer case, I am constrained to suspect from the circumstance of numerous witnesses being pressed into service at random, that the contestants are on, what is known to the courts, as a fishing excursion. They are exploiting every accessible pool in the hope of hooking a stray bit of evidence. At the beginning broad hints of a most sensational character were thrown out. It was intimated that the contestants would make a very startling showing when the case came to trial, and I have been told that the reporters of the dailies were advised to sharpen their pencils for the fray.

She Has The Confidence of Society

Litigants are frequently coerced into compromise by threats of "sensational developments." It is so easy to procure perjured testimony that even the innocent are affrighted at the prospect of being besmirched by slander. It is not for me to say that the relatives of Miss Dolbeer were not sincere in their promises of sensational disclosures, but it is to Miss Warren's credit that she had the courage to challenge scrutiny. At the same time I have no doubt that the attorneys for the contestants will, upon being convinced that they were misled, take the earliest opportunity to retract. I am of the opinion that they have already resolved upon a change of tactics and will content themselves with seeking to prove the insanity of the deceased. But society is on the qui vive owing to the rumors that have been in circulation regarding the character of proof that would be introduced. And the uninformed curious are wondering whether the depositions to be taken, of belles and matrons, will contain anything that accords with the insinuations that have been made. The probability is that the contestants will not even attempt to show that Miss Warren exercised any undue influence over her friend, for it appears that she knew nothing of the will. The testimony of society people is not likely to prejudice the case of the principal legatee, for they all feel that she was the devoted friend of Miss Dolbeer, and that all the wealth bequeathed to her does not compensate her for the loss that she suffered by the death of her patron.

Something To Society's Credit

Usually society is quick to elevate its ears when it is promised a little gossip about one of its number. And its attention is best gained by the promise that the gossip is not to the credit of the one whom it concerns. It has been ever thus. Society loves to learn that people are not just what they seem; to be disillusioned about virtue. Probably it is balm to society's conscience to learn that the mask is an article of universal usage. In view of this trait it is refreshing as it is remarkable that society takes no stock in the threats of the contestants of the Dolbeer will; that it is not envious of Miss Warren's good fortune, and is prepared to discredit any testimony that may be offered by way of disparagement.

Why He Left Town

It is a conceit of proud man to flatter himself that gossip is purely a feminine diversion, and that the female of his species is cursed with a constitutional predilection to tear the reputation of her sex to tatters, while he, superior mortal that he is, is blessed with a charitable inclination to safeguard character. How preposterous is that conceit one may learn by occasionally catching an echo of the gossip that gives zest to intercourse in clubdom. The other day I learned, for the first time, that a well-known clubman, who shook the dust of this city from his feet some months ago, was virtually hounded out of the community. Though his leave-taking was of a most graceful character, and the occasion though it was of considerable formality in which his friends joined to celebrate his worth, the fact was that he had been the victim of a cruel aspersion, and deemed it advisable to sever social connections of long duration. He was a member of a club boastful of its culture but in which there has been a great deal of gossip about members of a character similar to that which influenced his departure. Though he had many warm friends in the club they were not unwilling to give ear to the testimony of a man concerning an episode of a Bacchanalian revel. It is a peculiar perversity that prompts some men to give ear and circulation to stories affecting the vices of their friends; to give credence to distorted versions of incidents that might easily be misinterpreted, especially if the person under suspicion is afflicted with unfortunate mannerisms. It is somewhat singular that they should be forever expressing their repugnance for certain vices and their detestation of the unfortunates addicted thereto.

When Grafters Fall Out

With the "turning down" of the Belvedere proprietors it became apparent that discord had arisen among the graft promoters of the city government. Perhaps after awhile the grafters may fall out in a way that will enable the taxpayers to get a line on the men behind the main sack. Stranger things have happened. Convict stripes have adorned smarter men than those who are now shamelessly pursuing the predatory game in this city. The cupidity of the local graft barons has led them into such a variety of enterprises, and opened up illicit relations with such a large number of law dodgers that it would be surprising if the game were carried on indefinitely without an exposure of the players who are dealing from the bottom. A great deal of the graft is being carried on in a way that defies criminal prosecution, and though the methods of the thrifty have been exposed, tangible evidence of violations of the Penal Code has not yet been brought to light. But it is becoming apparent that the men at the head and front of the graft syndicate are compelled to go to the depths of their cunning to harmonize their tools and accomplices. Rumblings that portend an explosion are occasionally to be heard, and when one gauges the mental calibre of some of the beetle-browed politicians that are contributing to the scandals of this Administration one wonders that they have managed to keep out of jail so long.

Subservient Grand Juries

The Grand Jury appears to keep the dailies guessing. Grand juries have long been in disfavor in this city. It has long been the prevailing opinion that they served as instruments in the hands of political bosses for the protection of grafters and coercing of stubborn officials. Some weeks ago the dailies announced that Abe Ruef was in control of the present jury, but it seems that he has been unable to discourage investigation of the methods of Mayor Schmitz's commissioners. Though they have not yet indicted any public officials, neither have they been issuing clean bills of health. They seem to be eager to expose malfeasance and misfeasance in office. Since the indictment of one of the primary stuffers it has been charged that the jury is controlled by the enemies of Ruef. Perhaps before the jury completes its labors the dailies will take some other view of the matter. The jury has been hot on the trail of stuffers and perhaps if the good citizens representative of McNab's brand of Democracy were more zealous for pure politics than for mud-slinging at the opposition faction, evidence would have been procured which would have justified the indictment of a whole band of illegal voters.

Conlan's Nomination

Gavin McNab is a humorous fellow—as humorous as he is cunning. Last Monday he wrote an interview with himself for the Bulletin in which he expressed regret at his inability to prevent the nomination of Charles Conlan for Superior Judge. He knew that the nomination of Conlan would arouse great indignation, and he wished to avoid responsibility. So he prated about high ideals and the importance of keeping the judiciary clean. Chris Buckley used to do the same sort of thing years ago. It was a way he had of deluding people into the belief that the delegates had no strings on them, and that his candidates owed no allegiance to a boss. Conlan has been on the police bench for many years, and it would not be surprising to learn that in that time he had placed McNab under many obligations, for McNab is a lawyer, one of that class of practitioners who thrive off political prestige. Conlan would no doubt consent to being repudiated by McNab. But it is hard to believe that McNab could not have prevented the nomination. He controlled the Democratic convention, a fact that he demonstrated in the chairmanship contest. Without his consent it is improbable that Conlan would have sought the nomination.

Stone to Cortelyou

General George Stone, of the Republican State Central Committee, has informed me that I was in error in stating that he made a demand on the National Committee for funds with which to conduct the campaign in California. By way of convincing me that I had been misinformed he submitted a copy of the following letter addressed by him to Mr. Cortelyou on September first: "After carefully reviewing the situation in California, permit me to say that so far as the National ticket is concerned, you may relieve your mind of any anxiety as to the result in California. We will return the Roosevelt and Fairbanks Electors by a very handsome majority. There is danger of success in some of the Congressional Districts, yet I believe we shall elect a full delegation to the Fifty-seventh Congress. We shall ask for no financial aid from your committee, believing that such aid is needed far more in some of the Eastern States. I have heretofore made request for three or four prominent speakers, which request I hope may be complied with and such speakers given us during the month of October. Signed, George Stone. Chairman."

Fate of The Big Nob Hill Mansions

I wonder if the same mysterious fatality will cast the top of its sombre wing over the beautiful Fairmount hotel as it does over the big mansions crowning Nob hill. Very rarely have lights and life lit up the adjacent great edifices erected by Crocker, Colton, Flood, Hopkins and Stanford. The Hopkins-Searles mansion cast off the influence only when Searles shifted the title and taxes to the University of California and the latter made use of the gift to house the Art school. For years the great Crocker house has only been warmed up during the very infrequent visits that Mr. and Mrs. George Crocker paid the city. The other Crockers leave it with drawn blinds and locked portals. Mrs. Leland Stanford prefers her beautiful Palo Alto home whenever she is in California and rarely stays at the old California-street structure since she turned it over to the Palo Alto university. That seems to be the end of most of the big Nob Hill residences: to be turned over to big public institutions like universities. They were all built in the day when our multi-millionaires had grand ideas of the way their guests should be entertained; but the modern palatial hotel, constructed especially to meet all such social requirements, has rendered such big mansions obsolete. Can the magnificent Fairmount hotel, on its lofty site, be made to fulfill the new requirements? The question is up to its managers and the great empty mansions grouped around it look on and wonder.

Mrs. Hearst's Castle

While on the subject of deserted mansions I am reminded that there is a stately one up on the McCloud river, the palatial summer home of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst. That distinguished lady spent a great deal of money in the construction of her stone castle, but she has spent very little time in it since it was finished. It occupies a site of rare beauty over the swift waters of the McCloud, and it is more suitable for winter than for summer residence. Architecturally it is as stern and cold as the combination battlements and towers affected by the feudal barons, and through its small windows so little sunshine penetrates that the interior is cold and cheerless. It gives you a chill to look at it. The massive pile is on the vast estate of Attorney Charles S. Wheeler, which he purchased a few years ago for a song. It was a fine investment for the shrewd lawyer. He secured an immense tract on both sides of the river for five thousand dollars and it is now worth at least fifty thousand. Mrs. Hearst has enhanced the value of the tract by erecting thereon her beautiful castle near the Wheeler residence. It was rumored that she intended to convey the castle to the State university for a summer home for the faculty, but under the terms of her agreement with Mr. Wheeler it is to go to his children at her death.

Hearn As a Reporter

Twenty-five years ago Lafcadio Hearn, who died last week, was a reporter on the staff of a Cincinnati newspaper. It must be confessed that the man who has been called the most brilliant descriptive writer since Gautier lacked two important qualifications for a successful journalist — news sense and incisiveness of diction, though he could write a story whose polish was unsurpassed. Physically he was courageous to the verge of foolhardiness and always begged for the assignments where there seemed a chance for danger or daring. It was announced one day that a celebrated steeple-jack was going to scale the spire of the cathedral to repair the cross, which stood some two-hundred feet above the sidewalk. It was a feat that had daunted all the other climbers, and when he made his preliminary ascent, fixing his ropes and footholds as he went, he was watched breathlessly by an immense crowd. Needless to say, he was interviewed when he returned to earth, and boastfully asserted that he found the task so easy that he could just as well carry a man up on his back. At noon, Hearn came to his manager, saying that he had just heard of the climber's offer and would be glad to accept it. It was useless to try to persuade him that the thing was impossible, for he would not listen, and so far from being convinced himself, he actually overcame the other's scruples, and it was arranged to bring him and the climber together. Instead of turning out to be a huge bluff, it seemed the steeple-jack was in earnest and the editor washed his hands of responsibility. At the appointed hour Hearn mounted the climber's shoulders and they started on their dizzy journey, watched by tens of thousands of spectators. They reached the foot of the cross, where Hearn left his perch, and the professional climber then went up the cross and stood on his head on the apex. The descent was accomplished without accident, and Hearn returned to the office. He sat down and wrote two columns describing his sensations and the view he obtained from the steeple top. Such a glowing description was never before written, and the interesting part of it to those most concerned lay in the fact that it was a feat of pure imagination, for Hearn was too short-sighted to have seen anything at all.

His Greatest Stunt

Another feat of reporting was the story of the Glass House Riots for the Chicago Tribune. The strike was so many days old that there was nothing in connection with it which would make news. The fire at the glass works broke out at about nine o'clock on a Sunday evening but it was an hour later before a rumor in a roundabout way reached the office that the affair was in any way connected with the labor disturbance. The last available reporter was sent out and hours passed without any report. While editors and managers were fuming over the delay an office boy came in to report that a visitor was inquiring for the managing editor.

"Has he a story?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then show the gentleman up."

Hearn it was, who recited his tale in short, clear words: "I have come from the fire at the glass-house. The rioters fired it. I saw them. There were eight men in the building baked like rats in an oven. Three ran out and the fiends threw them in again."

"Tell your story to the sub-editors."

"I would rather write it."

"Journalist, are you?"

"Yes."

"Write it then."

To the chief-sub the order was given, "Give this gentleman what he requires and" (in a lower tone) "don't let him out of the office until we go to press."

His Career's Turning-Point

It was then about half-past eleven. Hearn ordered a ream of paper, a dozen pencils and a boy to keep them sharpened, and then, prone on the reporters' table, with his head resting on his left hand, he wrote steadily for five hours, halting occasionally for a moment of thought. The chief-sub carefully revised the first score of pages, but catching the spirit of the writer, he desisted. The first edition, half an hour late, had a brief account of the fire. The regular edition had a fairly complete story, but the last, a few minutes before five o'clock, had three pages of a live story told in perfect language, some thirteen thousand words written at the rate of two thousand seven hundred words an hour. At half-past four the writer made a dash at the end of his work and promptly fell asleep. A file of papers and an old coat were improvised into a pillow and the managing editor took a chair and sat down to watch the sleeper. He awoke at daybreak according to his habit and a little sympathetic questioning elicited his sad story. Hearn was both ill and unfortunate, until, on this Sunday night, he had been constrained to seek rest under a hayrick near the scene of the fire. He was awakened by the angry voices of the rioters and sat up to watch them. He saw them set fire to the building, saw the scorched victims run out, to be thrown back, first three, then two, then one; saw the walls fall in, and then turned and ran to the Tribune office, where he contributed "the best story we ever printed." It was the turning point in Lafcadio Hearn's career.

When He Went To Japan

Hearn was fifty-four years old when he died. He was the son of an English father and Greek mother, and was born in the Ionian Isles. Educated in England, after leaving college he came to the United States, and worked on various papers in New Orleans, Cincinnati, Chicago and New York. Later he went to Japan, married a Japanese lady, taught in the Japanese schools and colleges and to all intents and purposes became a Japanese. He wrote several books and also contributed to the magazines. His latest book, unfortunately his last, was "Japan, An Attempt at Interpretation," explaining modern Japanese life. In this he traced the political and social organization of the Japanese, their manners, customs and art, from ancestral worship. The book is a subtle analysis of the fundamental ideas of the Japanese as expressed in their family, communal, and social life. The military development of Japan is traced, and there are chapters on recent industrial conditions. Mr. Hearn thought Japan in great peril because her industrial activity rests on a feudal basis, and he was a frank although not a bitter critic of missionary work. One of his bits of philosophy would do as an inscription on his tombstone:

Proud of Her Lucky Shot

Mrs. Charley Sanford of Oakland is still enjoying the exhilaration of a lucky shot she made this last summer in Shasta. The Sanfords have a comfortable hunting lodge up there—not a cabin or a shanty—but it is a good ten miles distant from the little general store that does proud duty as a post office. The shooting box is just far enough away to be within easy reach of both civilization and the great variety of game that lives in that section. Along with Mrs. Sanford were her husband and brother (both bent on bagging big game and satisfactory strings of trout), a young woman friend and a maid. One evening the men went to the general store for provisions and the mail and were late in getting back to the shooting box. A deer had been shot the day before and its carcass was hanging in an outhouse. This deer was the cause of what followed. The ladies, after barring the windows and doors, retired to rest in perfect tranquility. Two hours later they were awakened by a strange and ominous sound. They felt sure that only enraged lions could give voice to such threatening growls. Peering from the windows into the darkness the timid women could detect gaunt, shadowy forms slinking about the little clearing, howling now and then and gradually drawing closer to the out-house where the venison was hanging. Mrs. Sanford, like the others, was badly frightened, but her husband had taught her how to handle a gun and that knowledge braced her natural grit. She took down a Winchester from the wall, carefully opened a window, shoved out the muzzle and then, while the other women clung desperately to her in order to help her as much as possible, she threw back her head, closed both her eyes tight and fired a half dozen balls hap-hazard into the surrounding scenery. At every shot all three women screamed and a chorus of yelps and howls answered them from the outside. The women then slammed to the window, barred it, and held each other tightly till the men arrived an hour later. Then they all went out with lanterns to investigate and discovered two dead coyotes; one with a bullet through its head, the other with a hole through its back. Mrs. Sanford has had the skins dressed and as she killed them "all by herself" she is far prouder of them than of the mountain lion pelts captured by her husband and lying on the same floor.

She Prefers Burlingame

The itinerary of Mrs. Frank Carolan, who left for St. Louis last week, includes a visit to the old homestead in Chicago, and also to friends in Newport who from time to time have enjoyed her hospitality at Burlingame. She is not likely to spend much time in Chicago for she regards it as an uncultured burg. The Pullmans, by the way, have never crowded into Chicago's Holy of Holies. In that set which is dominated by the Potter Palmers and the Chatfield Taylors, the Pullmans are regarded as nouveaux. It will take about three generations to disassociate them from sleeping cars and to overcome prejudice against a fortune derived from tips to colored porters. But Mrs. Carolan is one of the proudest and most influential matrons of Burlingame, where the aristocracy of wealth is conceded to be the only genuine aristocracy in this democratic country. Chicago society does not appeal to her. She is a woman of refined tastes, and she loathes an environment that reeks of abattoirs and canned goods. She is a woman of artistic temperament, and revels in the pure air and charming prospect of San Mateo. "She will spend the winter here and she will have as her guest Mrs. Paul Claystone nee Kirk.

The Babies of Blingum

The stork is charged nowadays with responsibility for the apathy of Burlingame. So many babies have come into the Hopkins-Taylor-Martin-Scott set that a quietus has been put upon the gayety of that once giddy clique. Babies have become the absorbing topic of conversation in Burlingame. Those that have not been blessed are being bored to death with stories illustrative of the precocity of the offspring of proud young mammas. The Gus Taylors and the Walter Martins are the most enthusiastic parents and they always have a budget of anecdotes on tap for visitors.

She Will Not Abdicat

Nobody has any definite information regarding the Fortnightlies. One day it is reported that they are to be discontinued, and the next day comes the rumor that Mrs. Salisbury contemplates resuming business at the old stand. According to the latest gossip that distinguished promoter of social festivities has decided upon contributing the light of her experience to the management of the functions that so long enabled her to hold sway over a section of society. Among the ladies who will be associated with her are Mrs.

W. B. Collier and Mrs. Eleanor Martin. As first aids to matrimony the Fortnightlies are regarded as indispensable.

Inside The Graft Lines

Is there a trade that has not developed some sort of graft in these commercial days. An acquaintance went into a laundry office the other evening to kick about several collars not having been returned with his bundle. Without a moment's hesitation the clerk supplied him with the lost number of the same style and quality.

"Want to buy any collars?" suggestively enquired the laundryman.

"What kind have you got?"

"Every style ever made and at cut rates. I've got hundreds here that — well, that have never been called for and you can have your pick at five cents each."

Here he produced a big pasteboard box for the customer's inspection, and went on: "There is quite a bunch of men buy all their collars of me, for they know that they can get the real thing, and cheap."

The man thought so too when a moment later he walked away with a dozen of the same style and quality as the one he had on and at far less than one-half the cost.

Wheeler Is Discovered

San Francisco's smart set appears to have just discovered Benjamin Ide Wheeler, President of the University of California. He made his bow to the "quality" at the swellest event of the new-born season, the dinner given by Mrs. Timothy Hopkins in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kohl at the St. Francis last week. It was the first entertainment given by Mrs. Hopkins in nearly two years, and Mr. Wheeler was one of the lions of the occasion. Mrs. Joseph D. Grant and Mrs. George Newhall were the most strikingly gowned of the women at the function. Both were ablaze with diamonds.

Pearl Landers is so devoted to Monterey that she will stay there until the first of November. The Landers's cottage is close to the water, and daily Miss Landers enjoys her swim from their private beach. She expects to go East later to visit Mr. and Mrs. Emil Bruguere, who have taken apartments in New York.

A Buckeye Battleship

Probably no ship in the history of the United States Navy, bearing the name of a State of the Union, ever started upon a cruise with so many officers from the State after which she was named, as the battleship Ohio, which was placed in her first commission in this port last Tuesday. Captain L. C. Logan, her commanding officer; Lieutenant-Commander W. W. Buchanan, executive officer; Lieutenants J. S. McKean, ordinance officer, and E. T. Pollock, watch officer, are all natives and appointees of the State of Ohio. The big craft is decidedly a Buckeye ship.

He Was Considered Hopeless

The announcement of the engagement of Major S. W. Dunning and Mrs. Griffith was one of the most complete surprises ever sprung upon that officer's friends, both in and out of the service. He was looked upon, especially by his army associates, as the most hopeless case of confirmed, incorrigible bachelor in the whole Military Division of the Pacific, but he fooled them all. I am told, too, that it was no sudden affair, but that Dunning had been paying his court assiduously, although quietly, for some time, unsuspected by anyone but his present fiancée.

McCalla's Horse Marines

From one end of the land to the other the tale of Admiral McCalla's horse marines is being told in Navy circles. That the mythical sea cavalry, made famous in the historic song of "Captain Jinks" should come into actual being in the twentieth century, in the United States, demonstrates the absence of novelty under the sun. Appropriately enough, Mare island was chosen for the headquarters of the first troop of U. S. Morse Marines. To Rear-Admiral B. H. McCalla's progressiveness was due the organization of a body of mounted marines, supplied with good steeds, who now daily patrol the island a-horseback. I note with interest that the Navy Department has been asked to send two more medical officers to the Mare island navy-yard, but whether the demand has any connection with the advent of the Horse Marines, I do not know, although an increase in the number of broken bones may attend the innovation.

Hemphill's Nerve

Not for a long time has the Navy witnessed such an episode as the appropriation for his own use, by Captain J. N. Hemphill, of a silver punch bowl presented to his ship by the Emperor of Germany. However, I am willing to wager several good red apples that Hemphill will suffer no great penalty for his act. It will surprise me if he gets anything more than a mild reprimand and an order to restore the bowl. It will not surprise me if he gets off with a bright, clean white-washing. For it is a well-known and long-established traditional doctrine in the United States Navy that an officer of high rank can do no wrong. An issue between a Lieutenant, for instance, and a Captain or Admiral, is always adjudged in the latter's favor. Right, as well as ability, is assumed, in the Navy Department, to vary directly with rank. The infallibility of high rank is one of the most dearly cherished creeds of the Old Guard in Washington, and the famous "Navy ring" is its most zealous champion.

Naval Pilferers

In connection with the appropriation of the punch-bowl by Captain Hemphill, it may be said that naval officers, while possessing a standard of general honor unsurpassed by any body of men in the world, are morally warped in one or two particulars. They share with practically every other citizen, regardless of wealth, occupation, or social position, the tendency to beat the customs officers, that is, to smuggle. Likewise, if they can possess themselves of any article of military equipment at Government expense, but for private use, they are inclined to do so. A frequent practice in the Navy is for officers to secure fine revolvers for permanent personal use, the appropriated weapon being marked "expended" on the ship's books. During the Spanish war, large numbers of weapons were thus transferred from the ship's armories to the "dens" of naval officers. Yet these same men would no more think of telling a falsehood in the every day intercourse of life, or of defrauding their neighbor out of a penny, than they would of turning tail and running in the face of an enemy. Their mental attitude in these little particulars is a purely physiological phenomenon, worthy of the attention of the alienist.

Here's To The Bachelor Maid

There'll not be a bachelor girl in society, this winter, I'm sure, to turn the pretty buds into green-eyed girls. Last year the debutantes complained that the men did not find them so attractive as their seasoned sisters. But one by one the bachelor maids are leaving the shelf, and not "marked down" either. The bachelor girls are making matches that cause the buds to sit up and take notice how it's done. The latest of the "big sisters" to announce her engagement is Marie Voorhies. After Miss Voorhies took her Manila trip, rumors were wafted here over the sea that Cupid had made a dent in what was popularly supposed to be a marble heart. Therefore it was not such a big surprise when Marie Robina's engagement with Captain Young of the U. S. A. was announced. This will be the second Army son-in-law in the Voorhies family, for Leila, the youngest girl, married Lieutenant Guy Scott very shortly after her first season in society. The first of the family to wed was Kate, who married Malcolm Henry of Washington, D. C. Anna Voorhies married Tom Bishop. There's a boy, Grantland Voorhies, who is the only one left in the family now unattached. Marie Voorhies is a very clever girl, artistic and original in her ideas. When the Voorhies's give those little dinners that are so famous, it is Marie who supervises everything from the decorations to the menu. She will be a prize wife to her Army husband.

The Wolff-Humphreys Engagement

There was much wailing and weeping and gnashing of teeth, I understand, among the matchmaking mammas whose husbands are Masons, Knights Templar and Mystic Shriners, when the engagement of William Penn Humphreys was announced. Mr. Humphreys had long been known as one of the few eligible young men among that vast army of benedicts. When a girl belongs to the Masonic set, she usually has to choose her partners at the big receptions from among a selection of married men, for there are very few bachelors among them. And so William Penn Humphreys, with his good looks, his good law practice, and his good hopes of a rich inheritance from his mother, was regarded as the very most eligible of eligibles. But now he is engaged, and his fiancée, Paula Wolff, is a girl so attractive that she had a string of adorers, and therefore everybody knows it must be a love match. Miss Wolff is the daughter of the William Wolffs, and is an heiress as well as a beauty—not a newspaper-made beauty, but the real thing. She is very highly educated and a cultivated musician. The Humphreys family belongs to the old set which has lived in Lombard and Chestnut street for years.

Gertrude Atherton will spend the winter in California. Her plan of work is to finish her new novel here instead of in Germany as she originally intended. Her "Rulers of Kings" hits the mark so hard in Germany that Tauchnitz dare not publish it.

Miss Pomeroy Beat Teddy

Christine Pomeroy is reported to be cutting a wide swath in the East. She has written to friends that she was a guest of the Roosevelts recently and played tennis with Teddy the Strenuous, beating him three straight games. Miss Pomeroy's uncle married a daughter of Senator Clark and last year's debutante is being invited everywhere by friends of the family. She has become quite friendly with that most unconventional and haughty of young women, Alice Roosevelt, and it is said that the latter will be a guest of the Pomeroy's when she comes to San Francisco. Among other people visited by Miss Pomeroy are the Gittings of the socially elect of Baltimore. Dorothy Gittings visited her aunt, Mrs. Babcock, here last winter.

A Strenuous Dancer

Cyril Tobin is becoming one of the most popular of the Tobins. Like all the Tobins he is athletic, and he is an expert polo player. He also shines in the ball-room. Though he dances well he does it strenuously, and when he is in action all other dancers cautiously avoid coming in contact with him. He is feared almost as much as Babe Cadwallader, and no one would care to have that young gentleman's weight on the edge of his patent leathers.

The Entre Nous Cotillon, which Sanford Lewald has so successfully engineered for fourteen winters past, will give its opening assembly of this season on Friday evening, October twenty-eighth, in the Palace hotel ball-room.

In the Art World

Matteo Sandona is working very busily at his studio in Larkin street, corner of Union. He holds his studio receptions on Saturdays.

The marriage of Emilia Kalisher with Dr. Thompson, U. S. A., has by no means caused her to lose interest in her art. She still goes on with her painting, and her husband is as interested in her work as she is herself.

L. P. Latimer will have several fine redwoods in the fall exhibitions, the sketches for which he did while in the Russian river region this summer.

The Paper Artists

Last year the Newspaper Artists' League held its first exhibition, in Maple hall of the Palace hotel. Among the exhibitors were Dixon, Newberry, Coulter, Kahler, Laura Foster, Marie Feiling, Patigian, Nahl, Igoe, "Tad" Dorgan, Cantrell, Raleigh and Cahill. It was a mighty good exhibition, indeed the best artistic showing ever seen in San Francisco. The Newspaper Artists' League will again exhibit, in the same place as last year, their latest sketches, on October eleventh to fifteenth. "Patrons' evening" will be on October eleventh, after which the exhibition will be open to the public, with no charge for admission.

When Joullin was a Scene Painter

Amadee Joullin, who is considered the most talented as well as the laziest of all the local artists, is once more at work on his Indian pictures that have won so much fame for him. It is not generally known that in his younger days Joullin was a scene painter. He was employed at the now defunct Standard theatre in Bush street. Even in those days Joullin was more of a dreamer than a worker. He never appeared thoroughly awake. He fell asleep one night while dancing to sensuous valse strains at an artist's ball. I have heard that when he was painting a scene at the Standard, it was his custom to slumber while standing up, and it was the head paint-slinger's pleasing duty to awaken him with a property brick. When his attacks of somnolence became too frequent the chief artist bought a police-whistle with a note something like that of the Fog Point siren, and it was found very effective. But there is a legend current in Bohemia that when the ghost walked at the end of the first week in which the whistle was employed, Joullin found an item deducted from his wage, written thus way:

"1 police whistle, part of A. Joullin's working material . . . 50 cents."

To Appear as a Professional

The women's clubs are agog with interest, for a member of one of them is going to challenge criticism by appearing professionally in Shakespearean costume recitals. Mrs. W. P. Buckingham is the clubwoman who will thus appear. She has recited before for sweet charity's cause, but never before in the character of a professional. Mrs. Buckingham was the founder of the Papyrus Club and when that organization fell a-wrangling, she led the seceders who established a rival club devoted to the same aims as those inspiring Papyrus. She is a woman of wealth and her special fad is the study of Shakespeare. When she appears in Lyric hall on Tuesday night, October twenty-fifth, and again at a matinee on the twenty-ninth, in readings from "Macbeth," the critics will no doubt be on hand.

They Will Hang Together

Bessie Ames will return from New York in time to attend to her duties in the Twentieth Century Club, which has decided to hang together for at least another year. Miss Ames had the support of the most fashionable element in the club for the nomination for President, but the majority preferred Mrs. Tucker. Hence the trouble. Miss Ames is a very enthusiastic musician and has always taken a great interest in Twentieth Century Club affairs.

The Perennial Mrs. Martin

The rejuvenescence of that indefatigable matron, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, goes on apace, and I heard it predicted the other day that she would live to introduce her first great grand-child to society. Just now she is preparing her favorite grand-child, Anita Harvey, for the swim. They left this week for Oregon, where they will spend a few days while Mrs. Martin looks after some business interests, and then they will speed on to St. Louis, where they will be joined by the Peter Martins. Perhaps the vivacious old lady may be persuaded later on to visit with her son and daughter-in-law in Newport, and give her grand-daughter a whirl in the Eastern swim. But if so it will be a brief sojourn for Mrs. Martin is looking forward to the coming social season in this city with all the pleasurable anticipation of a young bud. She intends to do many things for her grand-daughter, and by the way, Mrs. Harvey is to give her daughter a grand ball.

The Baron Is Sore

Baron Von Horst has despaired of conquering San Francisco society. He has come to the conclusion that our provincial aristocracy are a benighted lot and he has gone to London, where he will probably take up a permanent residence. The baron was not taken seriously in this city. People were inclined to regard his title as a joke, and he never succeeded in scaling the heights he seemed so anxious to ascend. He is a good-natured chap and means well, but like Captain Johnston the end and aim of his existence is to achieve social distinction. He made a hit with the skirted section of the fashionable herd, but he excited the levity of the men. His pet project of putting a barbed-wire fence round a smart clique in a suburban resort to be located on the Marin shore, and to be famous for its exclusiveness, of which I wrote some weeks ago, was the subject of much joshing. My paragraph was copied in several Eastern papers and provoked a great deal of serious comment.

"She seems happy when out in society."

"That's the hardest part of her existence, simulating happiness when she is bored to death."

They Won't Visit the Bishop

Lieutenant Ashton Potter, who married Mary L. McNutt, daughter of Dr. W. F. McNutt, enjoys considerable social prestige on this Coast because of his connection with the family of which Bishop Potter, the saloon chaster, is the bright, particular star, but he is not expected to visit his New York relatives while en route to Switzerland with his wife, where they are to spend the winter. Lieutenant Potter is the son of Howard Potter and nephew of Bishop and James Brown Potter of the clan of which the distinguished divine once said, "Ye are the clay, we are the Potters." Lieutenant Potter has not seen much of his Eastern relatives since his marriage. At the opening of the Spanish war he was in the Klondike. He met Miss McNutt while passing through this city on his way to Manila, and they were married a year later in the Philippines.

Bruguiere's Opera

Some time ago I remarked that Emil Bruguiere was perhaps the most prolific of all composers, for according to press reports he was turning out comic operas every little while. And according to those same veracious reports his operas were being accepted by managers all over the country. Apparently they were selling like hot cakes, but singularly I never heard of one of them being produced. Indeed, I never heard the name of one of them. But Mr. Bruguiere's operas are not nameless. The latest announcement of his press-agent is to the effect that his opera, "The Princess Fiddlesticks," is soon to be produced at a Broadway theatre, and that Madame Calve has been cabled to come over and play the principal role. Calve's reply has not yet been divulged. It is also reported that Jack Gallatin, a young man of some social distinction in New York, is to go on the stage and take part in the opera. It is suspected that Broadway has discovered that Bruguiere has a leg.

The Stork and The Earls

The stork recently visited the home of C. T. Earl, founder of the Earl Fruit company, in Los Angeles. There are two Mrs. Earls in Los Angeles, for Mr. Earl was twice married and both wives are still living. The first Mrs. Earl has many friends in society, and their loyalty to her since her divorce has occasioned something of a feud.

May Become An Actress

My Los Angeles correspondent writes me that Mrs. Murphy, who was conspicuous for a time in Washington society and later in Arizona, prior to her divorce from ex-Governor N. O. Murphy, has wearied of the ennui of single blessedness, and is now taking lessons in a school of expression, with the intention, it is said, of going on the stage. Some years ago she won distinction as a daring horsewoman.

Versatile Otis

General Harrison Gray Otis is beginning, it is said, to curse the foresight that prompted him to purchase the Los Angeles Herald. It is an elephant on his hands. He is said to have bought the Democratic daily to keep it from falling into the hands of William R. Hearst, who would no doubt have purchased it on account of the Associated Press franchise. Otis was the first to learn that the paper was for sale, and he made the purchase through a Los Angeles attorney; at least, such is the view of the matter taken in Los Angeles. Of course Otis denies that he is the owner, for he would not like to acknowledge that he was writing Roosevelt editorials with one hand and Parker eulogies with the other. Suspicion against him is very strong on account of his reputation for versatility achieved while on the occasion of his remarkable feat in swimming the Rubicon with a gun in one hand, and a typewriter in the other while dictating an account of the affair to a stenographer on each bank of the stream.

When Newhall Was An Usher

Now that the Edwin Newhalls are beginning to figure frequently in the society gossip of the dailies, my reminiscient contributor is reminded of the day when handsome Ed Newhall was the great catch of St. John's Presbyterian church, the most admired of the beaux and the despair of match-making mammas and of one designing old lady who had two pretty nieces to dispose of. The Newhall family had financed St. John's Presbyterian church from the start, and in recognition of the obligation under which the church rested through being allowed to borrow some eighteen thousand dollars without interest, a grateful Board of Trustees gave the Newhalls one of the best pews in the middle aisle. And in that aisle "Ed" Newhall acted as usher, and he was a strong drawing card, for the girls almost fell over one another in their efforts to secure his services as guide to a pew. When he passed the plate the collection was large. The Adonis of the middle aisle also acted as librarian of the Sunday school, and in time became superintendent of the institution, succeeding the venerable Stephen Franklin, grandfather of Gertrude Ather-ton. Great was the disappointment on all sides when "Ed" Newhall escaped the snares that had been set for him, and married dainty little Miss Hall who was here on a visit from the East. At the birth of a son Mrs. Newhall died, and some years later the widower married the distinguished lady who is now the mother of children old enough to have their doings chronicled by the bavardes of the press.

The Magnetic Eels

Dorothy Eels, the pretty sister of Gertrude Eels, is to be added to the list of debutantes this season. The Eels are at present in Ross where they have contributed largely to the gayety of the liveliest season in the history of that somewhat stiff-jointed suburb. Miss Eels is certain to be one of the most popular of the debutantes for she possesses the charm that is characteristic of the family known to Ross Valleyites as the "Magnetic Eels," and besides she has influential relatives in society, among them being the Thurstons, the Kittles and the Livermores. She will make her debut about the middle of November.

A Practice That Should Be Prohibited

It is to be hoped that the next time the teachers wish to raise funds for their Annuity Association they will not have the bad taste to exploit the children of the public schools. For a week preceding the Chutes festival the schools almost without exception were turned over to the ice cream festival, the bazaar, the grab-bag and other time-honored means of extorting dimes and nickels. Children have been running rampant in stores and offices, they have been ringing door bells and boarding street cars in their eagerness to sell tickets. In many schools they have been urged to bring contributions, and their parents have been besieged by requests for money, for eatables, and for articles to put in the grab-bag. All these things not only cause a waste of time which should be devoted to study, but they weaken discipline and make the children clamorous and bad mannered. The strangest part of it is that the whole thing has been forced upon the schools whether they wished to participate or not. The principals have been urged to show activity, and they have pushed the work upon their assistants. Many of the teachers have expressed themselves as feeling cheapened and humiliated at having to beg from the children. They have had a feeling of aversion to the whole plan of ticket selling and money raising, but have been forced to take a more or less active part therein. It is too bad that the Board of Education cannot protect the school children from this and similar schemes. All begging of money and levying of contributions for any purpose whatsoever should be summarily stopped. The bad effects of the practice have been pointed out time and again, the humiliation suffered by those who cannot contribute, and the false feeling of superiority engendered in those who can. As the children have no funds of their own, the parents after all are the real contributors. Moreover it puts the teachers in a false position and gives occasion for meretricious relations between them and their pupils. How can Miss Smith punish Johnny for his bad spelling lesson or his unruly conduct when he has just brought the biggest number of dimes for the new battleship or the Filipinos' fund? Miss Smith may bring unpleasant consequences upon herself if she is not worldly-wise enough to shut her eyes to Johnny's shortcomings, and Johnny is quick-witted enough to seize upon the advantages of his own position and the weakness of his teacher's. Whenever there is begging of money from children, for no matter what object, the teachers are put into the position of mendicants, and are placed to a certain extent under obligation to their charges. It is to be hoped that if the managers of the Teachers' Annuity Association need to raise further funds, they will not exploit the school children for that purpose.

Miss Hager's Career

Miss Ethyl Hager is convinced that she is of artistic temperament, and she is now trying her hand at modeling. Miss Hager is one of the most ambitious young bachelor women of the smart set. She longs for a career. At one time she thought of achieving literary fame, and for awhile she spent much time on a novel that was to scintillate with epigrams. I have no doubt that it would have created a great sensation had Miss Hager permitted it to reach the hands of a publisher. But the novel died a-bornin'. Some time ago it was discovered that she had some skill in modeling, and she took a studio with Miss Nonette McGlashan who has become her instructor. Miss McGlashan is the picturesque young woman with curls who designed and executed the fountains in the Pavilion during the conclave. She also made a beautiful sea-gull bas relief for the Frank Deering library. Her father is a well known lawyer and collector of Indian antiquities in Truckee.

At His Father's Deathbed

Mr. Dent Robert, managing editor of the Examiner, was summoned to his home, in St. Louis, last week, by the sad intelligence of the serious illness of his aged father, the Rev. P. G. Robert, a distinguished Episcopalian divine. He reached his home in time to contribute to the comforting of his father's last hours. The Examiner's managing editor comes from a family of considerable prominence in St. Louis. He is recognized as one of the ablest men on William R. Hearst's big staff of star journalists. He has won the absolute confidence of his employer to whose interests he devotes all his energies. Though he is most faithful in carrying out the policies of Hearst, he is never so enthusiastic as when confining the activities of his staff strictly to duties journalistic.

Mrs. Harry Hill is going to Havana to pass the winter with her father. In the spring she will take a trip to Europe.

Wedded in Honolulu

All the way from Honolulu comes the news of the romantic wedding of Miss Edna Scoby of Oakland, who went to the Islands as a teacher, and Charles Gerald Backus, a newspaper man of Honolulu. The bride's mother, Mrs. E. M. Scoby, still lives in Oakland. The grounds of the Podmore residence, where the wedding took place, overlook the sea. Roses and strings of maile were entwined about the trees and a procession of singing girls led the wedding party through the winding paths before the ceremony. A stringed orchestra, hidden under a flowering tree, played during the entire evening. In place of the usual salutation, the air resounded with shouted alohas, but the time-honored rice was as hard and as plentiful in Honolulu as it would have been in Oakland.

Prefers an Audience to a Fat Salary

Rev. Ernest E. Baker, of Oakland, is righteously indignant. On Sunday night he told his parishioners what he thought of them. They were accused of not "holding up the hands of the Lord's servant and prophet." The intrepid Baker declared that he meant to earn his salary or know the reason why. "I am here to save souls," said Dr. Baker, "but nobody could save souls when there are no bodies in the church to put them in. I look around and what do I see? Very good oak seats, well-carved and some of them comfortably cushioned with crimson cloth in order that the faithful may, if it so pleases them, slumber peacefully from the time the sermon begins until the opening notes of the musical selection that follows it. I cannot and I will not talk to pews, beautiful though they may be. I would almost rather go back to the East than submit to the indignity. If I do my duty you have got to do yours and that is all there is about it." D. Edward Collins, the wealthy man of the parish and the head of the vestry, has declared that he will withdraw his support if there is anything resembling a row, for he cannot bear the vulgarity of squabbling in church.

How 'Twas Announced

There was a great laugh at the home of the Marcus D. Hydes in Oakland, on a recent Saturday afternoon. The hostess, herself nearly as young looking as her two daughters, had determined that not a soul should have a hint of the purpose of the reception for which she had issued over one hundred invitations. So it was whispered about from one to another that Mrs. Hyde was to "entertain, informally, the girls' little friends of the former sewing-bee class." They stood chatting in groups about the room when, in a pause of the conversation, Mrs. Hyde made the announcement of her daughter Mary's betrothal to Lieutenant Charles Emory Hathaway. It was a genuine surprise. Not only has Mary Hyde been considered a child, but she is as young as she looks. She has not been thought old enough to go into society, even the milk and water society of Oakland, and here she is to be married in the early spring. The Lieutenant is a son of the late Judge Henry Elting Hathaway of Seattle, and an officer in the Ninth United States Cavalry, now stationed at Ord Barracks, Monterey.

What Texas Did for Her

Before her marriage, Mrs. William Richardson of Oakland was so slender and delicate that her elder sister, Mrs. George Gross, and her father, Judge Gage, were worried to death at the thought of her going to Texas. They believed that the life would be too rough and hard for one who had been cradled in luxury. But the bride had her way and went with her newly wedded husband to his home. Now Mrs. Richardson is up visiting her people, and she is the picture of superb health. She lays the improvement to the outdoor exercise she has enjoyed since her marriage, and says that she can ride like a cowboy now, and lasso a steer with the best of them. And now the attenuated beauties of Oakland are begging Mrs. Richardson to invite them to visit her in Texas.

Raffles in Berkeley

All sorts of traps are being set to catch the thief that infests the Harmon Gymnasium, stealing everything in sight from money to eatables, and doing it so cleverly that no trace is had of his identity. The thieving, I am told, has been going on for over a year. Hardly a foot-ball player but has at some time during that period been a sufferer from the dishonest practices of the black sheep in the fold. The matter has been kept quiet for fear that its publication might in some way reflect on the university. Things are getting too uncomfortable, however, and Professor Soule, head of the military department, has ordered posted a sentinel from the guard each day until countermanded. Not only have sums varying in amount from two dollars to thirty dollars been taken, but whole suits of clothes and everything conceivable in the way of sweetmeats and other dainties forbidden to those in training. "Pat" Oliver, right end on the 'varsity team, lost eight dollars a few days ago and R. W. Kittrell, the 'varsity quarter, is a sufferer from the sneak thief, while A. White was robbed of a considerable amount of money, taken from his pocket while he was exercising on the gridiron.

A Good Place to Spoon

(Students, men and women, of the University of California are having a good deal of satisfaction over the entertainments given in the Greek amphitheatre at the full of the moon. There are to be band concerts each week up there in the great stone amphitheatre just as often as the moon casts light enough to permit of getting up the hill. It takes a pretty dark night to keep a man of the college and a co-ed from reaching the Greek theatre if there is a concert on hand. And these special concerts are for the benefit of the West Berkeley College Settlement, so not a student will be absent. They say—the student body—that there is not a place in the United States so conducive to the gentle art of spooning as is this same open-air theatre.

Those Naughty Co-Eds

A little story has leaked out that is scandalizing Berkeley society. It is as usual about the ever-present co-ed. Several weeks ago a number of young college women decided that they were blase. They did not all know just the proper sensation that should creep over one at the utterance of the hard-worked word, but they all knew they "had it." No sooner was the case properly diagnosed than they began to hunt for a remedy. It was finally decided that something in the line of naughtiness practiced by Ouida's heroines should be about the proper caper. So they gave a smoker—yes, they did! They ordered a big, big keg of beer, a number of clay pipes—for blowing bubbles, I imagine—numberless packages of cigarette paper and tobacco, and then they had the time of their lives. They smoked and drank and drank and smoked, until the rising sun made the candles pale.

A Smash at the Feminine Gamblers

A Berkeley parson, the Rev. W. W. Hodgkins, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal church, the ultra-fashionable place of worship in the college town, expects women to play cards during a whole afternoon for a paltry "souvenir." Mr. Hodgkins said in a recent sermon: "In my opinion the woman who plays cards for a twenty or one hundred dollar prize is in the same class with the man who gambles in the rear of a saloon." That was the last straw. If, as one woman said, Mr. Hodgkins had admonished them in a friendly way that he did not approve of prizes in connection with games of five hundred, whist, etc., that would have been all right. But to cast them into the same net with the men who play pedro and poker in corner saloons—that was a little too much. Indignation meetings are being held in Berkeley and Oakland. Really, Oakland is the harder hit of the two cities for it is there that the highest bets are made and the costliest prizes given and exacted. They are a strenuous lot across the bay. If the prizes do not suit them they do not pretend to be satisfied—not they. They simply raise rough-house and insist on being paid for the work they have done as well as for the wear and tear on their nerves. What the outcome will be no one pretends to say. It has been suggested that the salary of the reverend gentleman be cut in half as a means of drawing forth his resignation. But he may be more harshly dealt with, Coventry being the land toward which his feet are tending. But Mr. Hodgkins is undismayed. He declares afresh that the women of Alameda county do gamble—and he does not care who hears him say so.

A Quaint Character

It was only a few days ago that I learned of the death, in this city, of Horace T. Moore, a noted character, whose passing should have provoked comment. He belonged to an old New York family, and was the first president of the Mercantile Library. He was once the proprietor of a large book-store in New York, and for many years kept the old book-shop in California street below Kearny, well known to all searchers after old and rare editions. The little shop ought to go into the literature of San Francisco, for it had a character all its own, and among its frequenters were men, young and old, not unknown in the world of wits and writers. The late Judge Thornton was a daily visitor there in his lifetime. Old Mr. Moore was a true bibliophile, he knew his treasures both inside and out. He was well known as a Shakespearean scholar, and had been for some years a member of the Stratford Shakespeare society. His age did not prevent him from attending the meetings and taking a part with spirit and relish. His reading of Falstaff was particularly good, and his comments on the plays and on various actors and celebrities were always worth listening to. Nobody was willing to credit Moore with his full age. He was generally believed to be in the eighties, and quite wonderful for that. I am creditably informed, however, that he lacked but six years of rounding out his century. His widow survives him.

"She has one redeeming quality."

"What is that?"

"She blushes at her indiscretions."

Morgan and The Archbishop

What an edifying spectacle, that of the Most Rev. Archbishop of Canterbury being told about this country by that distinguished pirate of finance, that unblushing buccaneer of Wall street, J. Pierpont Morgan! I know that Mr. Morgan is a dignitary of the Episcopal church, but surely the faithful and devout of that holy institution are not proud of him. It must occur to some of them at times that it would be well to divert the thoughts of that sordid sure-thing, get-rich-quick operator from financial to spiritual affairs. Why spend money in converting the harmless heathens in foreign lands who are jeopardizing nothing but their own souls when we have Morgans in this country making a mockery of Christianity, heaping discredit on sacred institutions, contaminating the ministry, and debauching the Government. The Most Rev. Archbishop of Canterbury is a big man in the church. In the peerage of England he takes precedence over all dukes of the realm, except those who are immediate relatives of the sovereign. He has twenty-five bishoprics in his province against ten in that of York. He therefore takes a position of decided superiority, being placed above the Lord Chancellor while his colleague follows after that official. His official appellation is "Primate of All England by Divine Providence." He is the highest personage in all England after the royal family, and here he is hobnobbing at church meetings and State dinners with a mere money-grubber who notoriously resorts to devious methods to fleece the public and accumulate unnecessary wealth.

His Lucky Marriage

Randall Thomas Davidson is the Archbishop's name. He was educated at Oxford but was prevented from taking high honors owing to a gunshot wound. By good fortune he fell under the wing of Archbishop Tait and fell in love with Tait's daughter, whom he married. In 1895 he became Bishop of Winchester at thirty-two thousand five hundred a year. His mitre rises out of a Duke's coronet, and you are expected to address him as "Your Grace." His salary is now seventy-five thousand a year, and "wherever the court may be the King and Queen are his domestic parishioners."

Keeler's Queer Stunt

A prominent member of the Oakland Club the other day telephoned to an outsider a cordial invitation to attend a meeting of the Current Literature section, holding out as a lure the information that Charles Keeler, the Berkeley poet, was to read extracts from his new book, "Elfin Songs of Sunland," at the meeting that afternoon. For a moment the woman held the phone while her friend sniffed audibly; then, over the wire came the ringing answer: "Elephant Songs," indeed! I must say that I am surprised at Mr. Keeler; I do not see why he should make a monkey of himself, even though he is a genius."

Russia's Mute Consul

From newspaper men I learn that the Russian Consul in this city differs from the diplomatic representatives of other nations in his disinclination to answer civil questions about his country. He is the sphinx of the local diplomatic corps, and declines to give any information as to the geography or laws of his country. He surely does not render his country valuable service in assuming an attitude that excites prejudice. When off duty he is a most amiable gentleman, and in society he has charming manners. He attends teas with great fidelity, and unlike the American male biped who always calls for a high-ball at a tea, he actually drinks the beverage brewed by his hostess and seems to like it.

In Flight for Piedmont

I hear that the Isaac Uphams are talking of building in Piedmont. The lot they are considering adjoins that of the Dennis Searles. It was Mrs. Searles who planted the Piedmont seed for a new home. Their house, by the way, will be completed some time before the first of the year. They will be greatly missed from society on this side of the bay. The elder son is one of our most eligible bachelors. His marked devotion to a beautiful Army girl visiting here has caused a deal of tea-table talk and made some of our own girls redouble their efforts to attract him. Ben Upham, the younger son, cares nothing for society and prefers life on a cattle ranch. Both boys are members of the Holluschickie Club.

Have You Seen It?

Did you see her? That stunning-looking woman walking calmly down Market street after the matinee and wearing a monocle. She is the only one of her kind in sight yet — but, is she the head of the procession? She certainly looked an American clad in the smartest of English clothes. She made a sensation and she knew it. The monocle was an elaborate affair, designed expressly to ornament such a splendid looking creature. It was not the plain glass affair but a handsome gem with a heavily chased silver rim, from which dangled a long silver chain passing amorously around the wearer's neck. She wore a loose-fitting three-quarter coat of gray cloth and walked with the typical English stride. She did not seem to care that nine out of every ten pedestrians she passed turned to get a second good look at her and the monocle: in fact she seemed to enjoy the attention.

"Brown seems to be leading an exemplary life these days."
"He has to; he's paying alimony."

Mrs. Craven Still in Litigation

Mrs. Nettie Craven cannot keep away from the lime-light. She acquired the habit of basking in its beams when she made her claim to a share of the Fair estate, and a habit acquired late in life is hard to break. The other day Mrs. Craven sued a railroad in St. Louis for ten thousand dollars' damages. It seems strange that in the despatch mention of the suit, nothing was said of Mrs. Craven's rich son-in-law, who was such a powerful financial aid to her in her fight for a share of the Fair millions. Yet he lives in St. Louis, or did when he married Mrs. Craven's daughter. Everybody remembers the wedding of Margaret Craven, the pretty young actress, with Henry Kahler Jr., son of the millionaire brewer of St. Louis. The wedding feast was served at the Cliff House, and the orchestra played "There'll be a hot time in the old town tonight." The bridegroom showed a filial fondness for his mamma-in-law. But that was long ago. Since then his views may have changed. A mother-in-law with a claim, by her own story well substantiated, to be called a millionaire's widow, might well be regarded with a less tender eye than a defeated and discredited adventuress.

The Russian Bazaar, which was moved to St. Louis for a general exhibit at the World's Fair, has returned and opened again at the old stand, 428 Sutter street. They brought back with them a large assortment of antique and rare Russian brasses in Circassian pots, samovars, candelabra, Russian pots, lamps, vases, etc. They also have a rare collection of Russian costumes, old silver, etc. New goods are constantly arriving, each week bringing in new shipments. The attention of the connoisseur and collector is called to the exhibit, which appeals particularly to lovers of the unique in art.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., F. W. Vanderbilt, Robert Goelet and Harry Payne Whitney had a six days' poker game on the last ocean liner from Liverpool. At the show-down on their arrival in New York none of the party of millionaires was ahead more than one hundred dollars. What a different tale there would have been to tell had Rockefeller, Morgan and Carnegie mixed up in the game for a few minutes.

E. R. Thomas, the racing man, has taken a suite of rooms in the swell St. Regis hotel, New York, for which he pays forty-five thousand dollars a year, one hundred and twenty-five dollars a day. It is said to be the most expensively equipped suite of its kind in the world. It is worthy of note that not even the handicap of such rental could prevent a successful millionaire turfman winning this blue-ribbon box-stall. Does this mean that Kings Cotton, Coal, Oil and Steel are dethroned and that the Turf is King?

Mrs. Fremont Older is going East to be absent some weeks.

Stevenson's Opinion of Shaw

This is what Robert Louis Stevenson said of George Bernard Shaw's first book, "Cashel Byron's Profession":

"Charles Reade . . . . .1 part
Henry James, or some kindred author, badly assimilated . . . . .1 part Disraeli (perhaps unconscious) . . . . .1-2 part Struggling, overlaid original talent . . . 1-2 parts
Blooming gaseous folly . . . . .1 part

That's the equation as it stands. What it may become I don't know, nor any other man. Vixere fortis — O, let him remember that — let him beware of his damned century; his gifts of insane chivalry and animated narration are just those that might be slain and thrown out like an untimely birth by the Dæmon of the epoch. And if he only knew how I had enjoyed the chivalry!"

A Clever Press Agent

Frank Daniels has with him as business manager the most resourceful press agent that this country ever produced. Years ago when Dave Henderson made regular trips to this coast with his spectacular extravaganzas George Bowles always preceded the shows to arouse public interest in the coming attractions. And being an experienced newspaper man his "copy" was always found available by local editors. No company that ever visited San Francisco received more liberal press notices than that managed by poor Dave Henderson, who went to the wall about ten years ago. Later on Bowles was the press agent of Anna Held on her first trip to this city and he wrote the sensational story about her daily bath in goat's milk. To give more semblance to the yarn he advertised for goat's milk, and cans of it were brought to the Baldwin hotel and written about in the paper. Bowles was also Alice Nielsen's press agent when she began her stellar career, and now he occupies the more exalted position of business manager.

Thy Dream and Mine

BY MORGAN SHEPARD.

I ask not when the hoped-for day may be,
Nor seek to know the Time reserved for me.
I only ask a fragment of thy store,
A shred of all thy Treasure — that — no more.

I ask an instant in thy web of Dreams,
A moment when Imagination gleams
Beyond the border of thy daily own,
Where grains of Fancy grow to Dreams full-blown.

Tomorrow? nay,—the next — a distant day?
We do not know — thy lips may never say.
But this I ask, send thy Dream into mine
And make them one — that I may hope in thine.

Then shall the hours to us unmeaning pass
Like fading mists upon the darkened glass.
Beyond the border what may we not win?
Thy Dream and mine — and dearer dreams within.

Paul Duval's Adventure

ENGLISHED FOR TOWN TALK BY BEATRICE HASTINGS.

Duval's room, overlooking the chimney pots of Paris, and the towering gray spires of Notre Dame, was typically Bohemian, with its steins, its musical instruments, and the dilapidated old fashioned piano, which stood in the far corner of the room. Scattered over the floor were fragments of manuscript music, and odd pages of illustrated papers, books were piled on the chairs and table, a plaster cast of the Goddess of Music stood on the plain wooden mantel, flanked by an odd collection of cheap pipes; a saucy, bewitching Carmen, in yellow, with pouting red lips, smiled from the bare walls; a bevy of pretty ballet girls in gay-colored bouffant skirts, danced above the piano.

In the midst of the riotous disorder Paul Duval, the king of this little realm, stood listlessly gazing out of the window, when suddenly the loud ringing strokes of a neighboring clock, vibrating through the room, aroused the young maestro from his reverie, reminding him that the day was passing, and that the four last bars of his opera, "Pepita," were still unwritten.

The consciousness of this fact seemed to irritate him; he became visibly restless, and turning away from the window, he impatiently pulled the curtains half way down, shutting out the glare of the bright July sun; then he seated himself before the piano, his long slender fingers trembling with emotion, as they touched the keys, his deep blue eyes sparkling with feverish excitement. At last inspiration came, and Duval, with a sigh of relief, quickly jotted down the notes — the opera was finished!

In his delight a half-suppressed bravo! bravo! came from his lips, as he turned the well-fingered pages of his manuscript, and began to play the "Marguerite Song," a gay, sprightly waltz, which he considered the gem of his composition. As the notes echoed through the room, he saw in fancy an enchantingly pretty prima donna, crowned with roses, and radiant in tulle and span-gles, alternately singing and dancing this gay little song.

His hopes arose, as he contemplated the picture of his fancy. He felt convinced that his opera would be a musical triumph; already he heard its catchy little airs echoing through the avenues and boulevards of Paris. He began to feel elated, the opera would certainly bring him fame and fortune, when all at once he descended to realities, and began asking himself where the money was to come from for its production.

Managers, he knew, were wary, and quite unwilling to risk the staging of a new light opera, by an unknown composer, without having expenses guaranteed. Discouraging thoughts flitted through his mind, his handsome blond face clouded, the rosy picture of his fancy faded away. He, however, was not the man to allow himself to be dominated by despondency, and like a true

Bohemian, always hoping for something unexpected to turn up, he dismissed the unpleasant reflections, and striking a dashing chord on the piano, he played once again the sprightly bird-like waltz.

The sound of Duval's piano had acted upon his landlady, Madame Constance, a black-eyed buxom widow, like a red rag on a bull; he was truly impertinently bold she thought to make such a noise in the house, for in Madame Constance's opinion, the young maestro's music was simply noise, especially since he had not paid his rent for three long weeks; so post haste she mounted the rickety steps, her cap flapping, her red hands dripping with the suds from her scrubbing tub.

As she ascended the stair-case, she made up her mind that her lodger must either pay his rent that day or leave; and if he failed to pay — well, she knew her rights, she would seize his piano and the rest of his belongings.

Duval stopped suddenly as he recognized at his door the powerful knock of his landlady. He listened in silence to her tirade, and when she had finished talking, he assured her that he would do his best to comply with her request. Partially satisfied, Madame Constance returned to her scrubbing and left Duval to his own reflections.

GET JACKSON'S

He watched her descend the stairs, and when he felt quite sure that she had returned to her household duties, he thrust the score of his opera into his pocket, put on his hat, and with a parting glance of good-fellowship at the ladies of the ballet adorning his walls, he slipped quietly down the stairs and into the street.

He crossed hurriedly to the opposite side of the Seine, and after taking some light refreshments in a cheap cafe, Duval decided to board a train and ride as far outside of Paris as his purse would permit.

Luckily he caught the two-thirty accommodation and was soon whirling away into the open country. He stopped at a small village, not very far from Paris, and after a short conversation with the station-master started off for a walk across the fields.

The air was full of the subtle perfume of leaves and flowers, it seemed delicious to Duval, after the hot sweltering atmosphere of Paris. He fairly revelled in it. He lit his pipe and seated himself on a wayside bench, his head filled with ambitious plans for the production of his opera. The silence and solitude of his surroundings enchanted him. It was an admirable spot for scheming, and Duval soon made up his mind to run almost any risk to secure the requisite funds for the presentation of his opera.

His thoughts were deeply interesting, the minutes flew by, he scarcely noticed the time passing, and was startled when the Angelus rang out from the village spire. He consulted his schedule, and found that he had barely an hour to catch the next train for Paris. When he arrived at the station he found that an accident had delayed the train, and that he would have a wait of at least twenty minutes.

He strolled out on the platform to examine the travelers. Presently he noticed a young man and a young woman arriving; from their appearance Duval concluded that they were evidently servants from one of the surrounding smart country houses. The girl was frail and pretty, and flushed with excitement. They walked over to where Duval stood, and from their conversation confirmed his surmises:

"Mademoiselle will not sleep at the chateau tonight," said the maid.

"Bravo!" responded the young man; "I shall take a night off and spend it at the cafe."

"Not so fast with your plans, Pierre," answered the maid, with provoking coolness, "you will have to be on duty just the same, for Mademoiselle will take as usual the twelve twenty-five train. She will not alight, however, but will go directly on to the 'Willows,' the country house of the Countess de Villebois, where she sings tomorrow at a garden party, given for the benefit of the Saint Charles hospital; she will hand you her jewels and packages from the door of her compartment, and you will take them in the coupe to the chateau. Ah! Pierre, how I should love to be Mademoiselle Marie Fabert, to receive a thousand francs a night for singing only three songs, and how delightful it must be to have a train of princes, and dukes, and American millionaires for admirers, following one about, and sending one such splendid presents. Why, Mademoiselle has a fortune in her jewels!"

The whistle blew, the train steamed into the station, and Francine, with her coquettish little airs, said good-bye, telling Pierre that she would not return until Friday, as Mademoiselle had given her a three days' holiday. A moment later the train had disappeared, leaving only a curling wreath of smoke behind it.

The young coachman left the station and walked down the village street. Duval watched him. The soft purple July twilight had deepened into night, the village lights sparkled in the darkness. Duval had matured his plans. He would intercept the coupe on its return from the train, overpower the young coachman, who was a mere stripling, and make off with the jewels. The sale of them would furnish the money for the production of his opera. Meanwhile, he silenced his conscience in the reflection that actresses' jewels are easily replaced, and humming a light ditty of the Paris boulevards, he lit his pipe and passed on up the street.

He looked into the cafe and saw the unsuspecting Pierre seated at a table, sipping his red wine; a few doors above some children were playing before a garden gate. Duval stopped—yes, they all knew the chateau of Mademoiselle Marie Fabert.

"There it stands on the top of the hill," said a bright little girl, pointing to the house, "and to reach it Monsieur must walk to the end of the village street, then turn to the left, and follow the open country road."

The space was soon covered and Duval, looking up the winding path, perceived the white towers of Mademoiselle's chateau looming above the surrounding country. The road was an ideal one for the scheme, as it was bordered on either side by a dense thickness of trees and brush, and though level for a certain distance, it lengthened in the centre into a considerable hill, which no careful driver would dare to mount except at a slow pace. Duval determined that this should be the point of attack.

The night was superb, with a splendid moon, the stars burned brilliantly, there was a loud murmur among the leaves; a brisk breeze blew over the hills. Duval extinguished his pipe and kept well under the shadow of the leaves, and when he reached the point of the elevation, he concealed himself in the brush. Hardly had he gotten out of view, when the unsuspecting Pierre came whistling up the road on his way home.

A little after midnight the coupe started down the hill, and a few minutes after Duval heard the train rumbling across the plain; then the whistle blew, it was nearing the station.

Quickly he turned his vest inside out, made a mask of his handkerchief, and with his hat turned on the wrong side and pulled down on his forehead, stood ready to seize the horses.

Presently he heard the wheels of the returning coupe, then it came in view, the lanterns throwing a white light on the road bed.

He waited until it had reached the ascent of the hill, then he rushed out, stopped the horses and sprang on the box, overpowering the terrified Pierre, whom he threw to the ground where he lay, apparently stunned.

Duval then opened the carriage door and to his dismay found Mlle. Fabert lying in a swoon on the cushions. She had witnessed the scene from the carriage windows and had fainted from fright. He began to feel very much ashamed of himself and at once divined the cause of her presence. The Countess de Villebois' garden party had been postponed and Mademoiselle had been notified of the change by telegram. Meanwhile, the frightened Pierre had escaped and was running at antelope speed towards the chateau. Duval saw him on the brow of the hill. He had gone to give the alarm and to seek assistance.

Mlle. Fabert was still unconscious. Duval lifted her gently out of the carriage after he had properly arranged his clothing. The fresh early morning air revived the little actress, she whispered faintly, "Ah! Monsieur, my protector, I can never be sufficiently grateful to you for saving my life."

Duval seized the cue and made up his mind that the only way out of his awkward position was to play the hero; without giving Mademoiselle time to look about her he lifted her into the carriage, jumped on the box and started for the chateau.

A short way up the hill he met the rescuing party and received their congratulations and praises of his bravery with the aplomb of a victorious general.

He told them a pretty romance, which was vouched for by Pierre, who tactfully excused his own cowardice in running away, by declaring that there were six men in the robber gang.

Duval enthusiastically corroborated the young rascal's story, and congratulated himself that he had at last met a liar who was as accomplished, as ready, and as felicitous in the art of lying as he was himself. The finishing touch to this transcendental lie was innocently given by Mademoiselle herself, who insisted that two men were bending over her when she lost consciousness. Duval was pressed to accept the hospitality of the chateau; that afternoon he played the score of his opera. The little singer was enchanted with the music, she even expressed a desire to originate the role of Pepita, and promised to use her influence with a certain manager in Paris for the production of the opera.

Some years later Duval became one of the most noted maestros in Europe; one evening as he sat in his box, listening to the gay, light music of "Pepita," and following with admiring eyes the successful pirouetting of Mademoiselle Fabert, as she sang the "Marguerite Waltz," in her short pink, spangled skirts, he felt almost tempted to ask himself if the scene before him were real, or merely the picture of his own fancy, drawn so many years ago in Madame Constance's garret.

The Stage

The Prince of Monologists

Frank Daniels started out on his fun-making career better equipped for the conquest of risibles than any other comedian within my ken. Nature was in a facetious mood at his birth and fashioned him as a human joke. Fun is inherent in Daniels. Yet his is not unconscious humor. Jestings is his trade, and he cultivates his unconquerable mannerisms for the capitalizing of the jokes of others. Clowning is serious business with Daniels, but he has the art of creating the illusion of spontaneity. His grotesquerie seems to be indigenous to his personality. Every role in which he appears seems to be a sketch of himself. There is never the slightest suggestion of effort in his performance, and yet he is the most industrious comedian on the stage. He is a glutton for laughter, and to gorge himself with it he converts nearly everything in which he appears into a monologue. As soon as he gets a new piece he begins minimizing the work of the supporting players, and putting fat on his own part. After being a few weeks on the road he can successfully defy the author of the piece to recognize his offspring. "The Office Boy," with which he is now regaling Columbia patrons in a manner that enables them to forget their creditors and other evils, is little more than a monologue. His associates are merely stop-gaps. It is an amusing piece, dealing with the experiences of the office boy of a law firm, and the action necessitates his intermittent retirement, but the periods of his subsidence are brief. He must occasionally change his costume or permit the story to develop. In those fleeting moments Miss Sallie Fisher is permitted to sing a little, but no man in the company is vouchsafed any privileges. It is a case of "off again, on again" with Daniels, and yet the little comedian never tires or bores. He is anticipated with a laugh, loud explosions in the audience punctuate his lines, and the reverberating guffaw cheers him on his way behind the scenes. He is the whole show, but Miss Fisher's vocal contributions are a pleasing feature. This young woman has a voice of sweet quality, and though her singing is not remarkable it is so far ahead of anything that we have heard in itinerant musical comedy of late as to seem like an innovation. Miss Fisher has magnetism as well as a voice, and when she has a little more stage experience she will no doubt overcome some of the defects that now mar her performance in only a small degree. Mr. Daniels has a chorus that was not selected by a connoisseur. The Broadway hall-mark is missing. Perhaps Mr. Daniels objects to having his own physical charms suffer by contrast.

The Classic Drama

Ben Greet is again with us, the gods that give us good things be thanked. And with him, of course, is the famous fifteenth century play. "Everyman" was written for the men and women of a world far other than that in which we live—the world of the middle ages, forever falling into religious reveries, musing ever upon death and the after-death; and yet it is not without its message for us also. Fully to appreciate any play, especially such a one as Peter Dorland's masterpiece, calls for an appropriate mood; and long before "Adonai's" deep, denunciatory voice is heard, the admirable setting has had the desirable effect upon the audience. To the souls of theatre-goers now, a little sick of the highly complex "immorality" plays of our times, "Everyman" must seem strangely simple and beautiful. As a rule, we do not under any pretext allow Art to preach at us, but the didacticism of this old morality play is so naive, so entertaining in its quaint seriousness, that the most puritanical apostle of the religion of "art for art's sake" never for a moment dreams of raising a ridiculous protest. 'Tis in truth an interesting journey that "Everyman" makes him ready to take, with no man to accompany him, nor woman, neither. Not unmoved, we watch his friends forsake him, every one. The illusion has us in its silken net. Altogether, the whole thing is finished, almost faultless. The mise en scene speaks for itself a quiet word of praise; the diction of the players is exquisite; a better balanced company is far to seek. Next to that of "Everyman" himself (herself, I mean), the acting of "Goodes" is, perhaps, the most perfect. Such a play as "Everyman," presented in so artistic a manner, is certainly of the number of things that, as the phrase is, "live in the memory."

The Brilliant Hoffmann

Josef Hofmann, that prodigious thing, a child prodigy fully matured, apparently a little more of him, a little more reserved if possible, looking, it may be, a little more tired of it all, than when here a few years ago, had but a fair-sized house at the Alhambra last Tuesday night to listen to the charming interpretation of the masters for which he is famous. Perfection in piano playing, be it that of a Paderewski, a De Pachman or a Harold Bauer, has a noticeable tendency to be one and the same perfection, but Josef has somehow succeeded in achieving a perfection distinctly Hofmannian, though to disengage and set forth in defining terms his "peculiar difference" is a labor for another and more discerning critic. 'Tis far from being enough—to say that beneath his remarkable "artistic reserve" is a man of much blood and many moods who has seemingly "chummed" with each of his various composers, being on terms of closest intimacy not only, as might be expected, with Chopin, but also with Mendelssohn, and Beethoven. Never have I heard anything more delicate than his Chopin Berceuse; seldom anything more delightful than the Nocturne in E flat major. An I-know-not-what delicacy, out of a superfine sense of beauty, by great mastery of the piano-forte, is, perhaps, his distinction. He is prince of pianissimo—poet-prince. He needs an audience that well knows the value of silence—how to sit in the hush—an instrument as responsive as a lover's eye, and a hall of perfect acoustic properties. On the same program with Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Chopin and Rubinstein, though sandwiched between Leschetitzky and Liszt, the pianist's own opus, "Through the Clouds," was, as is usually the case, in quite a trying position. It proved delectable enough, failing however to keep the promise of the composer's impromptus when he was a "wonder child." In his nonchalant way, Josef Hofmann is right generous in the more-than-your-money's-worth matter of encores. The result of a perusal of the program for this (Saturday) afternoon is—appetite: midmost of the sandwich is caviare.

"The Henrietta" in Stock

There seemed something profane in a production of "The Henrietta" with any other Bertie the Lamb than the original. Poor Stuart Robson loved Bertie above all the parts which had made him famous. Bronson Howard wrote it for him, and he fitted it with skinlike fidelity. Many, many years ago, in the first season of its production, I saw "The Henrietta" at the Baldwin with Robson in the star part. It was just after Robson and Crane had dissolved partnership, if I recollect aright, and Crane in "The Senator" came along some time later to the Bush street theatre. Though "The Senator" was as well fitted to Crane as Bertie was to Robson, the former never grew so fond of his part as did the latter. "The Senator" was permitted to pass into stock repertories without a murmur from Crane. Robson, on the contrary, kept "The Henrietta" sacred to himself. It is one of the best plays of American life ever written, and the plot, revolving as it does about the girl, mine and horse all of the same name, is full of continual and delightful puzzles. The dialogue, too, is bright. What can be more pertinent than the remark of the speculating clergyman, in commenting upon a fall in stock: "The Lord tempers the wind to the shorn lamb"? How charming are the scenes between the young girl, Agnes, and "old Nick of the street." How full of interest the flirtations of the fascinating widow. It was when she was playing the widow's role to his Bertie, by the way, that Robson fell in love with the actress who afterward became his wife. Anyone could forgive anybody for falling in love with Mrs. Opdyke—she is the rose of widows, the full-blown blossom as contrasted with the blushing rose-bud, Agnes. Indeed, a profanation as the first thought of it was, I am glad "The Henrietta" was not buried with Stuart Robson. I am glad the Majestic has produced it. Considerable thought was evidently brought to bear in assigning the characters, for there are no misfits. In many ways Henry Stockbridge reminds one of Robson, though his is in no sense a base imitation of the Robson Bertie. One could ask nothing better for Nicholas Vanalstyne than Gilmour's interpretation. One does not even wish for Mordaunt, the original Nicholas, back in the part, and this is the highest praise for Gilmour's impersonation that I can offer. Miss Reals as the widow and Miss McCord as the ingenue are well cast, but Miss Gordon has the unwelcome role of Nicholas Jr.'s wife. Miss Maclyn, as the American wife of a British lord (Mr. O'Hara), does very well. As a whole the performance is enjoyable.

There's a great strike scene in the melodrama, "Dealers in White Women," at the Central. There are eighty-five people in this scene, which is almost as impressive as the tribunal scene in "The Only Way" or the execution scene in "Du Barry."

A Shakespearean Festival in aid of the endowment fund of Mills College will be given by the Ben Greet players Saturday afternoon and night, October twenty-second. In the afternoon an outdoor performance of "As You Like It" will be given on a stage erected under a beautiful grove of trees. The original music will be given and the costuming will be elegant in every detail. Constance Crawley will play Rosalind and Ben Greet will be "Touchstone." "The Merchant of Venice" will be given in Lissier hall, arrangements being made to serve supper to those wishing to witness both performances, and special transportation facilities will be provided. The price for each performance will be one dollar and a half, or two dollars and a half for both.

The concert to be given by Gertrude Fleming at Steinway hall on Tuesday evening, October eighteenth, is attracting great attention in musical circles. The little artist, who is but eleven years of age, is an accomplished pianist, playing the very best in classical music, and she is also possessed of a soprano voice that ranges to high E. She will be assisted by Mrs. Jeannette Cofer, lyric soprano, and Charles Foley, violinist and tenor. Rudolph Forster, the well known pianist, will be the accompanist. The sale of seats will open at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s on Monday morning, October sixteenth.

John Philip Sousa is now engaged upon his seventh trans-continental tour, and will be heard here at the Alhambra for twelve concerts beginning Sunday evening, October sixteenth, with the assistance of Estelle Liebling, soprano, and Jessie Straus, violinist, as soloists. Seat sale Wednesday, October twelfth at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Hofmann the pianist will give a farewell concert on Sunday afternoon, October fifteenth, on his way through from Los Angeles, where he appears next week.

Next Week's Bills

The second week of the season at Lyric hall by the Ben Greet players will be devoted to Shakespearean comedy produced in the Elizabethan manner. The costuming will be most elaborate, Mr. Greet having had all the wardrobe made especially for this tour in London. The plays will be given with the original text. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday night and Wednesday and Saturday afternoons "Much Ado About Nothing" will be given with Constance Crawley as Beatrice and Ben Greet as Benedick. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and at a special matinee to be given on Friday "Twelfth Night" will be given with Miss Crawley as Viola and Ben Greet as Malvolio. The matinees on Wednesday and Friday will be given at half-past three in order that pupils and teachers of the schools may attend without inconvenience. Seats are on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s and the prices are one dollar and a half, one dollar, and seventy-five cents. Special terms to clubs and schools in large parties on application to Will L. Greenbaum at Lyric hall. The Ben Greet players will return after touring the State and present the miracle play "The Star of Bethlehem," by Professor Charles Mills Gayley of the University of California.

Monday night will see at the Tivoli the first production in America of the comic opera "Der Rastelbinder" (The Mouse Trap Peddler), by Victor Leon and Franz Lehar, which for the past few years has been the musical sensation of the chief cities in Europe. The music is said to be delightfully melodious and the story is a quaint and pretty one. Thomas H. Persse, the tenor, who will be remembered as being here with the Southwell opera company four years ago, will play the character of Yanku. Edith Mason, whose recent triumph as Maid Marian in "Robin Hood" is fresh in the public memory, has been specially secured for the role of Suza. Kate Condon will appear as Corporal Milosch, the first time that the character has ever been attempted by a woman. Ferris Hartman will make his reappearance and play Wolff Baer Pfefferkorn, a dealer in onions, a Jewish type of character. Willard Simms will be Gloeffer, a wealthy tinsmith, Dora De Fillippe will be his daughter, and Teddy Webb will be Sergeant Gumplowicz. William Schuster will be Voitech; Bessie Tannehill will be Babuschka; Eunice Gilman, little Suza; Harold Forman, little Yanku, and the remaining characters will be performed by George Chapman, Joseph Fogarty, Karl Formes, Jr., Esther King, Aimee Leicester and Addison Braidwood.

The opening of the new stock season will draw a typical "first night" audience on Monday night at the Alcazar. The opening play, "Lord and Lady Algy," is not new, but it has never been given in this theatre. Lillian Lawrence, the new leading woman, was for six years at the Castle Square in Boston, for the greater part of that time John Craig, the new leading man, playing opposite to her. Elizabeth Woodson acted with Miss Lawrence and Mr. Craig, the past summer at Keith's in Providence. Maher, Hilliard, Conness, Osbourne, Belasco, Juliet Crosby, Adele Belgarde and Marie Howe will be of the company. "Lord and Lady Algy" will be followed by the first local performance of "The Way of the World," a Clyde Fitch society play, containing incidents of an automobile break-down, a society musicale, a christening party and the turmoil of an election night in New York.

"The Office Boy" goes another week at the Columbia and will be followed by "San Toy."

The Grand will have a money-winner in "The Burgomaster," by Pixley and Luders, who wrote "King Dodo" and "The Prince of Pilsen." "The Burgomaster" scored big record runs in Boston, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Denver, but this is its first visit to San Francisco. There are twenty-four song hits in the opera, and it is a safe prediction that by Monday half of San Francisco will be whistling the music. There are many well known people in the cast. Besides Oscar L. Figman, who plays the Burgomaster, the company includes Charles Sharp, Oscar B. Ragland, Fred Bailey, R. J. Moye, George McKissock, Olga von Hatzfeldt, Louise Brackett, Harriet Sheldon, Dorothy Rae, the sisters Lockhart and Mae Franklin. Seats are now on sale—fifteen, twenty-five, fifty and seventy-five cents, and one dollar.

The offering of the great Klaw & Erlanger production of "The Japanese Nightingale" at the Majestic theatre, beginning Sunday night, is of more than ordinary note. It is one of the most prodigious stock productions that has ever been attempted in the West and it is indicative of H. W. Bishop's policy in regard to obtaining the very highest class of attractions for his handsome playhouse. "The Japanese Nightingale" is from the novel of the same name by Onoto Watanna, which created such a furor in literary circles when it first appeared. The costuming and scenery will be exact in every particular.

Eugenie Thais Lawton, who will shortly leave for the East in a starring tour including all the principal cities, will be given a farewell reception at the Central prior to her departure, and will again delight the Central's patrons by appearing for one week at that playhouse. She will be the queen in Rider Haggard's spectacular story, "She." The revision of this popular drama will far surpass anything from a scenic standpoint ever produced in this country. Great care has been exercised by the artist in reproducing with accurate fidelity the original sets of scenery that were admired by thousands of New Yorkers where "She" was played to standing room only for four hundred nights. The Imperial city of Kor by moonlight, the destruction of the village in a fearful volcanic explosion, the revolving pillar of fire and the ghastly death of "She," form a string of startling stage pictures that have never been equaled in any production. Miss Lawton will be supported by Mayall and the admirable Central stock.

"Down the Line" will continue at Fischer's.

Those old Orpheum favorites, Hickey and Nelson, will be back next week with a new sketch. Lewis McCord and his company of comedians will make their first appearance in San Francisco, presenting "Her Last Rehearsal," which tells of a girl who has the notion that she can act and the efforts of a pair of stranded actors to coach her in the part of Juliet. "A Night in Venice" is the title of an act to be given by S. Sciarretti, E. Cibelli and A. Cibelli, an Italian trio of vocalists and instrumentalists. J. A. Murphy and Eloise Willard will also be new, in "Conversational Oddities." Julius M. Tannen, imitator of actors, will return.

At the Chutes will be Ted E. Box, eccentric comedian and whistler; Charles and Ada Kalamo, character sketch artists; and Richard Walsh and Adele Ligon.

In Financial Circles

The week's business remained featureless. Transactions in bonds amounted to $365,000 and in shares to 2,650, divided as follows: 175 lighting, 165 water, 742 miscellaneous, 33 bank shares and 1,535 sugars.

The demand for choice bonds remains unabated and all offers meet with immediate response by purchasers.

The stock market seems to be less attractive to buyers at present. Telephone stock did not maintain its rapid advance. After scoring $117, it reached $112, from which low price it regained two points, closing at about $114.

The failure of the city to obtain bids for the 3-1-2 per cent bonds created quite a surprise, and various reasons for the fiasco were advanced. The generally accepted one was lack of confidence in the city authorities.

SCARING THE DUCKS AWAY.

The country from Oakland to Byron Hot Springs and surrounding valley is perfectly beautiful, and since the recent heavy rains the roads are in magnificent shape for automobiling. F. E. Brigham, accompanied by Mrs. Brigham and their two daughters, went over in their White touring car on Saturday, returning to Oakland Sunday. W. B. Glidden, of Oakland, brought Mrs. Glidden, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Richardson and little girl and Mr. H. G. Hinckley over in his four-cylinder Pope-Toledo.

The Vanderbilt Cup race, which is to take place today (October eighth), is creating a great deal of interest, especially as there are several ponderous foreign cars entered, while only a few of the American cars will participate. A good performance is expected from the two Pope-Toledo cars entered—one a sixty horse-power and the other a regular stock four horse-power touring car. The performance of these two cars will be watched with a great deal of interest, especially the twenty-four horse-power car which is matched against three tremendously powerful competitors. It is noticed that the foreign cars have fortified their position, as there are six Mercedes entries and naturally they will have a big advantage.

"Johnson is a very modest fellow, isn't he?"

"Well, I've frequently heard him say, 'Not because I say it myself.' That is the favorite expression of the man who believes in his own modesty."

In the Sunday Call Magazine tomorrow begins an engrossing story of love and politics, "The Grafters," by Francis Lynde. It is a tale of the Middle West, strong, timely and thoroughly interesting. It is a new book which is taking hold in the East and is destined to be one of the popular fall books. Marie Corelli, Jerome K. Jerome, and Edward W. Townsend contribute articles of their usual high standard. "Nat's Monkey" is a humorous full-page story in colors by Frank T. Bullen. The edition is especially strong in special articles. There is a full page devoted to the Newspaper Artists' League; a page on the Ajax of Sophocles, to be presented at Berkeley, two full pages of styles by Augusta Prescott and Madge Moore; a page on physical culture; the book page, and the ever popular puzzle page for the children, in addition to many entertaining little "fillers."

Love's Fragile Structure

BY ETHELYN REED.

He smiled as he bent over the copy and wrote:

"It is curious to observe that, while the man, before the final surrender, always takes the lead in love's building, afterwards it is the woman who timidly, but nevertheless decisively, does what she can to preserve and firmly establish that fairy structure upon which all her happiness—nay, even her life, depends. While she is to be won, he is the master-builder. The work accomplished, he rests satisfied. He is successful—they love—what more is there to do? If this delicate palace of love which he has reared for his own gratification with eager hands and glowing heart, fall in ruins, does it greatly matter? He has had his heart's desire. If it endure, well and good. He will wander through its rose-hued corridors at will, rejoice his soul in its flower-strewn, perfumed chambers, and dine like a king in its banquet halls. If it fall there are other fair places upon which to raise perhaps even fairer structures. So much from the man's standpoint.

"His work accomplished, woman's begins. Hers the task, at once arduous and delightful, to keep the fair palace, which is her very own, intact and beautiful. She may add to it—here a graceful turret, there an outstanding wing—things that beautify rather than strengthen; but her chief aim is to keep it strong and enduring on its unseen foundations. She may grow indifferent to its fate, or perhaps only a little blind to the gradual crumbling and wearing away of time—then the ruin comes slowly but inevitably. Or it may be that one crushing, dreadful fact, like a veritable Samson bearing destruction on his shoulders, sweeps the pillars of the palace from their appointed places and brings the edifice down in hideous, appalling ruin. But outside of sudden disaster, outside of occasional stupid blindness, or wilful carelessness, the woman carries on her labor of love patiently, sweetly, persistently. Her desire is to keep, to preserve, to hold forever, as his has been to possess."

The writer paused, his pen still lingering on the paper. He had become conscious of the charming, laughing face reading over his shoulder.

"Why do you stop, O most learned philosopher and poet?"

"To enjoy my own luxury of possession, sweet Arline," he answered, drawing the soft cheek down to his.

She slipped lightly away, and passing around his desk, leaned over the back of it, looking at him from under level eyebrows with irresistible impudence.

"That—for your wisdom," she exclaimed, snapping her thumb and finger. "It's just as often the other way, as it is your way."

"My love, there are always exceptions."

"Then just one-half the world is made up of exceptions. Who shall say which is the exception, and which the rule, friend Paul?"

"I can give you twenty cases of the rule from my own experiences."

"And I forty of what you call the exception."

"You must have known strange women."

"Or unusual men," she returned, archly. "No, Paul, I will admit that the men have been very usual, in the main; and the women like them—eager for conquest, and then caring nothing. Why, you know one such woman." She looked at him curiously from narrowing eyes.

"Name her. I should like to study her—but at long range." He laughed drily.

"Can you not guess? Well, then, it is myself."

"Arline!" He sprang up, and went around to her. She held him off with two slender, outstretched arms.

"No, no, you frighten me when you are so earnest. Let us be more philosophical in our discussion." She laughed nervously and pressed her finger tips against his eyelids.

"Do you love me?" he asked for the thousandth time in a month.

"Oh, a little." He made a passionate movement, and she hurriedly went on. "Have I not proved it? Have I not stayed here with you a whole month—I, away from my beloved city, alone with you, and the roses, and the trees, and—the cows? I came for a week, and have stayed a month—is not that devotion?—a tribute to your fascination?—an acknowledgment of my love?"

"Arline, my love, come, then, and kiss me." He caught her in his arms.

"No, no, let me go. I'm tired, Paul." She flung herself out of his embrace, and sank down into the empty chair.

"Tired!"

"Yes, tired—tired of everything—tired of love, tired of you. I thought perhaps the love of a philosopher and poet would be something different. It is just the same old thing—nothing more, nothing less—like any other man's, made up of equal parts of jealousy, passion, and tyranny. You take all—you give me your play-time. If there is something rare and different about you, you shut it within your soul."

"Arline, what does this mean? I had imagined you were happy. What have I left undone?"

"Nothing. I am going back—that is all." She lifted a defiant face to his.

"You cannot mean this to be the end. I thought you loved me." He had turned away, and she could not see his face.

"I did. Otherwise I would not have stayed on. All the others stipulated was a week."

"Who stipulated?" He faced her, but she was playing with his paper-knife, and did not look up. Some devil of cruelty led her on.

"Why, it was a wager, you see. You were so cold, so self-centred. We were discussing it. I wondered if I could win your love—"

"And you did."

"And I did; and loved in return." She glanced up with an enchanting smile.

"We have been happy, haven't we? But it is so deadly dull here. You understand, Paul? If you will come up to the city with me—"

He turned upon her, and she shrank back in sudden fear before the black anger in his face.

"To be laughed at—to be held up to ridicule and scorn by them and you—I, the fallen one, who prated of the one great love and devotion for the one and only woman."

She laughed, when another woman would have screamed, in pure hysteria. She had laughed all her life, and laughter came to her lips so easily. It was fuel on the flame of his wrath.

"And you shall not go back and tell your story of conquest—your deliciously amusing story—and to laugh—laugh at me. Neither shall you stay to torture me with the sight of your dead passion, and your discontent."

"Paul, Paul, it cannot be like that," she cried vaguely, and reached forward to caress him. He snatched up the paper-knife from where she had let it fall on the leaves of his freshly-written work, and buried it in the soft breast yearning towards him.

Had he proved or disproved his philosophy?

Lillian Lawrence

Miss Lawrence appears on Monday night as leading lady of the new Alcazar stock company. She is the best known stock actress in the East, and for the greater part of the past six years has been at the head of the famous Castle Square organization in Boston. Her experience has been enormous and covers some three hundred characters, ranging from the younger women of Shakespeare to modern emotional and comedy roles. Miss Lawrence first appeals to the San Francisco public as the witty, vivacious, big-hearted and unconventional Englishwoman of title in "Lord and Lady Algy." Of the Eastern popularity of Miss Lawrence there seems to be no question. White Whittlesey, who is closing at the Alcazar, testifies to this: "I played a stock season in Washington with Miss Lawrence," says he, "and a more delightful woman or better actress I never was associated with. She has a wonderful charm for women and the matinee girls simply idolize her. It was nothing uncommon to see fifty or sixty of them perched on the stairs leading to her dressing-room, after a matinee performance, waiting to speak to her. While we were in Washington there was scarcely a day that did not bring some little gift of remembrance or a batch of letters and telegrams from her admirers in Boston, where she played so long at the Castle Square."

Whittlesey's Future

White Whittlesey's farewell performance at the Alcazar tomorrow night will be an event. His admirers here are many and enthusiastic. They do not concede him to be second to any of the older men who are recognized romantic stars. As a matter of fact Drew, Miller, Skinner and Faversham are becoming a little gray about the temples. Whittlesey has the fire and enthusiasm of youth, and is graceful and handsome. He has refinement, keen intelligence and distinction. Belasco, Mayer and Price are starting him on tour with three fine plays, and better actors and productions than come with many of the visiting Eastern stars. There is no reason why they should not find him as safe and permanent an investment as that other Pacific coast idol, Florence Roberts.

London, and Saul Liebling, of Berlin—all pianists. So it will be seen that she comes of a musical family. This is her third season with Sousa, and she has also been a member of the Conried grand opera company, the royal opera at Dresden, and the foremost of the concert companies. She will have some excellent numbers on the programs of the concerts which will be given at the Alhambra beginning Sunday night, the seventeenth instant.

"Down the Line"

Howard Jacott has written the best of the local burlesques that have been "tried out" at Fischer's. Jud Brusie and J. C. Crawford had a modicum of success with theirs, but none of them was so compact, so well whipped into shape, as is Jacott's "Down the Line." Probably it is the familiar scenes, places we all know, that keep up the interest, added to local types with which we are naturally familiar, for the music is not especially original, nor any more catchy than that in the burlesques that have gone before. But Jacott has incorporated some bright features into his piece, the "Minstrel Maids" being a particularly brilliant addition. Georgia O'Ramey leads the minstrel maids, and they fall into line very cleverly. Dorothy Morton has a good entrance and her new "Fishing" verses are full of wit. "Here comes Pansy" is one of her songs in the new burlesque. Flossie Hope and Pearl Hickman do some graceful but strenuous dancing and assist Bobby North in his "Edna" song, and Rice and Cady have an amusing specialty. Miss Morton and Clarke do a travesty on grand opera which though not especially new is done in a sprightly way that captures the audience.

Jefferson and the Inquisitor

Joseph Jefferson has retired from the stage, by reason of illness that precludes the possibility of his ever acting again. More stories are told about, and by, this veteran actor than have emanated from any other stage autobiographer. I recollect one good one. Jefferson was asked to spend a week with a Scotch peer and among the guests was a brilliant and haughty lady, the daughter of an Earl. "I suppose," says Mr. Jefferson, "there must have been a homespun flavor in my American manners that amused her, for she made a deadset at quizzing me. I did not detect it at first and answered some of her absurd questions about America quite innocently. She kept her face so well that I might never have discovered this but for the idiotic grin upon the smooth face of one of her boyish admirers, and then I felt, for the honor of my country, that if she ever made another thrust at me I would parry it. I had not long to wait, for, emboldened by her late success, she turned upon me and said: 'By the by, have you met the Queen lately?' 'No, madam,' replied I, with perfect seriousness, 'I was out when her Majesty called upon me.' She colored slightly and then turned away and never spoke to me again, but I was revenged."

A Sweet Singer

Of the new numbers on the Orpheum's bill this week Madame Avery Strakosch's singing is by far the most enjoyable. It is that kind of vocalism in which art conceals art. Madame Strakosch, in spite of her foreign name, is all "home, sweet home" in looks and accent. All her songs are chosen with the idea of simplicity, yet to compel interest, and she succeeds without effort. "Annie Laurie," which she gives as an encore, is delightfully true and sweet. Hoey and Lee, an Hebraic duo; Box, a not very distinctive whistling comedian; and the Pucks, a pair of clever little children, a little Eva contrasted with a slavey, are the other new people. The Urbanis still delight and thrill with their herculean feats.

Automobile Notes

The Pope Toledo Touring Car Company has received the following telegrams:

"Pope-Toledo at Chicago races October first win first, second, third and fourth in ten mile handicap. Lytle starting from scratch with twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledo stock car entered in Vanderbilt Cup race caught twenty horse Renault who had six minutes handicap at eighth mile, also twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledo stock car first and second in heavy weight class and also first in start and stop race. Pope-Toledo at Philadelphia October first in five mile handicap won first and second, defeating sixty horse Mercedes and special Peerless, also Pope-Toledo first and second in five mile race for stripped cars. Also first in five mile race for touring cars fully equipped, defeating four-cylinder Winton and Morrison special Peerless. Pope-Toledo captured everything in sight.—Pope Motor Car Company."

"At Empire track September twenty-fourth Pope-Toledo twenty-four horse-power stock car won Old Glory cup, being five mile open, full equipment, carrying four people; Peerless second."

"Five mile Empire handicap Pope-Toledo twenty-four horse power stock car second, defeating E. R. Thomas sixty horse-power Mercedes, forty horse-power Renault, special Peerless driven by Morrison, and Ford special racer. F. I. A. T. forty horse-power first.—Pope Motor Car Co."

E. R. Dimond has placed an order with the Pope Toledo Touring Car Company for January delivery for a forty horse-power Pope-Toledo car with side entrance tonneau. This car will be fitted in royal blue and be supplied with a Cape Cod top. Mr. Dimond is taking a great deal of interest in automobiling and certainly will have one of the finest cars of 1905 that can be produced. A Pope-Toledo four-cylinder car has been ordered by George H. Lent. Mr. W. P. Fuller has also placed his order for a side entrance Pope-Toledo to be delivered in January. George P. Fuller, the Pacific coast amateur race king, has placed an order with the Pope-Toledo Company for a fifty horse-power Gordon Bennett Pope-Toledo racing car. The Pope Toledo Company has received an order from Mr. George A. Pope for a forty horse-power Pope-Toledo car of the side entrance type. This car will cost six thousand one hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Pope will get delivery of his car about March first.

Harry Leyman, assistant general manager of the Pope Motor Car Company, spent a week with their representatives, the Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company, and reports one-third of the 1905 output already sold and that their output will be the largest ever attempted by any high class automobile manufactory, and between nine hundred and one thousand four-cylinder cars will be produced by this company between the present time and July first, 1905.

The Rival Goose Guns

It was late in October when George, Jack and I started on an outing up Suisun way. The trip might have proved a regulation "two days' shoot" if those ancient "kiddies" hadn't started "to game" each other, which ended in their falling into a trap that surprised them both. They never got over the laugh I had on them, but it cost us all a pretty day's sport.

Never a time did we go out together but those two snappers went at each other hammer and tongs on the merits of their respective guns, dogs and tricks at getting game. No matter how good the one's outfit was, the sole object of the other in life seemed to be to puncture it with dum-dum bullets. If one got a bigger bag than the other, the low-notch man always attributed it to the wind, or position, or the — fool ducks that couldn't pass some guns without trying to ram their heads down the muzzles. Next to the day's shoot the greatest zest they seemed to get out of the jaunt was to devil each other.

Geese gave signs of being in plenty that year and I remember we made great preparations to have a keen go at them. Jack and George gorged themselves with all kinds of geese dope, each striving to be in trim to do the other up when it came to the shoot. At that time we used to lunch together occasionally down at the "Fly Trap" and the way those two bombarded each other with arguments gave signs that the honkers would have a hard time when the two turned loose among them to prove their assertions. George was banking on a nine and one-half pound ten-gauge for pulling 'em down at long range. He had had her overhauled and several new-fangled notions added that were supposed to put her ahead and away from any other gun in her line. What these new-fangled notions were George wouldn't say. Even the most tantalizing baiting by the curious Jack would only bring out, "Wait and see: it'll put your old shooter into the scrap-heap so quick that you'll have to admit you were not in the shooting."

Jack had an old reliable nine-pounder which he used to swear by but for some unaccountable reason he planned to rack that and to take along on this trip a four-gauge, single barrel that looked as if it might have been one of the Spanish cannon captured by Dewey at Manila. He confessed he had great confidence in the "thing" because it was strongly vouched for by an old goose hunter who had a great reputation up the Sacramento valley.

My own gun was the stand-by seven and one-half pound twelve-gauge hammerless. I stood them both off by declaring that a four-gauge should never be built and a ten-gauge, while excellent for those who fancy such size, never beat my "little 'un."

All this bantering between the guns kept up even as we trailed over the Suisun marsh to the shack where we were going to put up. It was growing dusk, but we were too long at the game not to be in readiness for the morrow's sport.

The ground and grass were dry and we lounged in comfort, gazing over the long stretch of marshland. The light seemed almost good enough to shoot by, yet the eye could not distinguish the outline of a bunch of reeds only a few rods away. But we had ears to hear and we heard many sounds that thrilled like sweetest music. In time there came the hiss of wings from the gloom overhead, that increased as moments passed, till at last the entire upper air seemed to fill with hurrying fowl.

Whiz-whew-whiz—wings incessant were beating restlessly to and fro, swift bodies hissed through the air, and from the creeks and ponds came a confused clamor of cries. Splash—plump—splash—whiff! we could hear fowl striking the water, while an endless clattering hinted that rare fun was going on out there in the dark. Suddenly from directly overhead sounded a heavy beating of broad pinions—wiff, wiff. Then a ringing call dropped like a rock down through the night: "A-runk—onk—ar-runk."

"Geese! D'ye hear 'em? Big gray, boys: sure, we feel 'em, though we cannot see 'em."

In the midst of the excitement we decided to turn in, every blessed son of us impatient to kill time in slumber against that longed for moment before dawn when we should jump to begin the day's sport.

On the way to our stands the bantering broke out again between the guns. We found plenty of cover close to the water and for a time we devoted ourselves to the duck, but they were flying "small and long"—in small bunches and a long while between 'em. But we were there for geese and we regarded the ducks as only preliminaries to the big go.

In time a faint clamor, almost lost in the wind, warned us to lie low, and a moment later a string of honkers labored along just above the cover where George lay crouched. He hadn't expected them so low and they rattled him. He arose to his knees and fired slap bang at the leaders; and in his haste missed clean.

The rest of the line swerved quickly to one side. That swerve brought them nearer to me and I yelled "Grab one by the leg, George." Then I fired at a pair that offered an easy mark, dropped both, and shoved home a shell to get the two last on the line and not thirty yards away.

Any quick shot in my place could have grassed four birds easily but I lost time glancing around to ascertain why George wasn't jumping at his chance. He was a quick man and it seemed strange to me he hadn't even taken a snap chance at them. What was his boasted ten-gauge doing? Finally I got a line on him and saw him crouching low, apparently tinkering at something. Then I remembered his boasted new-fangled attachments. I laughed and honked like a goose. He growled.

His new-fangled appliances were out of order and had choked the action of his breech. I looked over in Jack's direction to see if he had discovered George's mishap. Jack was actively creeping low over the marsh to gain a cover off to the left. I swept the horizon to see the cause, and far away was a bunch of honkers coming our way. Jack had gauged their flight and then came the roar of his gun—a veritable explosion. A great cloud of smoke went drifting slowly away. Something went whizzing above my head. Jack was rolling in the marsh. I ran toward him, for I thought his case must be serious. Presently he sat up ruefully rubbing his right shoulder.

"Kick?" I asked, grinning, for I remembered what wonderful things that four-bore was to do when turned loose on a line of geese.

"—— ———," he answered.

I found his four-bore in the grass, and couldn't help laughing despite his scowls. Eight inches of the muzzle end were blown clear away—now I understood what it was that went whizzing above my head a few minutes before.

"Did the mud and grass get in the barrel, Jack, when you were doing the sneak crawl to closer cover on those geese?" I asked.

"Um—mum, mum," he mumbled, still rubbing his sore shoulder.

George came up and cackled delightedly when he learned the fate of the four-bore.

"Where's your gun, George?" I asked. His note changed instantly and he said, sheepishly: "Out there on the marsh somewhere. I was in such a hurry to get her open that I broke or bent something inside."

When at last we found his gun we discovered he was right. The accident to those two famous guns stopped the shooting for that day and we all went back to the shack to see what could be done in patching them up. Jack fixed up George's ten-bore but the four-bore was a thing for the scrap-heap. However it received better treatment. The wily George got it and nailed it up on the wall of his gunnery. Underneath he pegged his ten-bore, and every time he entertained visitors he never failed to regale them with the story of how his ten-bore beat out the four-bore in that famous match on the marshes. Of course he never enlarged on the accident that befell him in using his ten-bore.

—The Other Gun.

Fishing, in the Jeune Siecle

Daughter (for the first time seeing a Society Girl in her war-paint): Pray tell me, mamma, what is that?

Society Mamma (indifferently): That is a society girl, my love.

D.: What is a society girl, mamma?

S. M.: One who is a member of the Smart Set.

D.: And what is the Smart Set, mamma?

S. M.: The Smart Set, my love, is that select number of society people who get written about in the papers.

D.: And why, mamma, do the papers write about them?

S. M.: Because they set the pace, my dear, for others to follow.

D.: What is a pace, mamma?

S. M.: It is the gait, whether fast or slow, that the Smart Set takes, and which is followed by the lesser aggregation.

D.: And what is the lesser aggregation, mamma?

S. M.: The people who are not in the Smart Set.

D.: And why aren't they in the Smart Set, mamma?

S. M.: Because the gates of the Smart Set are closed to them, my love.

The Little Daughter meditates for awhile. She looks again at the Society Girl.

D.: And what is the Society Girl's occupation, mamma?

S. M.: She is fishing for a husband.

D.: What kind of bait does she use, mamma?

S. M.: That depends on circumstances—sometimes it is her face, sometimes her shape; more often it is her bank-book.

D.: What kind of fish does she angle for?

S. M.: That also depends on circumstances—if her bank-roll is long, the fish is usually a foreign title.

D.: But that, mamma, has no money attached to it.

S. M.: A title is better than money, my love, for use in the Smart Set.

D.: But suppose the Society Girl has no bank-roll for bait?

S. M.: Then she cannot catch a titled fish.

D.: What does she fish for, then?

S. M.: An American millionaire.

D.: And what bait, mamma, must she use for this fish?

S. M.: Her beauty—possibly her style—sometimes only diplomacy is necessary.

D.: And what, mamma, will she do when she hooks her fish?

S. M.: Marry him, my love.

D.: Suppose she finds out then that he isn't the right kind of fish?

S. M.: Then she will divorce him.

D.: Is this easily done, mamma?

S. M.: In California, yes; in South Dakota, even more easily.

D.: Is the Society Girl very nice, mamma?

S. M.: Sometimes. Usually, she is only up-to-date.

THE COLONIAL

THE SELECT HOTEL

S. E. COR. PINE AND JONES STS.

D.: And what is up-to-date, mamma?

S. M.: Having all the knowledge of the matron, added to the guile of the maid.

D.: Shall I be an up-to-date Society Girl, mamma, when I am old enough to debut?

S. M.: If you are over-clever, you will, I fear, be a bachelor maid.

D.: What is a bachelor maid, mamma?

S. M.: A young woman who affects independence, has her own bank account, smokes and drinks and carries a latch-key.

D.: Does she go fishing for men, too, mamma?

S. M.: Not so often as the men fish for her.

D.: Do the men like her better, then, than they do the society girl, mamma?

S. M.: Married men do—very rarely the single ones.

D.: Then, mamma, I do not care to be a bachelor maid; I'd rather be a society girl and do my own fishing.

S. M.: Very well, you will be but taking example from your mother before you.

D.: And when I am old like you, mamma, may I still fish for men?

S. M.: That depends on whether your income warrants your patronizing a first-class modiste and beauty doctor.

A LOVING CUP

Presented to Captain Logan of the battleship Ohio on October third at a banquet given by the Ohio Society for that purpose. The cup is the gift of Miss Helen Deshler of Columbus, Ohio, and has been on exhibition in the windows of Shreve & Company, who conceived and executed it. The cup is sixteen inches in full diameter and fourteen inches in height, of unusually graceful proportions, bordered upon the top and base rims by the "Fourteenth Century Border" design, the handles carrying the same scheme.

American Eagles with spread wings rest upon projecting portions of the base and add an appropriate and patriotic touch. An interesting incident is connected with the main motive of the "Buckeye" design, so prominent upon this Love Cup. Mr. Deshler himself plucked the original sprig of Buckeye in the Capitol grounds in Columbus, and from this living branch of the Ohio State Emblem the designers and craftsmen worked directly.

THE WATCH BOOK.

Advertising has become such an art nowadays that men of brains do not disdain to use their talent in producing literature that has the exploitation of business as its motive. For instance, Morgan Shepard has compiled a little history of the watch, which, in its general make-up, appeals to the fancy of the book-collector, and will likely be added to many of such collections. There is but a limited edition of "The Watch Book" issued. It is printed on hand-made paper, with tipped illustrations upon vellum, the latter showing various rare makes of watches. The history of the watch is traced from the earliest days to modern times, the rude time-pieces of olden times being contrasted with the beautiful watches manufactured by modern watch-makers, including Shreve & Co., for whom Mr. Shepard compiled his booklet. Though brief, this history of the watch is very accurate, and is written in very readable style. The artistic manner of its get-up is worthy of imitation by other firms.

"It's a long lane that has no Oldsmobile." This is the slogan of the Olds Motor Works, who are turning out thirty-five machines daily at their factories in Detroit and Lansing. The Pioneer Automobile Company has been advised by a visitor from the East, who spent a few days at the Oldsmobile factories, that the factories are working day and night and that a sufficient number of orders has been received from all over the United States and foreign countries to keep them going constantly for the next ninety days. Two carloads of Oldsmobile runabouts and a carload of tonneaus are due to arrive at the Pioneer Automobile Company's place this week.

Henry Leon of San Jose drove his 1904 Winton touring car to San Francisco on Saturday last and on Sunday, drove it through Golden Gate park and the Presidio.

John S. Craig of Woodland again drove his Winton from Woodland to San Francisco on Sunday last. This makes the eighth time Mr. Craig has driven his machine to San Francisco during the past four months and during that time his car has not once been laid up for repairs.

F. S. Jacks of Napa is now in San Francisco where he will remain for a week or ten days and enjoy himself riding around in his new Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car which last week he purchased from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

J. B. Nourse of Chico last week purchased a steam Locomobile surrey from the Pioneer Company.

J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage company, with a party of friends made the usual trip in their Pierce Arrows to San Jose on Saturday, returning on Sunday evening. The Mobile Carriage company also sent two of its Pierce Arrows in rental service to San Jose, Sunday.

Dr. Ryfkogel claims the longest distance record in San Francisco. He has run his Pierce stanhope over twenty thousand miles on the streets of San Francisco. This machine was among the first automobiles put out by the George N. Pierce company, which is now building the four-cylinder Pierce Arrow. The record made by Dr. Ryfkogel's machine exceeds that of any other on the Pacific coast, and is now in good condition. It proves the wisdom of buying a good car. While the price was seemingly great when he purchased it, the service which he received was more satisfactory and cost less than were he using a cheaper and poorly constructed automobile. The results of Dr. Ryfkogel's Pierce stanhope is a guarantee of the excellent quality and durability of the four-cylinder Arrows.

E. J. Carpenter has just returned from an extended trip East. Mr. Carpenter is an enthusiastic automobilist, and examined carefully the different machines on the market. He visited the establishment of Banker Brothers of New York City, agents for the four-cylinder Pierce Arrow, and there he inspected the 1905 model, which has the side entrance and cast aluminum body. He says it is one of the finest built machines, French cars not excepted, which he had seen in the different cities.

C. A. Hawkins, general manager of the White Sewing Machine Company, left for the East last week and will be away about a month. He will visit the fair at St. Louis, and will spend some time at the White Company at Cleveland hurrying up coast orders for Model E White touring cars.

Selma, a small town near Fresno, got the automobile fever recently, and two machines of the runabout class were bought, and last week a third was added to the list. The Enterprise says of the latest auto in Selma: "C. Bachtold purchased a fine automobile last week, a White steamer, and will now spin over the country in perfect style. He made his first run to Fresno with great success."

Interest in automobiling in San Diego has been on the increase for the past six months and new machines are continually being brought in. The White touring car is one of the most popular in this Southern city, and S. O. Wood, a mining engineer, is the latest purchaser of one of these silent running machines in San Diego.

"The White Steamer, a product of Cleveland, O.," said the editor in a recent issue of Town Topics of New York, "did work over the Bull Run fields that filled the military observers with astonishment. Up hills, across fields, over the roughest of stony roads, through deep sand, everywhere and anywhere these machines responded to the severest demand. I tested one for more than forty miles under conditions I believed impossible to be surmounted by an auto, and the result convinced me that the near future will see the automobile as large a part of the outfit of an army as the army wagon and mule have been."

The Horseless Age has compiled some interesting automobile statistics. Among other things the following table is given, showing the population and cars owned in eight States for which official figures are available:

State	Population	Cars
New York	7,278,000	6,400
Massachusetts	2,805,000	5,045
New Jersey	1,883,000	3,300
Connecticut	908,000	2,000
Minnesota	1,751,000	900
Rhode Island	428,000	800
Iowa	2,231,000	744
Maryland	1,188,000	250

These eight States have less than one-quarter of the total population of the United States, but it would, of course, be entirely wrong, says the statistician, to estimate the cars owned in the rest of the States on the basis of relative population. The very fact that the above eight States have registration laws, while the rest of the States have none, indicates that in the former the automobile has become such a factor in public life as to call for legislative control of its use. However, some of the chief automobile using States are not included in the above list, as, for instance, Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania.

George C. Tyler, who occupies the same position for the Lieblers that E. D. Price fills for Belasco and Mayer, has just returned to New York after an interesting trip in Europe. With his chief aide and a French chauffeur, Tyler traveled in an automobile more than eight thousand miles in France, Italy and Spain, not a single accident marring the pleasure of the trip. Tyler enjoyed it so much that he has already arranged to make a longer trip next year. "I never had a finer time than on my motor car trip," he said. "My car was only eighteen horse-power, but it was speedy. We frequently traveled two hundred and seventy-five to three hundred and fifty miles a day. Of course, the roads are good in France and Italy. In Spain they are not near so good, but better than ours for all that. We were treated with the utmost courtesy at every place we went to in Spain. We didn't try to break any records and were never in any hurry when going through villages. When we were on clear roads we went fast and used to reel off a mile a minute. We had a lot of fun and attracted a great deal of attention simply because of our long trip and the fact that we met with no accidents. The way to see Europe is in an automobile."

Motoring and Boating of New York commenced a competition in their columns recently to determine the most popular motor car, and in a recent issue they publish the vote for the White steam car, and the reasons given by the voter, which in part are as follows: "The three essentials in an automobile are: Safety, reliability and economy. Other factors are desirable, but not absolutely essential. The White steam car combines in a higher degree than any other the three essential qualifications named, as well as many other desirable ones. Safety: The material used is of the highest grade known to modern science. The workmanship is of the most skillful kind. Reliability: Steam is an old, tried and faithful servant. Because of its elasticity it is an ideal power for propelling vehicles over a highway where the power required is constantly changing on account of grade and surface conditions. On many a hard-fought field the White has proved its reliability—so much so, that in endurance contests it has become a stock phrase for the press to say: 'The Whites came in in a bunch, day after day, with the regularity of clockwork.' The New York Herald, reporting the Pittsburg endurance run, said: 'The best collective showing was made by the Whites.' Economy: The first cost of a car—within reasonable limits—does not so much signify. The repair bills are what try men's souls. On account of the simplicity of the White system and because of the character of material and workmanship, the car is so staunchly built that the factor of safety throughout is large—hence repairs are at the minimum; 'Just as good as a White' is the highest praise that may be bestowed on any other car."

O Rare October Days

O, the rare days of October, when the stubbles are all bare
 And the harvest is outstanding in the shock.
 When the russet leaves turn golden, and the world's without a care,
 As the sunrise glints on barrel and on stock.

O, the days of hearty tramping after calling, cuddling quail,
 With the faithful pointers ranging or at heels;
 What can mar the exultation as the hunter scans the vale,
 Or the pleasures that on such a day he feels.

When the birds rise from the covert, with a whirr that surges thro'
 Every nerve and sets them tingling with a thrill;
 While the soul is all absorbed with a glance along the blue
 And the query: Shall I miss or shall I kill?

O, the rare days of October, with the dogs both on a point,
 And the bonny quail a-skimming o'er the lea;
 Let the politicians wrangle o'er the city's twisted joint:
 Give the hunting joys of these "rare days" to me.

"Give! Give!"

The cry of need, and the cry of greed,
 Is the cry that is heard afar,
 Is the cry that has run since the world was begun
 From the ether-rimmed earth to the governing sun
 And has trembled from star to star;
 The unequal strife in the struggle for life
 Has embittered the upright soul,
 And the god of the purse is the god that we curse,
 While we bow to him, hip and jowl.

The cry is hurled round a purse-proud world,
 This cry of the grasping hand;
 Who relieves those in need for the love of the deed
 Coaxes censure like that for a singular creed
 We come never to understand.
 The cry that will live is the fierce cry of "Give!"
 Hear the multiple echoes roll!
 Though the god of the purse is the god that we curse,
 Yet we bow to him, hip and jowl.

This cry upraised to the god that's praised
 Is unchecked by the touch of death,
 And the soft word that slips through the child's coaxing lips
 Is the word that is voiced by the wanton who strips
 With the blight of her vampire breath.
 The loves that we know and the follies we show
 Are forgiven, if full the bowl;
 Though the god of the purse is the god that we curse,
 Yet we bow to him, hip and jowl.

Music at Trinity

The monthly musical services at Trinity church were resumed last Sunday evening at eight o'clock. Part first of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, the soloists being Miss Flynn and Mrs. Warshauer, sopranos, Miss Fairweather and Mrs. Lawrence, contraltos, Mr. Rosekrans and Mr. Rowan, tenors, Mr. Oksen, baritone, Mr. Williamson, basso. At the offertory Miss Grace Jenkins played Borowski's "Adoration" for violin. Louis H. Eaton is the organist and director of Trinity choir. A large audience was in attendance upon this occasion, and listened with appreciation and enjoyment to the rendition of Part I of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The acoustic properties of Trinity church are such as to render it almost impossible at times to follow the theme without conscious effort and a sense of auditory exertion. There are moments when the sounds commingle, or crash upon each other in a manner that causes vexation of spirit. It seems as if the human voices suffer more from these conditions than does the instrumental part of the program. In the oratorio as given last Sunday night, the burden of the work, as Elijah, fell upon Mr. Oksen, the baritone, who went far to meet the requirements of the part. His voice is round and full and he sings with earnestness and impressiveness. As the prophet, calling upon his God to show forth His majesty and His might, to confound the priests of Baal, Mr. Oksen sang with force, feeling and dignity, at times swelling into the exultant strain of a faith already triumphing over the downfall of the enemies of the Most High. His tones are sonorous and in the passage, "Call him louder . . . so awaken him: call him louder," the full quality of his voice showed to its best advantage. In the prayer of Elijah, "Lord, My God, O let the spirit of this child return that he again may live!" Mr. Oksen's voice had a heavy, full, satisfying, compelling earnestness that carried with it a conviction in the efficacy of prayer. It must be said, however, that his singing is somewhat uneven, that he passes somewhat too abruptly from one effect to another, this being particularly noticeable at the close of some of his sentences. The chorus was composed of earnest, attentive musicians, and gave evidence of careful training and conscientious study, and much assiduous practice. The women's voices, as a whole, were more pleasing in effect, the ensemble better and more harmonious and melodious than the men's. The men's part of the chorus did not lack in force or volume, but there were moments when one or two voices became unduly prominent in the ensemble work, somewhat marring the effect. Mr. Rosekrans rendered his recitatives with good effect, albeit he was a trifle nasal at times. In the passage, "Forsake your idols, return to God," Mr. Rosekrans gave forth one of his best notes, full and well rounded in tone. Miss Flynn, who sang the soprano role of the widow, was clear and musical, particularly in the quality of her upper notes. Her duet with Mr. Oksen in the recitative and air beginning, "What have I to do with thee, O man of God," was one of the features of the evening. Miss Fairweather's solo, "Get thee home: depart," brought out her full rich contralto tones in grand style. Her work was full of feeling, sympathy and intelligent appreciation of her part. The single quartet was more pleasing than the double one. The chorus was perhaps most effective in the passage relative to the fall of the fire from heaven, the consuming of the burnt offering and the adjuration, "Before Him on your faces fall" and "Open the heavens" were their best work. The organ was under the masterly control of Mr. Eaton. As an accompaniment to the closing chorus, "Thanks be to God, the waters gather, they rush along," the organ was magnificent, bringing out all the sound and fury, the crescendo and effects of a sudden storm of rain and wind and the rush of mighty waters. Mr. Eaton is to be congratulated upon the success of his work, and the Trinity church choir is deserving of much praise.

California Club's Music Section

Very earnest work is being done by the music section of California Club of which Mrs. John D. Sibley is director and Mrs. Frank L. Platt secretary. At the meeting October fourteenth the compositions of Sir Edward Elgar will be considered. Mrs. A. J. #### In Sacramento

The Saturday Club of Sacramento has arranged its program of work for the remainder of 1904, and beginning of 1905. Among the events will be a song recital by Wilhelm Heinrich, piano recital by Miss Joan Baldwin, song recital by Mrs. Carroll-Nicholson and Mrs. Davis-Northrup, piano recital by Arthur Friedheim, piano recital by Josef Hofmann, concert by the Kopta Quintet, also one by the Kneisel Quartet, song recital by David Bispham, violin recital by Miss Marie Nichols, and a piano lecture recital on "Parsifal," by Bruce Kingsley. Candidates for active membership in the Saturday Club have to undergo an examination before the Board of Directors. Pianists are required to play one number of their choosing and one selection by one of the following composers: Beethoven, Chopin, Brahms, Schumann. Vocalists are required to sing one song of their own choosing and one selection by one of the following composers: Schubert, Schumann, MacDowell, Grieg, Lassen, Rubinstein.

Their Third Recital

Many children were in the large audience that attended the third operatic recital of Mario and Maria Roeckel last Thursday evening in Y. M. C. A. Auditorium. It was the twins' twelfth birthday and they were literally showered with flowers and gifts during the course of the program. There are probably other children whose vocal and dramatic gifts are as remarkable as those of the Roeckel twins but there are but few who show the effects of such careful training, or who have made such good use of their lessons. Withal, they are simple, childlike and utterly lacking in self-consciousness. Maria's voice is larger and of wider compass than the boy's, but the latter is a born actor. In his dramatic interpretation of the recitative from "Pagliacci" and "La Donna e Mobile" from "Rigoletto," he has caught the very spirit of Tonio and the fickle royal lover. Maria gives the spinning and jewel scene from "Faust" with the grace and intelligence of an adult prima donna, and her trills and staccatos are accurate and clear. The Luckstone valse, "Diletto," was another especially good number in a program containing selections from Rossini, Braga, Monpou, Balfe, Mascagni, Donizetti and Verdi, with songs by Joseph Roeckel, arranged to fit the children's range. The little serenade by Roeckel, to Tom Hood's words, with the crying child refrain, was one of the best appreciated selections.

The Pasmore Concert

There was somehow a lack of spirit in the recital given by the Pasmore pupils last Thursday evening. There was plenty of beautifully produced tone, but either the hot weather or the fatigue of preparation caused several of the singers to fall short of the good work expected from them. The program opened by a part song, "What my Lover Said," composed by Mr. Pasmore and interpreted by Mrs. Florence Wyman Gardner, Mrs. Edith Scott Basford, Mr. A. E. Nowlan and Mr. H. B. Pasmore. In the Dell' Acqua "Chanson Provençal" Miss Julia M. Kinsey of Haywards did a charming bit of coloratura work. Her Randegger number was not so well rendered. Mr. Nowlan's velvety tenor was heard to good advantage in his two Pasmore songs. Mrs. Gardner was effective in Bishop's "Lo! Hear the Gentle Lark," with flute obligato by Mr. C. A. Neale. Mr. Neale's work in this and the Handel aria was one of the brightest bits on the program. Mr. R. Charles Trowbridge of San Jose displayed a fine tenor in the Rigoletto quartet and later on in his own solo, "Where e'er you Walk" (Handel). Mr. A. Fickenschier played the accompaniment to his three songs, and lovely things they were. They were not happily interpreted, however, by Mrs. Fickenscher. Her style is somewhat affected and her articulation is indistinct. Mrs. Beulah George Faull sang Handel's "Sweet Bird" with flute obligato and string accompaniment. Miss Grace Needham was charming in her songs, "Song Bridge" and "All are Sleeping" (Pasmore), with string accompaniment; and Mrs. Mitchell in her two songs, "Roses in June" (German) and "At the making of the Hay" (Lehman). The concert closed with a part song by John Harradan Pratt, rendered by Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. Basford, Mr. Nowlan and Mr. Pasmore.

At the Teachers' Annuity Fund benefit at the Chutes this week, the marvelous whistling of Miss Hilda Schlesinger was a feature of the programs. Miss Schlesinger is one of Miss M. Gertrude Judd's pupils, and she is studying with view to a professional career. She is a beautiful girl and her attractive stage presence adds to the interest the audience takes in her solos.

Francisca's Farewell

Last Saturday afternoon, in the big and cold barnlike Alhambra, before an audience lamentably cold and small, Mme. Fannie Francisca opened her farewell concert with the difficult "Herodiade" aria which she sang in superb fashion, proving herself a finished artist possessed of an unusually beautiful voice. The other two arias—"Philemon et Baucis," and "Semiramide"—were not so happily chosen; but, to make up for that, "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin," the "Last Rose of Summer"—given for an encore—and the "Mignon" Polonaise, were more than deserving of the bravos that were at last elicited from the thawed-out handful of music-lovers. The vastness of the difference between concert and operatic singing Mme. Francisca has not yet, as it seems to me, fully realized. I should very much like to hear her where I believe she is most at home. That a voice and an artistry like hers should have drawn but half-houses here is one of those mysteries of the musical world which the critic is powerless to solve. Eugene Marcellino accompanied "conscientiously," and in like manner gave a piano solo and a violin solo, both of his own composition.

OUR MEMBERS AT 4 A. M. SUNDAY MORNING.

The members of the Kubler Gun Club at Mt. Eden have stored away the clay pigeon apparatus and are already prepared for the opening day. At present the prospects for a good shoot are excellent. The report is that the marsh is well covered with the elusive Sprig, Teal and Spoonies.

The club classes among its members several excellent shots and they are looking forward to nothing less than "the limit." The regular opening day banquet will be held at the Club house. Following are the names of the members for the '04 and '05 season:

Bachelor Missed It

Unless Irving Bacheller feels that it is his duty to keep one plate spinning perpetually in the air, it is not by any means clear what purpose he could have had in publishing his latest novel, "Vergilius." He has been unusually fortunate in having his former books sell well, and if he has purchased even a tithe of the country estates, gold mines and other expensive toys that have been credited to him, the bread-and-butter question cannot be so vitally pressing as to justify such an insignificant pot-boiler. "Vergilius" is about on the level of the work that used to be demanded from high school pupils a generation ago, when they were directed to describe minutely a day in the life of a Roman Senator or an evening in the castle of an English gentleman of the fourteenth century, in order to determine how much besides dates and names they had absorbed of their history and supplementary reading. It is the kind of thing that any intelligent youth ought to be able to produce after saturating himself with "Ben Hur," "Quo Vadis?" and a few more early Christian romances or a full meal of the specials in a Christmas annual. Mr. Bacheller has placed his romance in the time of Augustulus, a love story in which the lovers are separated by imperial decree, and meet and wed in spite of obstacles. Part of the scene is laid in Rome and part in Jerusalem, but it might as well have been in Union Square or the back yard, so far as convincingness is concerned, and the characters are no more alive than the couches they recline on or the cushions they lean against, in spite of their bearing, in many instances, historical or Biblical names. The bad young man makes his female slaves pose nude as Venuses, but he doesn't care. He inveigles his enemy into the cage of a savage panther, but it doesn't stir one's blood; he plots the murder of his own father, and it is only dull, and he bribes the captain of a galley to wreck his vessel, and one wonders when something worth while will happen. When the slaves are crucified or beaten to death, one is more inclined to sympathize with their master, who is annoyed by their shrieks, than with those who are undergoing the more direct torture, and when Vergilius has his fight with the wild beasts before Herod, one hasn't the least inclination to look over into the pit to see how the battle is going. When Mr. Bacheller was writing of the Champlain Valley and the quaint characters of that vicinity in the early part of the last century he was on his own ground. He knew what he was writing about and he had something to say that was worth listening to. He believed in himself, and others believed in him. Now he has given a second-rate shadow of something he has read and the effect of it is a feeling that he imagines he owns his public and can afford to take liberties. It is a risky thing to do. If one may presume to offer advice, the wisest thing Mr. Bacheller can do is to call in this book and destroy it. It will add nothing to his reputation, and it is not a contribution to literature. Even the need of money is not a justification from one who can do better things. Published by Harper.

A Sermon on Hair

Juliet Marion Lee, the hair specialist who contributed a series of practical papers on the subject of rational care of the hair to the New York Journal, has collected her articles into a neat little volume, "How to Care for the Hair at all Times." Unlike most such publications, Miss Lee has not undertaken to advertise any specific, lotion, restorer or patent application of any kind. She is straightforward enough to state that like other drugs and mendicants, such things should be prescribed, when needed, to fit the particular case. Neither does she guarantee to produce Samson locks on a head resembling a billiard ball, nor to prevent hair from turning gray, nor to perform any other miracle. Hair, like anything else, must be properly taken care of, and the proper methods of combing and brushing, arranging and shampooing are set forth at length. There is no secret process, and no apparatus of any kind is recommended—nothing that any one, man, woman or wise child cannot put into practice. Rational common sense is the principle on which the author bases her directions and admonitions. The volume is neat, attractive and interesting. It ought to prove a welcome addition to miladi's most intimate library and it will cost less than a single bottle of some quack application, sure to do more harm than good. Published by the author.

Charles Keeler will contribute to the Impressionist Quarterly a series of papers on "Society, Service and Labor." The September number contains a character sketch of William Keith, by George Wharton James, and the frontispiece has been appropriately made a reproduction of his painting, "Upland Pastures."

"The Greatest Living Woman Writer."

It is an old story now, that Marie Corelli has practically ousted Shakespeare from Stratford. It is an older one that she outshadows Keats in Hants, but the tale is told that a tourist intent on a literary pilgrimage begged of a stout inn-keeper the pleasure of inspecting the room in his hostelry where Keats wrote "Endymion." Boniface replied that he "didn't remember to 'ave 'eard of the gen'leman," but rather than that she should be disappointed in her quest he offered to point out the house where Marie Corelli had written "The Sorrows of Satan." It is all a matter of taste, and pretty hard for the uninitiated to imagine how any greater pleasure could be derived from looking into a room where one thing had been done than from seeing the outside of a house where something else had happened. It wouldn't be any easier to duplicate either "Endymion" or "The Sorrows of Satan" afterward than before.

There is a proposition on foot to erect a statue of Shakespeare in some prominent location in Rome. The effigy is to bear the label, Guglielmo Brandilasta, and of course there is a prolonged roar from all that ever heard the name Shakespeare. Admitting that it is just a little absurd, one would like to know why the Italians may not take the same liberties with Shakespeare that we do with Christopher Columbus, say, by way of an example. And while the battle rages over whether Bacon was Shakespeare, or Shakespeare Bacon, or both of them somebody else, Guglielmo Brandilasta looks like safe, neutral ground.

A New Army Novel

General Charles King, the indefatigable, will have another book out in the course of a few days. It has been a fashion, of late, to sneer at these tales of army life, and to profess a grand superiority to them. That is as one chooses. People who do not care for army romances are not obliged to read them. People who do are always sure of a wholesome meal of good meat, and no stinting in the commissary. Moreover, the author knows the army from the inside and he can be relied upon to have his men act like real soldiers, not like wooden dummies. "Comrades in Arms" promises the usual variety and interest—usual for General King, but unusual for almost any other living author. The synopsis of the novel outlines enough to furnish material for a whole series in other hands. There is the new lieutenant, apparently with unlimited means at his disposal, transferred to a Western post, where he dazzles the eyes of the army wives and daughters; a round of festivities at the post; whispers and slanders and financial complications; mysterious attacks, plots and counterplots, Indian uprisings, etc. So much for "What Happened in the West." Then comes the Spanish War, and the erstwhile regular army lieutenant in a new role, as Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers; some unexpected meetings; a winter campaign in the Philippines; Aguinaldo; accusations of all kinds, cruelty, treachery; courts-martial; verdicts just and unjust; and woven in and about all this military life is another story of a dishonest agent, a looted estate, a false claimant to the title and inheritance of another estate, and a love story or two, all of which are brought to a happy ending. General King keeps his characters moving. There is always something of interest going on, and he has the faculty of keeping his mysteries well in hand, so that only those impatient souls who must always know "how it is going to turn out," and so eat their dessert before they have earned it by looking at the last chapter first, can tell just how matters are going to develop. The Hobart Company of New York, which has published all of General King's late novels, will be responsible for placing "Comrades in Arms" before the public also.

Paul Elder & Co. have in preparation the publication of the essays given as lectures at the University of California on the Weinstock foundation. The general title is to be "The Morals of Trade." The first number, which will be issued about the middle of October, will be Dr. Albert Shaw's address, "Commercialism and Morality."

Senator Hoar on Americans

From Senator Hoar's speech at the opening of the Clark Summer School, July 13, 1898, a reply to Professor Charles Elliot Norton's speech to the Harvard undergraduates: "It is characteristic of the American people to be trifling. . . . They have acquired a varnish of civilized life, but their natures are not refined. . . . The Americans are seventy million of good-natured people gifted with a fatal optimism, with no serious thought of the grave duties of life. . . . They have no fine sense of honor. They cannot distinguish between what is honest and what is dishonest. I feel with Horace Walpole, that I could be proud of my country if it were not for my countrymen." Thus far Dr. Norton. "The best instruction," said Hoar, apropos of this, "which the youth of a country like ours can have is its own history, and the best result of that instruction is a good hope. If any man attempt to tarnish or destroy either, if it be due to ignorance, it is pitiable; if it be due to arrogance or conceit, it is criminal. Honor, like all other great sentiments, is incapable of exact description or portraiture. But the American people know what she is well enough. She has dwelt among them from the beginning. She does not disdain to be the solace of the poor man or the companion of the humble. She is found in the workshop of the mechanic and in the plain dwelling of the farmer. She sits by the citizen on the wooden bench of the town house and by the nurse at the dying bed in the hospital. They know least of her who chatter and prate about her in the safety of college lecture-rooms. But our boys know all about her. She comforted Grout as he sank beneath the waves of the Potomac at Ball's Bluff. The touch of her soft hand was on the head of Spurr when, as his last act of authority, the dying hero ordered back to the ranks the men who would have borne him to a place of safety, and so, instead of one, gave three soldiers to his country. She, invisible, but with a most intense and real spiritual presence, stood on the deck of the Merrimac with Hobson and his brave boys. It is she who, in God's good time, shall whisper comfort to the hearts of the father and mother of Benchley, who died in the trenches of Santiago. I suppose that in the last analysis the sense of honor is nothing but the sense of duty, governing the man without other constraint than his own free choice, and leading him to self-sacrifice. In the bosom where it bears sway, noblesse, noblesse seul, oblige. But for its highest manifestation there must be, to use Jeremy Taylor's phrase, 'A will apt for noble choicées,' and a heart capable of a mighty love. If these utterances came from an enthusiasm for a loftier ideal, from a desire to raise the country to a nobler or loftier plane, we might forgive them. But the men who utter them have neither enthusiasms nor ideals. It is the doctrine of arrogance, of contempt, of pessimism, of bitterness, of despair."

Full of th' expected sport my heart beats high,
And with impatient step I haste to reach
The stubbles, where the scatter'd ears afford
A sweet repast to the yet heedless game.
How my brave dogs o'er the broad furrows bound,
Quat'ring their ground exactly. Ah! that point
Answers my eager hopes, and fills my breast
With joy unspeakable. How close they lie!
Whilst to the spot with steady pace I tend.
Now, from the ground with noisy wing they burst,
And dart away. My victim singled out,
In his aerial course falls short, nor skims
Th' adjoining hedge o'er which the rest unhurt
Have passed.

WHAT CAN I EAT? NOTHING AGREES WITH ME.

Do you ever say that—do you ever feel that life isn't worth living because you are continually in pain, sick to your stomach and can't eat a single mouthful of any substantial food?

After you do eat a little do you feel a lump in your stomach? You know you have dyspepsia and you feel that nothing will cure you.

But there is a cure—a positive cure—a quick cure. That cure is Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers. They haven't been on the market long, but they are doing more for suffering humanity, people suffering with dyspepsia, than any medicine ever gotten out.

After taking a few of Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers you will be in a condition to eat everything you will be strong and well again. No man or woman can expect to be healthy without proper amount of food every day and the proper digestion of this food.

Dyspepsia destroys all the agreeable qualities that enter into a man's or woman's make-up.

It is almost an impossibility for anyone with a severe case of dyspepsia to look pleasant. The continuous, miserable cast-down feeling is bound to make itself shown in appearance and conversation. Dr. Spencer's English Dyspepsia Wafers are the sufferers' certain cure.

Try one box of them and if you don't feel better you will be the first case up to the present time who has not been benefited. Price 50 cts. a box.

An Elated Millionaire

The joke is on the Election Commissioners. They appointed Jimmy Phelan an officer of election, thinking that he would be humiliated and beg off, but the ex-Mayor eagerly grasped the opportunity to bathe in the lime-light. Phelan hopes to be restored to popular favor, and he is struggling to that end. He is always doing things that signalize his public-spirited character. He is active in several bodies that are devoted to the civic welfare, and he is jubilant over the fact that the scandals of the present Administration eclipse the minor shortcomings of his own. He, more than any other man, was responsible for the Charter which has proved so highly conducive to graft, but he hopes to be forgiven for that. It is not generally understood that it was formulated in furtherance of his political interests rather than for the benefit of the city, and the mischief that has resulted from it is believed to be due principally to the perversity of the man now engaged in exploiting its weaknesses. Phelan will serve as an election officer and pose as an humble worker in the ranks. He will get all the glory out of the job that there is in it. Depend on cunning Jim to capitalize it for all it is worth. The Bulletin will probably publish a picture of him at work in the booth, and he will no doubt hire a few hack writers to tell the story in some of the Eastern magazines. As a promoter of personal publicity Jimmy is without a peer in this neck of the woods.

An Infamous Conspiracy

More than the usual interest is being taken this year in the contest for seats on the Superior Bench. It is fortunate that such is the case, for never before in the history of this city did the bosses so brazenly undertake the prostitution of the courts. San Francisco has more than once been in the clutches of unscrupulous bosses, and occasionally men of little integrity and less learning have been nominated for judicial positions. The courts of this city have not been free from scandal, but the men responsible for it were not distinguished for their immorality before their accession to the bench. They posed as respectable and concealed their deformities of character. This year men have been nominated by the two leading parties who are notoriously unfit to dispense justice. They have records and associations of such a character as to cause people to marvel at the boldness of the bosses who nominated them. The enormity of the contemplated outrage is appalling. It is plainly a conspiracy on the part of the bosses to elevate to the bench men who will do their bidding. Such is the result of tolerating as political leaders thifty lawyers whose practice depends on the prestige they may gain by having personal representatives on the bench. It is to be hoped that the exposure of their purpose will insure the election of the four incumbents whose terms are about to expire. It is generally conceded that Judges Kerrigan, Seawell, Trout and Murasky are men of the highest integrity, and it should be the firm resolve of every upright citizen to vote for no other candidate for Superior Judge. No man in such a crisis as this should permit himself to be influenced by the appeal of a friend of a candidate. In voting for the judicial ticket conscience alone should dictate. It may be well to give publicity to the fact that the Ruef interests are being concentrated against Judge Kerrigan, for the reason no doubt that he presides over one of the probate courts. There are rich pickings in the probate department, and Judge Kerrigan has been ably and zealously seconding the efforts of Judge Coffey to safeguard the interests of widows and orphans. As a consequence he has made some enemies, and it is important that a special fight should be made for him. The elevation of Kerrigan means the discomfiture of the grafters.

Her Engagement Trip

So rapidly are the cultured queens of high society shaking off the irksome shackles of conventional restraint, and so common is the bizarrerie of blase dames, so manifest the indifference of high-bred matrons to the old-fashioned canons of polite intercourse, and such the tolerance of indiscretions once tabu, that nothing short of flagrant immorality provokes reproach in their set. Society with a big S is complaisant, and impropriety is a vulgar word that should never be used to describe the conduct of a member of the aristocracy. The rich must not be suspected of having passions. When they do things that seem indiscreet it is because their virtue is immune to temptation. They are so busy giving teas and lawn parties that they are presumed to be preoccupied with those pastimes. It is only the idle poor that Satan finds work for. But the newspapers insist upon exploiting the doings of the Four Hundred, and sometimes they give publicity to an episode that smacks of irregularity, and though they discuss it as if it were a commonplace occurrence, quite consistent with decorous behavior, the effect on the public mind is mischievous. Thus is the pace set for the common herd. The force of example in such instances is vicious, for the polloi, having red corpuscles, should not be encouraged to emulate the passionless rich. The other day Mrs. Hugh Tevis, the famous Denver jilter, started on a trip to Europe, and the newspapers announced that she had a steamer companion in the person of a fast young New Yorker who was recently involved as co-respondent in a sensational divorce suit. By way of pretext for giving publicity to the departure of the widow in company with the rake the newspapers related that there had been rumors of their engagement, and incidentally mentioned that one was to occupy room eighty-nine and, that stateroom ninety had been engaged for the other. It was a most ingeniously treated story, in not the slightest degree hinting at there being anything unusual in the proceeding. One might gather the impression from the newspaper report that it was customary for engaged couples to sail the high seas over preliminary to the tying of the nuptial knot. But we have never heard of the amending of the canons of fashionable intercourse making it optional with betrothed couples to take the treacle-moon trip before instead of after. Here in the benighted West we have been laboring under the impression that it was proper for betrothed people to defer ocean voyages until after marriage, and that then a second stateroom was pronounced surplusage. However it should be remembered that fashions come to us via New York. We all know that widows are permitted greater freedom of conduct than is countenanced in maids, and perhaps an ante-nuptial trip across the ocean with a fiancé is one of the privileges now accorded to widows by the arbiters of what's what. Nevertheless it is surprising that the dailies should have shown such a hungry attention to details as to locate the staterooms. Such exploitation of private affairs stimulates gossip among the vulgar. Atlantic liners are perfectly respectable institutions, and a widow is as well protected on one of them as she would be in a fashionable boarding house, but no newspaper would have the boldness to publish the number of the room of a feminine boarding-house guest in connection with the number of that of a gentleman friend. In time it will probably be learned that the meeting of Mrs. Tevis and Mr. McKee on the Atlantic liner was merely a coincidence, and that there is not the slightest significance in the location of the staterooms. Mrs. Tevis is a modest young woman who has always borne herself with dignity. The newspapers have probably assumed that since taking up her residence in the East she has become as spectacular as some of the rakish matrons of Newport.

"Nipping" the Receipts

A London paper has come out with the assertion that the reason why the well-patronized society charities net such small sums for the beneficiaries is that the titled dames and damsels who engineer them are in the habit of "nipping" the receipts in the interest of their milliners and dressmakers. Of course there is a chorus of indignant denial but the very vehemence of the protest is interpreted as giving additional color to the accusation. There may be the traditional grain of truth in the bushel of chaff, but any one who has ever had the questionable pleasure of auditing the accounts of benefit entertainments will not be driven to this extreme to account for the melting away of funds. It is generally accepted as only ordinary justice that those who give their time and energy to the preparation of amateur theatricals, musicales, concerts, bazaars and other schemes for luring lurking dollars from more or less unwilling pocket-books should not themselves be put to any expense in connection with the undertaking. The consequence is that no expense is spared, and women who never come any nearer to keeping accounts of the expenditure of their own allowances, rigidly set down every nickel for carfare and telephone, every envelope, sheet of paper and postage stamp, though they may have seized the opportunity of transacting their own private business at the same time. Such little odds and ends as yards of ribbon, artificial flowers, a piece of music, chiffon, lace, an extra pair of gloves or a new pair of slippers, all of which are appropriated as perquisites when the performance is over, are charged up as necessary expenditures, and such things count up in the aggregate. A handkerchief, a fan, or any other article lost or broken during the period of engagement, is compensated for as a matter of course, and when wigs, costumes, scenery, stage properties, carpenters' hire, painters' wages and decorative material are all paid for the wonder is that benefits ever net anything at all but expenses. There is a certain amount of fascination, especially for young men and women, in the excitement and publicity obtained out of these affairs, but in the course of time the fatigue and annoyances inevitable to the strain would pall. But when one sees the same people, year after year, decade after decade, still in the ring, elbowing and pushing to keep to the front, one cannot help questioning whether disinterestedness is the whole solution, or whether, as has been more than hinted, a good percentage on collections and the sale of tickets does not materially aid the charitable-minded. In one of the cities just across the bay—no matter which—it is an annual custom to solicit materials for a Thanksgiving dinner for the poor. Baskets are packed with eatables and sent by messengers to such families as have been reported deserving and destitute. On the last occasion a lad who had been pressed into service reported at home that he had taken mince pies, chickens and other delicacies to the houses of some of those devoted to the charity. The boy's mother made some inquiries in order to satisfy herself as to the truth of her son's statement, or the falsity of his inference, and was told that "Poor people do not need such things; they cannot appreciate them." If there were nothing but the amelioration of the condition of the poor and suffering to compensate, all but the very few would speedily grow weary in well doing. But the social climber, the poseur and the lovers of a whirl of gayety find the excuse of charity ready to hand, and while their gains balance their expenditures—whether they bill the treasury for outlay or whether they stand off dollars against social prominence—the benefit entertainment will flourish.

The Destructive Dredger

The October Booklovers' Magazine contains some startling information for Californians. We have seen often enough, here and there, paragraphs referring to "the new mining," in which tentative mention has been made of dredging operations, but being on the spot to investigate, we have taken it for granted that the dredging has been done in the river beds and old gravel pits and the proceeds of the enterprise have been in the nature of gold picked up—so much gain with no loss to offset it. It appears from Harold Bolce's account that this "new mining" is an altogether different and more serious business. The dredgers which are at work are powerful and gigantic machines which not only work over the abandoned claims, but are engaged in destroying the rich orchard and grain lands. These machines can be operated with profit where the yield is no more than twelve cents a cubic yard, and there are few places in the West where at least that much cannot be counted upon. The consequence is that already vast destruction has taken place — destruction beside which the "slickens" of earlier years is insignificant. The owners of these machines buy the land outright, paying many times the price it will bring even as profitable orchard and farm land, and proceed to do as they please with their own. The excavating goes to a depth of from forty to sixty feet, as low as there is any likelihood of finding gold, and when the metal has been extracted the debris is returned, practically upside down, for the loam and fertile soil drops to the bottom, while the boulders and rocks lie on the surface. Not for generations will the damage be repaired by Nature working alone, and there is imminent danger that, at the rate of procedure, the fertile valleys of California will be utterly destroyed within a comparatively few years. Already the alarm has been sounded and there is a movement on foot to have some restrictive and prohibitory legislation put in force which will bind the gold dredgers to install sandpumps in the wake of their operations, to raise and spread the soil above the rocks. Mr. Bolce does not limit himself to the production of word pictures, but fortifies his article by photographs showing the condition of a once fruitful orchard near Oroville, as well as a view of the suburbs of that city with one of the huge machines. There are pictures, too, of the trail of refuse, looking more like the moraine of a glacier than the soil of a Californian valley. If even a tithe of this is the truth, it behooves some one to be up and astir before there is nothing left to protect. While the South is intent on irrigation schemes to increase the productiveness of the State, the North appears to be governed by a short-sighted policy of getting as much as possible today and letting tomorrow take care of itself. In a brief while, instead of sending our products to feed the world, we will ourselves be importing canned goods and flour, such of us as still remain. That is a matter of vastly greater importance than reconstructing the Camino Real, preserving landmarks and scattering eschscholtzia seed. A few foreign warships bombarding our coast towns would rouse the attention of all the world, but the destruction wrought every day in the week by this new enterprise is greater than all the harm that a foreign navy could inflict in a month. We could afford to look on and smile while our agriculturists plowed up their wheat to plant vines and uprooted vines to make way for citrus fruits, and then neglected their oranges and lemons for petroleum. It was a foolish waste of time, money and energy, but the land was there, and in many cases the trees and vines themselves, ready to respond to a return to sanity. This time it is not only the surface industry that is destroyed, but the country itself. It is a matter that calls for serious consideration.

The Law-Evading Race

In commenting editorially on the lawlessness of the Italian immigrant, Leslie's Weekly remarks: "We shut out the Chinese, who are a peaceful and law-abiding race." There are none so blind as those who refuse to see; none so deaf as those who will not hear. The peaceful and law-abiding character of the Chinese is so firmly impressed upon the minds of the Easterners that they will not accept the evidences of their own senses. It is impossible to believe that the editor of Leslie's has never heard of the Tong wars that are waged openly in our streets, nor that the fame of the hatchet men and the public placards offering rewards for murders have never been called to his attention. The investigations into the traffic in women, opium smuggling, and half a dozen other crimes peculiarly and particularly Celestial have not been carried on behind closed doors. If the New York editors occasionally give a glance to their Californian exchanges, their eyes must light sometimes on accounts of murders by these peaceful and law-abiding men, as well as to the legal execution of an occasional convict. Penal statistics ought to let in a little light, too, and possibly there are other truthful tellers of tales than returned missionaries intent on larger collections. The peaceful and law-abiding character of the Chinese is one of the perpetual myths. It is sometimes taken for granted that they are total abstainers, though the deadly quality of their gin is proverbial. If Leslie's had characterized the race as law-evading, it would have come nearer the mark. We hear a good deal less nowadays about the benevolence of the Chinese missions, and we have fewer raids on the slave dens since it was discovered that the missions were used by the wily heathen for their own purposes. When a Chinese wanted to get possession of a countrywoman for a less price than her owner held her at, it was the easiest matter in the world for him to report her as held in durance. Then a raid was arranged, the beauty made her escape to the arms of the good Christian white woman who obtained guardianship, the lover went through a brief imitation of courtship, the marriage was arranged and performed under Christian auspices, and a small sum paid to the mission in lieu of board, and there you were. A girl held at a price of several hundred dollars was virtually sold under the cloak of law and religion for perhaps twenty-five, and no one but the two Chinese engaged in the transaction was any the wiser. For ways that are dark the Chinese are peculiar.

Missionaries, Consuls and Gunboats

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.—I Samuel, viii: 3.

It is one of the cynicisms of old world diplomacy that treaties are invariably dictated in the interest of those "who have the power," to be broken when that interest is no longer subserved by the clauses of the compact. All the treaties between foreign nations and China have been literally forced down the throat of that empire with the bayonet. Great Britain, France, Russia, and Germany have imposed gunboat treaties on China; and in all of these documents the missionary is regarded in diplomacy as the "pioneer of trade and avatar of international comity,"—particularly in China whose weakness compels acquiescence in anything that these diplomatic bullies may demand. The same policy was attempted by the conventions that framed treaties with Japan, but the statesmen of that warlike people plainly told Sir Harry Parkes and the other representatives of the Western nations that no special privileges would be granted to religious orders of foreign nations; that all peaceable, law-abiding foreigners would be treated fairly and with respect by the Japanese Government; but that the missionary must submit to the operations of the agreement precisely as if he were not a missionary. The result has been satisfactory to all concerned. Religious toleration in Japan is absolute. The people of Japan have never been irritated by missionary interference in domestic affairs. The missionaries must pay taxes for the privilege of living in the country, and the oath of a missionary in the Japanese courts is of no more worth or credence than the oath of any other reputable citizen. Not since the earliest period of Japanese history have Christians in Japan been persecuted on account of their religious faith.

In China persecution of Christians is perennial in spite of drastic treaty provisions explicitly demanding that such persecution shall be punished with the utmost severity by the authorities. The Japanese cannot be coerced into doing the thing that is right; the Chinese cannot be bullied into preventing the thing that is wrong. The evil of these treaties as it has fallen on China has been partially shown in the result of the Kiachow convention whereby Germany robbed China of a province as large and as opulent as the State of California. The trick and device of this treaty is only a degree more flagrant than the offense of the basic treaty with France.

In the treaty of peace, friendship, commerce and navigation, between France and China, (mark the precedence of France in the caption of the "rapprochement!"), signed in the French and Chinese languages at Tientsin on the twenty-seventh of June, 1858, and ratified at Peking October twenty-fifth, 1860, the third paragraph of Article XIII declares that "all that has previously been written, proclaimed or published in China by order of the Government against the Christian religion is completely abrogated and remains null and void in all the provinces of the empire." The Chinese insist that this paragraph was not a part of the treaty as ratified; that it was inserted afterwards, by the French ecclesiastics; that, in short, it is a forgery.

On its face, to one having no knowledge of what may have been "previously written, proclaimed or published by order of the Government," the paragraph is eminently fair and just; nay, in view of the bitter antipathy often manifested by the Chinese populace against those professing the Christian religion, this treaty provision might seem necessary as a protection for French Christians, French missionaries, and Chinese converts to the Christian religion as expounded by French teachers. The first suspicion attaching to the provision is incited by the sweeping character of the inhibition. All laws against the Christian religion previously proclaimed must be abrogated and remain null and void. This would include those laws wherein it is declared that the mere announcement by a Chinese subject accused of crime, for example, shall not exempt such subject from judgment by the law of his country or the penalty attaching upon conviction. The "persecution" of native Christians in China because of their faith is prohibited in all treaties, but only in the French treaty is it provided that the laws of China shall be inoperative against Christian subjects of China who may be accused of violating the penal or civil codes of the various provinces.

Out of this French treaty interpolation has come a vast evil. The first plea of an accused native Christian is to the effect that he is being "persecuted." The missionary of the sect to which the proselyte belongs is easily convinced of the truth of the convert's statement, and if he is doubtful the Chinese can procure evidence among his friends and neighbors to prove that he is perpetually on the verge of martyrdom because of his adherence to the religion of the foreign devil. It is then the duty of the missionary to appear before the magistrate on behalf of his parishioner, and when the missionary appears in a Chinese court he is a mandarin of the third rank entitled to wear a sapphire button on his cap and a one-eyed peacock's feather in his bonnet of ceremony. He may even be invested with the third degree of the Order of the Double Dragon—a decoration bestowed on every foreign consul in China. Behind the missionary stalks the Consul; and in the visible distance looms the truculent gunboat. To make a short story shorter the accused thief is immediately dismissed from the custody of the yamen runners, for is it not written in the treaties that no Chinese shall be persecuted because he is a Christian?

The magistrate knows that the defendant is guilty. He is aware that the accused is called "Tou-tsze-fung Chiao" by those who know him, and the missionary would translate the epithet into English signifying "Belly Christian," and, perhaps, adduce the designation as another evidence of "persecution." The missionary would also, probably, tell you that all the Chinese members of his congregation are called "Tou-tsze-fung Chiao" and that in the opinion of their heathen fellow citizens they are Christians only because profession of that faith keeps the rice bowl full at less expense than would be possible by other means, and because the missionary can always save them from the wrath of the magistrate and the agony of the torture yard. The magistrate, as I have explained in a previous article, submits to the missionary demand for the release of the prisoner because he wishes to avoid trouble. The prisons are full of Buddhists, Taoists, and Confucianists whose capacity for inciting trouble is absolutely nil; why should he risk collision with the missionary's Consul and the Consul's gunboat merely to send a Christian thief to keep company with pagan thieves?

Three-fourths of the so-called "native Christians" of China attached to the Evangelical missions are "Rice Christians." They are servants of the missionaries. Many of them are under the ban of the Chinese local governments, protected from deserved punishment by the missionaries under the provisions of the various treaties exempting native Christians from "persecution" on account of their religious faith. These "converts" are for the greater part beggars and the lowest class of coolies, too lazy to work in the manner of their heathen kind and eager for the prestige that the power of the missionary bestows. A Christian "convert" in a Chinese village is more feared by his fellow villagers than a small mandarin. His capacity for annoyance and evil of any character is almost limitless. Fear begets hatred and when the time of riot comes he is among the first who are "martyred." As the work of revenge goes on the mob ceases to discriminate and the innocent are sacrificed with the guilty. If there is any substance in logic; if there is truth in the theory of cause and effect, the missionary is certainly to blame for the uprisings in China that have so often evoked the horror of the outside world — a world as ignorant of the conditions prevailing in China as they are of the conditions prevailing in some far distant planet.

No religious faith except the Christian is prosecuted in China. There is no clash between Buddhists and the followers of Confucius; the Taoists are never disturbed; Moslem mosques may be found in the interior of China and the bulk of the population of Kansu is Mohammedan; there is a colony of primitive Chinese Jews in Northwestern Chili. None of these has ever been subjected to the slightest annoyance on account of their religious faith or in any way disturbed in the free exercise of their rites or ceremonial. Only Christians are persecuted in China, and any foreigner traveling through a disturbed or anti-Christian district may escape insult and outrage by simply denying (1) that he is a missionary; (2) that he is a Christian; and (3) that he approves of foreign interference in the domestic affairs of China.

The Professional Reformer

BY THEODORE BONNET.

It is in such piping times as these that the hypocritical reformer comes to the front with a rush. It is well to anticipate him. Joyously does he ride the wave of popular protest against official corruption. He is an opportunist quick to advantage himself in the reaction of sentiment that follows a season of demoralization in municipal government. Cities are ruled alternately by reformers and grafters; the grafter is now enjoying his inning, the reformer is rubbing his hands in gleeful expectation, attitudinizing the while with cathedral-window effects symbolic of his angelic rectitude.

The people of this city are very much disgusted with the manner in which their trust has been violated. They have been shamed and humiliated by official hoodlums and grafters, and they have been shocked to learn that the credit of the city has been impaired as a consequence of the degeneracy of the government. Hence the times are propitious for a reform movement, and the indications are that the people will soon revolt against the rule of vicious bosses. Thoughtful men are devoting a deal of attention to civic reform, there is much attitudinizing on the part of Pharisaical patriots, and not a little anserine speculation anent the purification of politics. The pursuit of the ideal has begun. The fountains of ethics are now gushing. Above the tumult may be heard the voice of the professional reformer, the self-admitted incarnation of political purity. He is busy suggesting ways and means for the circumvention of the professional politician, and he is appealing to the effervescent credulity of the dear people in the hope of being chosen to lead them into the land of righteousness. Civic bodies, composed principally of idealists in trade, or rather of business men who have ideals in politics, are in eruption. They are impressed with the importance of taking an interest for the time being in affairs of state. The sincerity of many of the business men who have been aroused by the maladministration of the municipal government is not to be questioned, but these men have yet to learn that politics is a profession to be learned by practical experience and the study of measures and men. They may resolute in solemn conclave until the cows come home but they will never succeed in running the every-day politics of an every-day world. In trade they are wonderfully cunning, and are skilled in driving hard bargains and flim-flamming country customers, but in politics they are "easy." It is to them and the mob that the wily reformer appeals, and invariably with great success.

Despite their familiarity with the past history of the city, they never reflect that the star-eyed goddess of reform runs amuck as often as the professional politician. They hearken to the driving cant of the reformers, who brand every professional politician as a blackleg and knave. They have lost sight of the fact that Schmitz was elected as a reformer and not as a professional politician; that he had no experience in politics until he became a public official. They are unmindful of the fact that some of the most faithful officials in the history of this city were professional politicians, and that some of the worst were so-called reformers. Phelan was a reformer who hypnotized the mob that does not look deeply into the consequences of performances that tickle its fancy. Careful study of the shift methods of Phelan will disclose the fact that he prepared the way for Schmitz and made the latter's election possible; also, that in foisting upon the city an organic law designed to strengthen his political ambition he opened the door for the grafters.

After some years of experience as a spectator I am constrained to confess a well-nourished prejudice against certain brands of reformers. It would not be hard for me to express a preference as between a rampant, blatant reformer, one who is always calling the world to witness that some one else is neglectful or unfaithful, and a machine politician who takes program straight. The morals of the former are usually of the banal variety, and he has scruples only in matters that affect his pose. He merely pretends to be true to the people, whereas the machine politician is true to the men to whom he owes allegiance.

San Francisco has had reformers who demonstrated that good deeds are often the product of an evil ambition. To win applause they would not hesitate to commit great wrongs. He is a dangerous man who covets the admiration of the multitude, who prefers to purchase reputation than to be sincere. The reformer is too often a seeker of promiscuous approbation. He does not condemn the praise even of the ignorant, and in appealing for popular acclaim he will not hesitate to visit humiliation and discredit on upright men. An illustration comes to my mind. Not many years ago a reformer was elected Mayor of this city, a man of great wealth and stupendous political ambition. He could afford to be honest, being rich, but to no greater extent did his morals go. Yet he had great contempt for grafters, even for those grafters who had fewer defects of character than he. His associates on the City Hall Commission were upright men who had higher claims to public respect than the reform Mayor, for they were both poor and honest, without making any noise over the coincidence. One day the Mayor was visited in his office by a disgruntled contractor who informed him that prior to his elevation to office there had been suspicious irregularity in the award of a contract. The story was without foundation, inspired by malice, and could have been disproved on investigation. But the Mayor had no desire to investigate. He preferred to create a public sensation and win a little cheap glory at the expense of his associates. So the sensation was sprung at the next meeting of the commission in the presence of press representatives. The indignant commissioners whose conduct had been impugned lost no time in demonstrating the absurdity of the accusation, and thereafter their contempt for the blatant reformer was beyond their power of expression.

It is pretty generally conceded that there is no such thing as a person entirely good or bad; that virtue and vice are blended in everybody. But the aggressively virtuous are not necessarily men in whom good qualities predominate. Virtues are sometimes assumed for the promotion of self-interest. They are virtues of the mind and not of the heart, and the most common of them is civic virtue. I knew an "honest" Supervisor once, a rich old gentleman (honest Supervisors are generally rich), who was known to be incorruptible; that is, he wouldn't take a bribe. He scorned those of his associates who were known to be grafters. Yet he fathered a scheme to assess a whole district for the cost of lowering the grade of a single block, nearly all of which was his private property. There have been reformers in the Board of Education who paraded their incorruptibility but who did worse than vote for a dishonest contract. One of the most stentorian reformers that ever courted the acclaim of the people of this city, an official who is now regarded as available mayoralty timber, negotiated for free theatre tickets preliminary to casting his vote on a proposition, as a member of the Board of Supervisors.

It is from personal experience with reformers of the type of the men herein discussed that I have grown pessimistic in my views on the subject of civic reform. It is difficult to find a professional reformer who is not a self-centred individual, insincere, spectacular and ruthlessly indifferent to the rights of others. He may not be a grafter for money, but he is a grafter for gain of some sort, and in the final analysis the result is the same. The ideal man for Mayor of this city would be a reformer, but not one of the rampant, holier-than-thou variety. We have had bitter experience with poseurs. The Mayor of this city should be a man of judicial temperament, animated by civic pride rather than political ambition, and respected for traits of character that proclaim his moral worth. Of such there are surely several available in the populous city of San Francisco.

On Playing the Fool

BY HARRY COWELL.

On this imperfect sphere, perfection is, or rather, would be, a little out of place. In its secret heart humanity finds so-called "paragons of virtue," whom it always suspects of being pretenders, altogether odious. Goodness in the abstract is worshipful, adorable, but the good we love, not so much for their goodness as for the failings whereby we know them for our fellows. It is hard to forgive a human being for having no faults; that is, for seeming to have none. Looked at even from the mere point of view of manners, for a man never to sin would, as it seems to me, be rather bad form—not to do, in Rome, the one thing all Rome does. Moral perfection is, no doubt, a divine thing, a dish for the gods, but, frankly, for man unpalatable, needing, to make it delectable to our mouths, a flavor of faultiness.

So, wisdom is for Sundays only, folly for every day of the week; at least, for six days out of seven. The philosopher who never flirts with foolishness loves wisdom not wisely but too well. Nothing is more irrational than to be always reasonable. The man suspected of being incapable of folly hasn't a friend in the world to bless himself withal.

At Arlington House, by the river Barrow, where, on the topmost chimney-pot is a name penknife-carved, past which the sparks fly ever upward, there lived and taught many years ago a certain professor of mathematics with a reputation for infallibility in the most exact of the sciences. Him no one liked, no one knew why; for he was as worthy a fellow as ever entered that vast army of prigs on whose account the immemorial lie, "I love my teacher," is told in all times and tongues; that is to say, no one knew why until one day a bright and daring scholar, born to trouble, who in secret, without himself suspecting it, had for "Old Infallibility" what schoolboys call a "sneaking regard," discovered him to the whole class in the very act of "egregious error," as the young rascal pedantically styled his master's mistake. There it was in black and white, not to be denied. The class cheered, in the heart of every boy a mysterious premonitory beating, presaging he knew not what. The mathematician smiled and "owned up" with the utmost unconcern; and thenceforward "Old Infallibility," as he was re-nicknamed on the spot, was the most popular professor ever known at Arlington House, by the river Barrow, or elsewhere, for that matter, so far as my knowledge extends.

The moral of the tale is not far to seek. To nail it home, however, here is another "so-story" much to the same effect, a story which I had almost forgotten: A friend of mine who is somewhat of a philosopher once made himself very miserable over the fact that, after making every allowance for the love-bias, he for a long time was unable to discover the least fault in the lady of his desire. (Thereon a fool had felicitated himself; but, as my friend was wont to say, a philosopher in adversity is more to be envied than a fool in prosperity.) To have detected her in ever so white a feminine lie would have been rapture ineffable; for this adverse circumstance—her faultlessness—constrained him, nilly enough I can assure you, to worship her from a greater distance than was the adoring Dante from the divine Beatrice. One auspicious day, however, there came to him, as an inspiration from Venus herself, the thought that for her to consent to marry him would be proof of human frailty sufficient to convince the most skeptical, to satisfy the most exacting. Accordingly, he wooed and won her, and found her sweetly mortal; and in course of time the near woman came to be more to him than ever had been the distant angel. Indeed, he has since doubted ever having loved the angel at all. He declares that, looking upon the winged thing from afar below, he ardently wished her a woman in order that he might love her. But these fine distinctions of philosophers are utterly beyond me.

Like persons who are eternally on their best behavior—their unbending best—the incessant philosopher is but poor company for my Folly-loving self. Every now and then, to tell the truth, I like to "let down a little." To play the fool on occasion is, I take it, a proper pastime for the wise; and—call me inconsistent if you will—one of the chief delights of playing the fool is the right pleasant sense of superiority it gives one; for, obviously, were a man dead in earnest, he could in no wise play at it. Who fears to play the fool, his wisdom is hardly beyond question.

I make it a rule never to open my door to who answers "It is I." Once, in the days before my sophistication, I had what I then believed to be a deathless passion for a schoolma'am of beauty unspeakable, or it might be more correct to say a school miss, for she was "sweet and twenty," and unmarried. To my unbounded delight and astonishment, she returned my affection, and every day for a whole month she made love to me without so much as once making a single mistake in grammar—made love to me in perfect sentences, using only the most approved terms, faultlessly enunciated, etc., etc. That, well as I loved her and literature, was too much for me; my "deathless" passion was only mortal, after all. For a week or two she thought men faithless, and then, before a flower had time to blossom above the grave of the baby god, she consoled herself with a rubicund retired butcher, and within a year was a rich widow and patroness of learning. And now, my month-long love, should you chance upon this confession, you may at last know the cause of my unfaithfulness—a sin for which, when I appear before Him who alters not, I hope to find ready forgiveness.

By consciously playing the fool, we may, as it were, bribe the Fates to let us off that unconscious wearing of the cap and bells that makes the prig and the pedant the laughing-stock of all good fellows the wide world over. The sisters three have, as everybody knows, a fine sense of humor, but they have also a sense of humor as coarse as that of a street gamin. Let the too-stiff spine beware of becoming the butt of their practical jokes. If you desire the world to grin at your expense, think over much of your dignity and the preservation thereof. On rainy days, when I was a boy, for my own amusement and that of younger members of my father's family, who enjoyed it hugely, I used to gallop on all fours round and round a big nursery, taking chairs placed seat to seat as a horse takes hurdles—I called it making an ass of myself. Well, once in a while I do it still, to the great delight of onlooking children and the great astounding of their formal elders. Thereupon the elders lose all respect for me, which had been considerable, but thereafter the youngsters and I get on famously together, which, to be candid, more than compensates for the loss aforesaid. And thereafter, for a season, laughter-loving Destiny passes me by to chalk-mark, for her own fun and that of bystanding mortals, some provokingly-unbending back. It is written in the book that we each of us be the occasion of so many smiles furnish so much divertisement for our fellows. Let us do or suffer the thing decreed with a good grace, making, if it may be, new virtues out of old necessities.

The Scoffers of Oakland

BY ONE OF THEM.

The question of a bond issue for the improvement of Oakland is still a subject of argument and disputation among the citizens of that municipality. It is generally admitted, even by those who opposed the proposition as it was presented for the suffrages of the voters at the recent election, that public improvements of the character proposed are necessary to the progress of the community. The only difference of opinion between these factions lies in the method. If the people had been satisfied with the honesty of the intention there would have been scarcely a dissenting vote in the final expression of popular sentiment. It now develops that the majority of those who voted against the bonds suspected ulterior motives on the part of all the principals concerned. The councilmen who advocated the issuance of the bonds in the shape that they came before the people are suspected of knowing that the bulk of the profit would accrue to a great corporation; while, on the other hand, the councilmen who opposed the issue are suspected of selfish motives incited by the circumstance that they were not taken into the confidence of those who were engineering the scheme. Chief among those under fire at the present time accused of responsibility for retarding the material growth and future prosperity of Oakland, are Councilmen John L. Howard and Councilman Aitken. These men are the leaders of the municipal legislative body, and each seeks to control the action of the City Council. Both are now charged with the evil of the result—Howard is blamed for his advocacy of a proposition that seemed primarily in the direct interest of the Realty Syndicate, from whom it was proposed to purchase a large tract of land at an exorbitant figure, to be used incidentally as a park for the city but in reality with the purpose of enhancing the value of building sites reserved by the Syndicate. Aitken was criticised because he did not expose the intention of his colleague while it was incubating in the committees of the City Council. Howard was reticent. He took nobody into his confidence—not even his colleague Councilman Aitken. He only went so far as to tell the Council that "it was all right," vouchsafing nothing further in substantiation or explanation. Evidently he did not consider it necessary to enlighten the Council with his knowledge. Perhaps he had a certain contempt for the intelligence of his colleagues. Naturally

Councilman Aitken resented this cavalier attitude of Howard and he consistently opposed the bond proposition throughout, and especially when it was discovered that the chief beneficiaries of the bond issue would be the promoters of the Realty Syndicate. Howard was, apparently, so confident that the bonds would meet with the approval of the people that he absented himself from the city during the campaign. He did not even come home to vote for them. Aitken stayed in Oakland and exerted himself to defeat the bonds. During his absence in British Columbia Howard was in telegraphic communication with Mayor Olney concerning the bond election. Two days before Howard started on his homeward journey he received a telegram from Mayor Olney informing him that the bonds would be approved by the people. Two days before election Mayor Olney sent another telegram to the effect that matters were somewhat mixed, but that he was confident of success. When Howard reached Portland he received a startling message from the Mayor telling him that the bonds had been defeated. Then Howard came back to Oakland.

This is not the first time that Mr. Howard has been absent from his post at a critical juncture. He was similarly unfortunate at a time when water-rates were being fixed, his private interests demanding his presence elsewhere. He was then posing as the friend of the people, but the people of Oakland are skeptics. They are suspicious of their most public spirited citizens. Some of them thought it strange that Mr. Howard should not assist in fixing the water rates of Oakland, especially as the Contra Costa Water Company is regarded with much aversion. It is thought probable that if he had been present at the fixing of the rates he would not have shown any unfriendliness toward the water monopoly, and therefore it has been suggested that he dodged his vote. However Mr. Howard has never condescended to discuss the matter. He pursues the even tenor of his way regardless of the views of his enemies, feeling no doubt that they are among the evils no public-spirited citizen should hope to escape. There is an inscrutable mystery surrounding the intention of Councilman Howard, and he makes no endeavor to explain his attitude though he is constantly before the public, expounding his views on all manner of subjects, including finance, with which he claims to have more than a smattering knowledge, and the best way to govern a city, a subject on which he dwells whenever opportunity offers.

This persistence on the part of Councilman Howard, this constant seeking the limelight, is charitably ascribed to an inordinate vanity. He has been likened to Tom Johnson of Ohio in this regard; and there are some rudely censorious critics of Mr. Howard who even go so far as to compare him in many of his artifices and mannerisms to Denis Kearney and Dr. O'Donnell. Oakland critics are sometimes extremely harsh, and when at their favorite occupation of picking flaws nothing escapes them. They are even uncomplimentary in their appraisal of Mr. Howard's rhetoric, his diction and his grammar, and it has been suggested that he submit his orations to experts before delivering them. By way of illustration of his vanity they relate that he was once approached by a newspaper reporter for an interview at the conclusion of which he was asked for his photograph for publication. At first he seemed unwilling to add this picturesque notoriety to his swelling record of fame; but finally he compromised by presenting the reporter with his best photograph, not necessarily for publication, he said, but as an evidence of his personal regard and esteem for the reporter, who, by the way, he had never met before.

Mr. Howard is a gentleman deserving a great deal of credit for the success which he has attained in the commercial world. He began life humbly. In Santa Rosa, many years ago, he was engaged in a business that earned for him the sobriquet of "Saleratus Jack," a circumstance indicating that then as now he was "a friend of the people." A man is not familiarly called "Saleratus Jack" by a community whose disfavor he has earned. Mr. Howard was not content to waste his ability in the bucolic atmosphere of Sonoma county. He moved to a metropolitan environment where his talents as a financier soon lifted him into prominence. He is now a director in the Central Bank of Oakland and one of the managers of the London & San Francisco Bank in San Francisco. Under his direction the Central Bank has retrenched somewhat in its surplus account, but this outward manifestation of economy is not necessarily derogatory to Mr. Howard or indicative of lack of ability as a financier. The fact that since Mr. Howard became a manager of the London & San Francisco Bank the dividends of that institution have been cut down and that the value of the stock has depreciated twenty per cent is, perhaps, a more serious commentary on his financial methods. He is also a representative of Balfour, Guthrie & Company of the "Big Four" combine that included Eppinger & Company as one of its leading manipulators. It was an unfortunate circumstance that the London & San Francisco Bank made loans to Eppinger & Company, and that subsequently that firm went to the wall with a resounding crash. It is possible that manager Howard protested against the Eppinger loans because he was probably familiar with the transactions of the "Big Four." His objections may have been overruled by the other managers.

Perhaps all the blame for the bank's losses and consequent crippling is wholly upon his obstinate colleagues in the board of managers. The truth will probably develop in the trial of Eppinger. Mr. Howard's political enemies in Oakland will no doubt keep a close watch on the trial, as they do on everything else pertaining to his affairs. They recently noted that he had been sued by a man who claimed that his wheat in one of the warehouses controlled by the defendant had been unlawfully "sweated." As every wheat manipulator in California knows, wheat "sweating" is one of the legitimate processes by which the wheat ring profits at the expense of the wheat producer. It is nothing more than "sampling" each sack of wheat in a warehouse and retaining the samples for the owners of the warehouse. The wheat must be sampled and the size of each sample is a matter of no consequence. Among his other activities Mr. Howard is largely interested in the Western Fuel Company which, in turn, is the selling agent of the Portland Cement Company. It was due to the business ability of Mr. Howard that the Fuel Company was enabled recently to secure a contract from the Cement Company which will transfer fifty thousand dollars annually to the bank account of the company represented by Mr. Howard. It is not every financier who could achieve a coup of this sort. Another little transaction in which Mr. Howard displayed eminent ability as a business diplomat involved the displacement of James P. Taylor as the selling agent for Wellington coal in Oakland. It was a business directly in line with the enterprises operated by the Western Fuel Company, but since the bond election in Oakland everybody who is sore has been commenting on the fact that Mr. Howard and Mr. Taylor had long been friends.

In all matters of local improvement Mr. Howard is foremost. He was a member of the Committee of Seven of the City Council two years ago to whom was delegated the task of formulating plans for the improvement of the city of Oakland, and he was particularly interested in two projects—the building of a new City Hall and the dredging of Oakland harbor. It was mainly by the efforts of Mr. Howard that the clause providing for the purchase of a site for the new City Hall was included in the ordinance calling for a vote on the bonds, but the skeptics of Oakland thought they discerned personal motives in the background, and on the strength of their suspicions argued against the bond proposition. Somebody reported that Mr. Howard owned property near the proposed site. In the matter of dredging the harbor Mr. Howard was said to have been very active until it was decided that the first money to be expended would not be used to dredge in front of his coal bunkers. He no doubt had other objections of vital importance, but the scoffers did not care to inquire. The people are proverbially ungrateful and the people of Oakland are no exception to the established rule. Mr. Howard's standing in the business community should entitle him to the confidence of the people of Oakland. And he would probably enjoy that confidence were it not for the activity of those whose disfavor he has earned. A man in public life cannot please everybody. Not only are his motives impugned but he is adversely criticised for fidelity to principles that may be well founded. As, for instance, Mr. Howard has been considered parsimonious because of his steadfast refusal to be sandbagged for public celebrations—Fourth of July and Native Son parades. Mr. Howard's advice is worth more to the people than his money. His critics do not take into consideration the possibility that he may be doing a vast amount of good by stealth—that he is sedulously concealing from his left hand what his right is doing. Moreover they stamp themselves as consummate ingrates when they refuse to recognize the wealth of charity Mr. Howard is constantly bestowing through his lips—the priceless advice he is always willing to utter on the merest provocation, the able discourse he is ever ready to pour out in eloquent flood, and the inestimable benefaction of his mere presence among the people for whom he has always professed such high esteem and unwavering regard. Is it any wonder, in view of the unkindly attitude of the people towards their best friend, that he should threaten to resign as their representative in the City Council? Is it not more wonderful that he has so long endured this ungrateful return for all his kindness? It is certainly not the wages he receives for his hard work as a city councilman that keeps him in that thankless office. John L. Howard is financially above the pecuniary influence that can be exerted by a paltry forty dollars a month. Yet the scoffers pretend to think that he covets the salary. It would serve these people right if Mr. Howard would resign at the next meeting of the Council. They may be assured, however, that when Mr. Howard does resign there will be a vacancy in the Council which can never be filled in precisely the same manner that it is now filled by Mr. Howard. It would serve them right if Mr. Howard should emulate the example of his friend Mr. Dingee of the water monopoly, and apply the fruits of his valuable civic activity to the development of San Francisco.

That Salacious Wood Case

Notwithstanding the scandalous aspect of the Wood divorce case, and its potent appeal to the vulgar mind that revels in defamatory reports, there are phases of it of compelling interest to those who, like Socrates, make human nature the object of their thoughts. It presents some rather unusual features. Most striking of them was the attitude of Mr. W. W. Davis, who sings in a church choir in Mill Valley, and of Mr. F. J. Bostwick, who plays the organ in the same pious institution. Both gentlemen were once upon a time friends of Mr. John Wood, the bank teller, who was accused by his wife of having permitted a pretty postmistress to alienate his affections. It appears that Mr. Davis and Mr. Bostwick were so shocked at the indiscretion of their friend, and so sympathetic toward his wife in the hour of her distress, that they butted chivalrously into the case, and undertook to visit humiliation on the erring husband and shame on the postmistress of his illicit passion. It is a delicate question of ethics for a man to decide, that of the propriety of espousing aggressively and actively the cause of a wife against her husband involving the reputation of another party, a woman at that. But Christian gentlemen, functionaries of a church, are not easily stumped by intricate questions of ethics. They have been trained in a way that makes the solution of such problems easy.

An African In The Background

Of course all phases of the case were not submitted for inspection in court. From the testimony the fact was not developed that Mill Valley's interest in the case that had set the villagers by the ears was partly political. There is factional strife in Mill Valley. Mrs. Tyler, the postmistress, has the backing of one faction, and a Mrs. Reynolds, a widow who hopes to succeed Mrs. Tyler, has the support of the other. A great pull was brought to bear in behalf of Mrs. Reynolds, and her strongest supporters were identified with the plaintiff's side of the Wood divorce suit. The impression seemed to prevail that if Mrs. Wood won her suit Mrs. Tyler would lose her job, and Mrs. Reynolds would be put upon Uncle Sam's payroll. Now the friends of John Wood do not hesitate to attribute the activity of Mrs. Wood's friends to their political interest in Mrs. Reynolds and consequent prejudice toward Mrs. Tyler. But of course Mr. Wood's friends are not altogether impartial in their views. Their convictions are the result of inference. However, the conflicting interests present an interesting study of human nature.

Sympathy For Mrs. Tyler

It remains to be seen what Uncle Sam will do about it. It is known that he does not usually take cognizance of such matters when they are confined to the Postal Department. He is very strict in matters affecting the character of men in the army and navy, but he vouchsafes great freedom to employes of the Post Office. Not long ago he was asked to dismiss the postmaster of St. Louis for his passionate indiscretions, but he declined to do so, it appearing that the man was conscientious in the performance of his official duties. So, it is thought, that while Mrs. Tyler sees that the mail of Mill Valley is properly handled, she will continue to draw her salary. She has sympathizers in Mill Valley who do not hesitate to pronounce her a first-class postmistress, or to express their opinion about her enemies.

Why Wood Was Reinstated

One of the great surprises growing out of the case was the reinstatement of Mr. John Wood in his position as paying-teller of the Crocker-Woolworth Bank. As soon as Mrs. Wood gave publicity to the scandal by filing her divorce suit and charging her husband with immoral conduct, the virtuous directors of the bank, conspicuous among whom is that paragon of all the virtues and most loyal of husbands, Mr. Will Crocker, dismissed the paying-teller from his position. This action was in consonance with the time-honored policy of banking houses. When a man becomes of sufficient importance in the financial world to enter the directorate of a bank, his position cannot be affected by any revelations concerning his private morals. There are some pretty tough characters among the bankers of San Francisco; but they insist that their employees shall be of good character. At least they demand that they shall not be found out, not because they have any prejudice against minor transgressions but by reason of the importance of retaining the confidence of depositors. It is believed that a bank would suffer serious loss were it to employ in a clerical capacity a man who had been proved guilty of a violation of the most sacred of his marriage vows. But the Wood case seems to have demonstrated that the bankers gauged the temper of the community inaccurately. As soon as Wood was dismissed the officers of the bank began to be pestered by demands from depositors for his reinstatement. And the demands grew so insistent that Wood was restored to his position.

We have biblical authority for the fact that when the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the pit, and yet lovers take chances on matrimony.

A Stuffed Register

The register of voters for the coming election is undoubtedly as full of stuffing as a November turkey, but so busy with the primary election frauds have the militant critics of the present municipal government been that they have devoted no attention to the probable registration frauds. No suspicion that the register is not what it should be has entered their minds up to date—Wednesday. That a great many names have been put on the register which should not be there no experienced observer of political methods can doubt. That there will be some disclosure of a part of the frauds before election day is likely, but it is not to be expected that the full extent of them will be revealed, for the peculiar conditions existing in this city not only make it possible for a political boss to do as he wishes with the register but put it in his power to prevent any deep probing into whatever rascality may be practiced. It would be well for the community if some organization which is able to bear the expense of a systematic scrutiny of the register—the Merchants' Association, for example—should begin this labor without delay. It will require time to secure the details of the registration frauds, and the first Tuesday in November is not far off.

Stuffed Manipulation

The total registration in 1900 was a little less than seventy-four thousand, and this year it is considerably over eighty-two thousand, but the magnitude of difference between these totals does not convey a proper conception of the phenomenal character of the registration which has just been concluded. The increase is massed in certain districts, while in the Assembly districts there has been a noticeable falling off. In the Ruef districts the swelling of the roll is particularly marked. In the Forty-fourth the registration in 1900 was three thousand one hundred and seventy-six, and now it is five thousand two hundred and thirty-two. In the Forty-second the increase is one thousand seven hundred and forty-five, in the Forty-third one thousand five hundred and ninety, in the Forty-fifth one thousand one hundred and seventy, and in other districts where stuffing is easy and where it has often been practiced before the gain is also noticeable. The six districts in which there has been a decrease are districts in which "the Administration" forces either have met with strong opposition or have no particular interest at this time. The registration has a bearing on the election of legislative nominees and Superior Judges, and of the legislative nominees those whom Ruef chiefly wishes to have elected are the men whom he has named for the State Senate. Of the six Assembly districts in which there has been a decrease, the first five as given are not in the Senatorial districts in which Senators are to be chosen next month. So cleverly has the registration been manipulated that Ruef's friend Nelson, who is a candidate for re-election in the Twenty-fifth Senatorial district, has a cinch on the job, unless the stuffers are stricken off or frightened off, as they were some years ago when Andy Clunie stood ready to prosecute.

A City's Pitiabie Plight

The political situation in which the city now finds itself is novel. Formerly when fraudulent registration was practiced there was a sufficient division of political power to insure some investigation. The Election Commission was made up of city officials, belonging to different parties. The Registrar, who was appointed by the Governor, might not have belonged to the same party as the majority of the Election Commission, or, if he did, might have been allied with a faction opposed to the Commissioners. The different political organizations were anxious to see that their antagonists did not go to the polls with an unfair advantage. The change which has been effected now puts this city in a ridiculous position. The whole election machinery is at present under the control of one boss. The civic bodies and the well-meaning citizens who promoted the adoption of the new charter may now reflect on the chief objection which was raised to that instrument—that it would make one man the autocrat of the municipality.

Staggered the Politicians

The politicians of the State are aghast over the appointment of Clyde Seavey to the position of Secretary of the Board of Examiners. That was one of the juiciest plums in the gift of the Executive, and yet Governor Pardee presented it to a young clerk who is not acquainted with more than half a dozen politicians in the State. He is no doubt a competent young man, equipped by experience for the duties, but big political jobs are not distributed to obscure clerks, no matter what their qualifications. And yet Pardee is said to be building up a political machine.

In the Green Room of the St. Francis next Tuesday will be held the first of a series of "evenings at home" outlined by the Sequoia Club for this winter. A limited number of guest cards are issued to members for these receptions. An exhibition of L. Maynard Dixon's recent paintings will be the motif of the first "at home" of the club. On the committee to receive the guests are Mrs. Norris, Mrs. Gerberding, Mrs. Boardman, Miss Robinson, Miss Peixotto, Miss Bell and Mrs. Gerstle.

"Jones lives a hand-to-mouth existence."
"Why do you think so?"
"Because he's a dentist."

The Draper Ball

One of the first big events of the winter season—if not the first—is the ball in honor of Miss Elsie Draper, to be given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. N. Draper, at the Bohemian Club. It will take place November first and will be preceded by a dinner. It will probably take rank as one of the swellest affairs of the season. Colonel Draper is a prominent club man and knows the creme de la creme of the eligible men in town, so his daughter would be assured of an interesting season even if she were not a most attractive young woman. She is a tall, willowy blonde and has been educated at fashionable schools in the East.

"I hear that the Snobbes and the Newriches boast of a common ancestor."

"With the accent on the first word, I presume."

A Great American Dignitary

Mr. Alonzo Stewart is in town again, having returned from the Orient. Mr. Stewart is a man of magnetic, almost hypnotic personality. His physique betrays not the slightest hint of his wonderful powers of persuasion. Mr. Stewart is connected with the Administration at Washington, but in a capacity far from commensurate with his achievements when off duty. He is only a door-keeper in the Senate, but if he were the Senate itself he could scarcely be shown greater deference than has been exhibited toward him on the coast. Steamship and railroad officials salaam before Mr. Stewart, and beg him to accept courtesies. I believe he went to the Orient as the guest of Mr. Schwerin, and since his return he has enjoyed the privileges of our affluent Pacific-Union Club. He spends nearly all his time at the Palace, and it is predicted that he will return to Washington in a special train or something befitting his personality. I do not know whether Mr. Stewart is on a special and secret mission for the Government, but now that I have learned something of his stately progress I have resolved never to crave the toga. The door-keeper's job is preferable.

The stork paid its second visit to the home of the Joseph Belleau Coryells in Menlo Park last week, and received a warm welcome. Mrs. Coryell was Mabel Lloyd Jessup, daughter of the late Dr. Isaac Jessup, and is a cousin of Mrs. "Clemmie" Horst, sister-in-law of the Baron von Horst.

To Be More Exclusive

The invitations for the Assembly dances have made their appearance, and it has been remarked that the list of last year has been pretty strictly adhered to. As it is yet doubtful whether there are to be any Fortnightlies nearly every one is accepting the invitations. Mrs. Malcolm Henry has charge of the affairs of the club this year, Mrs. Voorhies having given her full swing, so Mrs. Henry is to become a woman of great importance socially. Mrs. Voorhies will return in time to receive at the Daughters of the Confederacy ball, which is to be a star event this year, it having been decided to elevate its tone. To that end there will be an effort at exclusiveness, for some of the leading spirits have come to the conclusion that a wide-open function is not worth while. The Southern clique has decided to regain the prestige that it had in the days before the ascendancy of the nouveau riche.

The Stately Miss Wilson

I have heard it predicted that Miss Charlotte Wilson will prove one of the most attractive buds of the winter. But there are some people of the opinion that honors will be divided between Miss Wilson and Miss Margaret Hyde-Smith, who is described as one of the most magnetic of girls. Charlotte Wilson is a stately bud, and towers over her sister, the petite Emily, carrying herself with the hauteur of a Vere de Vere. She is a sober-minded girl, and takes very little interest in the frivolous chit-chat of callow youths.

An Engagement Rumor

Azalea Keyes is expected to return from Europe before the end of the year, and her friends are on the tip-toe of expectancy, for they have been reading between the lines of her letters, and they are quite sure that she is no longer heart whole and fancy free. Indeed they are looking forward to the announcement of her engagement. The man in the case is vaguely described as an Englishman, a younger son in an old English family. If conjecture be near the mark, some of the beaux of the local smart set will have cause to regret that they were so slow.

Sympathy for Oelrichs

Herman Oelrichs' friends are becoming alarmed over his frequently recurring manifestations of rhymania. His lucid intervals are exceedingly brief. They think that it is due to the sedentary habits that he has cultivated ever since he took up his residence in Marin county. His most intimate friends say that he never had any delusions about odesmithing until after he quit his old haunts in this city. Now he appears to be wedded to his typewriter, and his friends unhesitatingly pronounce it a mesalliance. Herman is a versatile chap, and does many things well, but jingle-writing is not one of them. Since becoming addicted to it he seems to have lost his sense of humor, which was once very keen. He was a fellow of infinite jest, and hence the alarm of his friends over his latter-day lugubrious lucubrations. They are indignant that the newspapers should give publicity to his indiscretions.

Hamlet for Schoolboys

There have been but three Hamlets—living, breathing entities. The first of these was in the vast creative mind of the Master; the second was the Hamlet of Garrick; and the third was the soul of Hamlet embodied in the greater Booth. There have been "interpreters" of Hamlet a score—Betterton, whose ordinarily ruddy countenance always visibly paled at the entrance of the Ghost; Kemble, whose tears in the apostrophe, "My father,—methinks I see my father," never failed to compel moist response in the eyes of the groundlings; Henderson, whose rendition of the line, "What! the fair Ophelia!" in the graveyard scene, was the very climax of pathos; Edmund Kean, who always came back after telling Ophelia to go to a nunnery, and with significant dumb show kissed her hand fervently; Macready, who emphasized the words "tongue" and "sing" in the line "That skull had a tongue in it and could sing once," instead of following the Master's plain intent by laying the accent on "skull" and "once" in rebuke and warning to the gravedigger who sings at his grewsome task; Fechter, grand, gloomy and peculiar, who wisely omitted the wrestling bout with Laertes in the grave of Ophelia; Forrest, who "took arms against a 'siege' of troubles," and talked to the players in the tone of an up-to-date stage manager; Irving, who invented the throne usurping action and interpolated the sneer by inference as he flings away Ophelia's fan of peacock's feathers, amid the panic terror of the spectators at the end of the court-play.

The Elizabethan Hamlet

Against this array of Hamlets comes Ben Greet—a histrionic schoolmaster abroad. With a modesty befitting the impertinence he announces that he will attempt no new readings of the play but will endeavor merely to present it in the simplicity and verisimilitude of the Elizabethan production. Whereupon four thousand of the best culture and intellect of San Francisco and Alameda counties assemble in the Greek theatre at Berkeley to sit for four hours in the broiling sun, book in hand, following the halting recitation of the schoolmaster and his "players," grinding their teeth at every repetition of temporarily forgotten lines, and staring wonderstruck at the variety of imitative interpretations, ranging from Taylor to Irving—mostly Irving. In the sense that this Ben Greet olla podrida of Hamlet was a school exercise given for the enlightenment of the Berkeley undergraduates the production at the State University was, probably, a commendable and edifying lesson in Shakespeare; but when we recall that the spectators were assessed for witnessing the performance—paying seventy-five cents and one dollar and a quarter for seats—our gorge rises and we ask ourselves (as a majority of the best intellect), what more we have learned from Ben Greet and his players than we could have learned from our own Hamlet, cold-printed for self-consumption in our closets.

Some men keep reflectors behind their scanty virtues to keep their predominant vices from o'ershadowing them.

Guests at Bard's Dinner

Senator Bard came to town last week in time to receive an invitation to the launching of the Intrepid. That was strictly a De Young function, and a wise candidate for United States Senator would have been Johnny-on-the-spot. But Bard, I am told, ignored the invitation. Of course his failure to lend grace and dignity to the occasion was not a premeditated discourtesy. He simply failed to appreciate the importance of cultivating the friendship of the Chronicle's proprietor and made no effort to attend. He was on hand, however, at a dinner given in his honor at the Pacific-Union Club. There were present on that occasion Justice McFarland of the Supreme Court, Tom Bishop, the friend of the judiciary, and Collector Stratton. The presence of Mr. Stratton was significant. Senator Bard has broken into Contra Costa county, having received assurance of Senator Belshaw's support, and now he is trying to break into Alameda county. Mr. Stratton is very friendly with Senator Perkins, but the latter has agreed to keep "hands off."

Who Was to Blame?

That was an unfortunate contretemps at the Phelan dinner in the Bohemian club. The members are now trying to fix the responsibility, and are inclined to blame Tom Barbour. He had full charge of the affair and the supposition is that he selected William Greer Harrison to act as toast-master, whereas the honor should have gone to the vice-president of the club. Whoever assigned the guests placed Vice-President Hall's card at Mr. Phelan's right as was proper. Mr. Hall was late, and Mr. Harrison, believing himself to be the presiding officer of the occasion, marshaled the guests and strode into the banquet room with Mr. Phelan on his arm. No doubt he was amazed to find Mr. Hall's card at the place he expected to occupy. Being a man of highly sensitive nature he conceived that he had been intentionally affronted, and he quietly withdrew.

Resting Before the Ceremony

Clement Tobin, whose marriage with Charlotte Russell is to take place, as previously planned, towards the end of the month, is in a sanitarium taking the rest cure. Mr. Tobin has not been in robust health, and consequently the young couple have decided to postpone their European tour until the spring. The wedding ceremony will be celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. De Sabla by a Catholic priest. Miss Russell is a Protestant, and the rules of the Catholic Church prohibit the performance of the marriage ceremony binding a Catholic and Protestant, in a church edifice. Mr. Tobin is a very strict Catholic and his fiancée has probably consented to become a convert. In such cases the clergy of the church prefer to postpone the baptism of the convert until after marriage. It is for that reason that Lieutenant Winship, who is to marry Miss Dillon, has not yet been received into the Church, a circumstance necessitating a home marriage ceremony. Agnes Tobin is to be the only attendant of the bride at the Russell-Tobin marriage and relatives only will witness the ceremony. It is the opinion of society that the newest Mrs. Tobin will take a very active part in the social festivities of Burlingame. Her tastes run to horses, automobiles and polo.

"They" Wonder

Society is wondering whether the real reason of the breaking of the engagement of Ruth McNutt and Lieutenant Fitzhugh Lee lies in General Corbin's recent manifesto against the marriage of army officers not possessing private incomes. It was supposed that the dot of the fiancée in this case would be sufficient to cover all weak spots in the officer's income, but the supposition may have been wrong. Anyhow the broken engagement gives society something to talk about in the dull season before the whirl begins.

Holbrook's Adventure

News comes to me from New York that Harry Holbrook has a grievance against the management of the Waldorf-Astoria, but from all the circumstances as revealed to me I doubt whether he will do much talking about it. Young Mr. Holbrook has been having a very gay time in

New York, and the only untoward incident to fret him was the one that excited his disapprobation of the Waldorf-Astoria management. I believe that he is convinced that the great resort of the provincialite is undeserving of the patronage of a gentleman from the Far West. Mr. Holbrook's feelings were hurt. It would not have been so bad if he had been unknown to the management, but no such excuse could be pleaded in palliation. It was all the result of a misunderstanding, but I prefer to wait and hear Mr. Holbrook's side of the story.

Considered Her Unamiable

Scarcely had Mrs. Frank Carolan arrived in Chicago when certain perverse newspaper scribblers who love to exploit their memories, began reviving reminiscences of her girlhood days. They recalled that she was not of a very amiable disposition, and that she exhibited a very hot temper at the first Democratic convention that nominated Bryan because seats had not been procured for her by her father's secretary. It is difficult for some people to understand the inherent hauteur of the scions of the American rich. They confound it with vulgar irascibility, to which it bears not the remotest relation. The American brand of hauteur is the offspring of self-consciousness, and is frequently accompanied by a patronizing air denoting pride of superiority. It is advantageously employed in impressing the common herd. Without it riches would lose more than half their charm to people of the first and second generation, who by reason of hereditary limitations are strangers to those esthetic pleasures reserved for the cultured. Among people of her own social level Mrs. Carolan is a very amiable woman—a trifle haughty, perhaps, but only to a degree becoming in a society queen of Burlingame. She is a very charitable woman, sympathetic, and gracious to her friends. She is not one of those who covet press booming.

Their Triumphal Tour

The King girls—Hazel and Genevieve—are expected home some time in November. Their tour abroad has been a triumphal one from start to finish for they have had entree to the most desirable homes in Europe. They have not been leading a butterfly existence altogether, for they have devoted a great deal of their time to music both in Florence and in Paris. They have also brushed up on Italian. The Kings are linguists and their French is said to be more like the French of Paris than that of any one in local society except Jennie Blair.

The Wail From Ebell

From Oakland comes a bitter wail from the women not in the magic ring of Ebell. Their complaint is anent the manner in which they are overlooked when, at the solicitation of some well-meaning friend, they accept a card to the monthly luncheon given by the exclusive club women for "members and their friends." There are about thirty hostesses appointed for each one of these luncheons and I hear that so much jealousy and competition are involved in the selection of hostesses for the Ebell affairs as to cause perpetual squabbles in the club. The "hostesses" usually hold a small reception of their own in the library, before luncheon, and it matters not a whit to them that the "party has come in" and that four or five hundred hungry guests are outside in the dining room. "Let us take our luncheon after the rabble is finished," remarked a sweet young society thing, at a recent luncheon. And they did. Meanwhile the "guests of honor" are all right. They sit at the table of the president and, if they are "worth while" she introduces them to some of the notables of Oakland. When Gertrude Atherton was entertained at Ebell it will be remembered there was a kick afterward from those who were not introduced to her. The present wail comes from the "barbarians" who, though invited to the luncheon, and who know the woman who invited them, but who feel pretty well left out of everything that is going on, aside from the things to eat and drink. If one of these poor wretches should so far forget her position as to address any of the august dames she would at once be shown her place. One of the world's great singers, who once helped out on an Ebell program, said that the Queen of England and the Czarina of Russia were not so stiff as the Ebell women of Oakland.

One of Mary's Little Lambs

Among the prominent women who have withdrawn from the Ebell at the peremptory demand of Lord Mary Eddy, the Christian Science Mother, is Mrs. Frank Watson, one of the best dressed of the Ebell great ladies. She is the wife of Frank Watson of the Realty Syndicate and a daughter of Mrs. Zeno Mauvais, who, by the way, has also left the club to cling to the Mother Church. Mrs. Watson, in a gown of white lace worn over pale blue silk, her neck and fingers flashing with pearls, diamonds and opals, is, or rather has been, considered one of the most ornamental of the young matrons of the Ebell functions.

The Hit of the Function

The "Fete Champetre" which was held in the seclusion of the Ebell Club of Oakland, Saturday afternoon, was a unique affair. The Chancel Chapter of St. Paul's Episcopal church gave the garden party and it was arranged that it be held in the grounds of Mrs. Emma Shafter Howard two weeks ago. But the rain descended and the winds blew and the fete was postponed. Then it was that one of the exclusive belles "had a hunch" that it would rain on October the eighth. The affair was a big success, financially and socially. The piece de resistance was a "Parisian Novelty" which was jealously guarded by Miss Lilian Isaacs and Marjory English, and which when displayed to the gaze of the one who paid ten cents was shown to be a life sized French swimmer. How she did kick and dive, and what dainty abbreviations she wore in the way of a bathing suit. But the dimes rained into the till and that was the end and aim of the Paris mademoiselle in the striped things.

Stockton Belle's Engagement

In a letter to a friend in this city Elsie Wilhoit, daughter of the millionaire real estate plunger of Stockton, has announced her engagement to Dr. Albert Hodgkins, brother of Sidney Hodgkins, who married her sister, Mamie Wilhoit. Miss Elsie is one of the most charming and popular of Stockton's fair daughters.

"I wonder why Mrs. Greenye didn't take a vacation this year?"

"Probably because her husband has a very pretty typewriter."

Gossip From Los Angeles

Memories of the days before the Gringo came were revived in Los Angeles the other day, writes my correspondent, when Miss Lisita Pico, a granddaughter of the late Governor Pio Pico, became the wife of George Robert Williamson of Nashville, Tenn. The bride is a beautiful young woman of the Spanish type.

Bob Burdette has aroused the wrath of the sporting element of Los Angeles. He has put the quietus on prize-fighting in the town by securing a lease of Hazard's Pavilion, the only building large enough for a fisticuff function. It is to be used by his congregation exclusively for religious purposes. He has agreed to pay seventy-two hundred dollars a year rental. Bob has knocked the sports out in one round and is being patted on the back by the religious people for his shrewdness. Had the sports an inkling to his purpose they would have raised his bid. Burdette organized his church a little over a year ago, and his followers are planning a million dollar building.

Mrs. William Keith, wife of the Berkeley artist, was adjudged the most interesting figure in the State convention of Equal Suffragists which recently held sessions in Los Angeles. Mrs. Keith brought South with her, in addition to a very witty paper, a trunk full of handsome gowns which properly delighted the women. When a request for campaign funds was made Mrs. Keith rose to pledge herself for five hundred dollars from her private purse. This was followed by a considerable sum placed to the credit of the re-elected president, Mrs. Mary Sperry.

They Want to be Clean

Taking a hint from an editorial in a recent issue of Town Talk, over one hundred and fifty students of the "U. C." have signed a petition for bathing conveniences. It is a surprise to many innocent persons to learn that a bath must be petitioned for. The co-eds who frequent Hearst hall protest, however, that they are not allowed to take physical culture and that they have no lockers and no shower baths. Professor Magee—who, to do him justice, advocated twice the number of lockers that were proposed, and, according to the women students, that was twice naught—is much displeased that the affair should have been discussed by the young women.

Protecting Grifters

It is with mingled surprise and amusement that I note the failure of both the Administration and anti-Administration papers to grasp the true importance of the tale of irregularities in the army transport service. These tales have been cropping up for years and will not down, and it is a striking fact that the story grows less and less factual while the tale "travels" on. It is in Washington, with the War Department, and not with Major Dens, the local superintendent, for whenever a story of graft leaks out an effort is made to place the blame at his door. Now I happen to know that the trouble is in Washington. Dens admitted these previous reports, particularly those regarding the charges against F. Long, a number of employees and a number of irregular methods of procedure which, from the time he was often, he endeavored to get rid of. He has been arrested and his efforts have been hampered and frustrated by the higher authorities in Washington. I know it to be a fact that men whom Dens found, on investigation, to be involved in questionable proceedings, have been returned to office here, while the very ones who gave the information and furnished evidence of graft have been transferred from the service.

Dens's Report Ignored

I will cite some instances. Several months ago I cited named F. J. Granger reported to Major Dens that there were irregularities in the handling of cases in and from the transport dock. Dens investigated at once and found the charges true. The report of the investigating board was sent to Washington, but was not accepted there. Instead W. S. Finner, the Government quartermaster, was instructed to make another report and to see if the Dens investigations were right. Finner went and the ground, and, I am told on good authority, confirmed the findings of the Dens board. This made the War Department mad. The persons implicated had influential friends in the Republican party. They were political opponents. Furthermore, it was deemed inadvisable to permit any more graft in the transport service than had already been tolerated. The Administration could be used as a handle, especially in the run of a Presidential election. The result was that those involved in the irregular transactions were kept in office. They are still there. But, most important of all, those the investigations took into account the graft was transferred to an unpaid, private post. Moreover, Finner is T. Finner, who was the paid secretary of the investigation, was sent to the Philippines and sent private matter than he was reported to go in the past order of years.

The Fate of Dens

In a nutshell, the facts are that Major Dens is a determined, honest, efficient, strong faced and unswerving, he takes cognizance of every report of graft, promptly investigates it and does not move when told to back. The Administration has not been so thorough as to back to Dens now. It wants to back up Dens and make it possible for the friends of such Republican politicians. When Republican newspapers try to place the blame on Dens they are talking on the ground floor.

Four Major Handicaps

None of us are so unmerciful as to be accused as weaknesses of Dens are such as that shown by the testimony Major E. H. Handicaps, the patient officer of the military corps, who was struck with pneumonia a few weeks ago. Since then the attack has, it was said, kept to him. Handicaps, resigned and acknowledged the helplessness of his case. But after his going in the hospital, he stated of his powerlessness, and assured the surgeons that he would soon be back on duty. He asked repeatedly how long it would be before he would be back in the service. Finally he was told that he would probably never get back. The shocking news made him somewhat despondent, but he was confident in his conviction that the doctors were wrong and that he would soon be again with his men and his gun. There are no officers in the army more popular than Handicaps and few so efficient.

A Happy Wedding

The marriage of Anne Maxwell Miller, daughter of Rear Admiral Almon Miller, U. S. N., retired, with Paymaster George Henry, Jr. of the Navy, is to be celebrated in the First Presbyterian church, Berkeley, with all the pomp and pageantry that glorious war makes it possible for but was to become a time of peace. The bride will be escorted by a group which included made in the quarters of the castle and with the atmosphere of a wedding. Indeed, you might have thought that the particular wedding had sprung from the frame where a portrait of her great-grandmother lay, painted in her wedding gown and veil, the same veil with the teacher, will show the pretty head of the President's father-in-law. Mrs. Miller will carry instead of a bouquet an old, worn, well-used Bible, that was her grandmother's. The bride's father-in-law will be held in honor for his military career. He is of Valley Forge, a member of the Navy, and Mrs. Miller, of Philadelphia. Henry H. Rousseau will be best man, and the newlyweds will leave for the Navy. Paymaster M. H. #### Burns-Gould

Captain and Mrs. A. M. Burns have issued invitations for the wedding reception of their daughter, Daisy, who will be married to Jason Gould on October twenty-sixth. The reception will be from four to six o'clock in the afternoon at the Burns residence, corner of Washington and Hyde streets. Daisy Burns is a half-sister of Mrs. Long, Ermentine Poole that was, the latter being the daughter of Mrs. Burns by her first husband. She was a widow when she married Captain Burns, who is a pioneer of San Francisco and one of the few still alive of our early-day sea-captains.

Rowan Rebelled

Captain and Mrs. Rowan are already established at Vancouver Barracks, and are being entertained in an informal way by the people of that post. I imagine that before leaving this city Mrs. Rowan realized that popularity has its drawbacks, for she and her stalwart husband were made the victims of their friends' hospitality in the two weeks they spent here just before their departure. Entertainments were given in honor of the officer and his wife from early morning till late at night. Mrs. Rowan stood the ordeal of breakfasts, teas and dinners like a veteran, but her hero husband grew haggard under the strain. Towards the end the man who took the message to Garcia rebelled. He roughed it in Cuba and survived all sorts of hardships, but the social strain in San Francisco was more than his system could stand. So he declined several invitations, and went to bed for a rest.

With a Difference

The daughter of U. S. Grant of San Diego will not follow the example of her cousin Julia, but will wed a plain, untitled American. Miss Miriam Grant's engagement was this week announced, the happy fiancé being Lieutenant Macy of the U. S. Navy. It is not likely that anybody has forgotten Julia Dent Grant's marriage with Prince Cantacazune. For weeks before the event the papers were filled with accounts of the preparations, including the elaborate trousseau of the bride. It was a shocking example of snobbish exploitation. The papers made up a splendid pedigree for Miss Julia, with intent to prove that the Prince was not making a mesalliance in wedding the daughter of an American citizen. The Grant pedigree was traced back through America, England, Scotland and Ireland to the year 600, and coats of arms galore decorated the flourishing tree. The tanner who by force of his own will and ambition rose to be president of his country was lost among the splendid achievements of the other ancestors of the bride. However when Miriam Grant marries her naval officer, there will be none of this, and it is doubtful if any one outside of her immediate circle of friends secures even so much as a peep at the trousseau. The U. S. Grants have not the social aspirations of the Fred branch, and are much quieter in their tastes. U. S. Grant had all the newspaper exploitation he cared for when he was a Senatorial aspirant. And the Cantacazunes, since their marriage, have been very little in the public eye. The Princess is devoted to her home and husband and to the little Russian prince who calls her "mamma."

The Retort Courteous

Henry Weinstock of Sacramento and E. W. Maslin of Alameda have been friends from the time that they both studied from the same alphabet book and made mud pies in Sacramento. Several nights ago they met in Alameda, where Mr. Weinstock spoke before the Unitarian Club on "The Negro Question." Before the lecture began Mr. Maslin approached his boyhood friend and said, in a low tone:

"What on earth possesses you to talk upon the negro question? You do not know a blamed thing about it."

"I am doing the very thing that you always do," retorted the speaker of the evening, "if you knew anything of the topics you choose for public discussion, you would never open your mouth."

At a Cosmos Club Dinner

Though the Cosmos is one of the least advertised of the clubs in this city it is one of the merriest, and includes many wags and wits who make its jinks worth while. At the recent annual Michaelmas dinner some very interesting papers were read, and among the stunts was Judge Frank Murasky, who had the temerity to give a recitation. The judge has long had the recitation habit, and being a judge he is credited with good judgment, but on this occasion he recited "The Bridge of Sighs." At the close of the gruesome effort some one suggested that a hurry call be given for the morgue wagon. The sire of the evening was Fred S. Myrtle, who made the following address:

Good evening, Gents! Congratulations All!
You've stood the season's ravages this fall
With fortitude amazing. And tonight
To mark your unethereal appetite
With soul's refreshment and from pain surcease,
I vow I never saw so many geese
On and around a festive board before.
The mem'ry of our brother Mike, I'm sure,
Was never half so gallantly observed.
And now the feasting's o'er, my spirit's nerved
To ask that reason's feast be given its share
With those material blessings which you bear
In fair round bellies, glistening eyes, and cheeks
That haven't known such coloring in weeks.

In annual gathering, from now on, we meet
The mem'ry of our brother Mike to treat
With due solemnity. The thing's been done
In other lands since Anno Domini 1.
Hundreds of years ago, in Erin's isle
There dwelt a little band; with no more guile
Among them than the silly fish, I say,
Which "Govie" snares in old Bolinas bay.
A classic name they gave them—just like us—
"Cosmopoli—Cosmopolorum—Cus."
They ate and drank; at various games of skill
They swindled one another with a will.
Bold Tim O'Bradford was their leader, he
The wildest fisher that e'er trolled the sea;
His source of power—for so the records say—
Was that he caught the grub for feasting day.
He drew his followers round him in a ring
And harbored serious thought that he was king.
His next in office, Gaffer Dodd—gee whiz!
You never knew such wondrous lore as his
In matters Scriptural. He knew the writ
Far better than the men who published it
In days when clubs were weapons of defense
And not societies, toil's recompense.
Next, Eicky Beerhof, Teuton by descent,
Foremost of all in acts of merriment;
His legal mind divided right from wrong,
His motto, "Man wants little, wants it strong."
Marius the Roman, merry, shiftless wight,
With faculty for dropping out of sight
And visiting strange fields and pastures new.
Whitney Jacobus, learned man of pills,
Thought games of chance a cure for all the ills
That flesh is heir to, though at times, I'm told,
After long sitting found his feet grow cold.
Phelim O'Phelan, sawbones, known as most Unfeelin' in his practice, ruled the roast
At the round table. Fletch O'Taylor, too,
The mildest-mannered man you ever knew;
Yet bold in feats of arms, without a fear,
In early days a dashing buccaneer.
Then, Hatch the Farmer—fitting name for one Whose chicken pastures were his daily run—
By way of new experiment, 'tis said,
Grew hares upon his farm if not his head.
Next, Mike O'Kerrigan and Hunter John,
Most brave with legal armor girded on,
Settled the club's disputes, casting their lot
With a foreign fisherman named Angellott.
Peter the Lambkin, too. He wasn't born
On Erin's shores. 'Tis said this merry wight

Escaped from Scotia's Isle one murky night
 And braved the stormy waters to avoid
 Some kilted braves he'd seriously annoyed.
 The dandy of the club was John O'Mills,
 Broidered his sheepskin suit with frips and frills,
 Day in, day out, dressed up to the nob;
 In after days Beau Brummel got his job.
 I haven't space to tell you all their names.
 Merry they were, up to all sorts of games;
 They held their feasting-days with customs quaint,
 And Mike the Archangel was their patron saint.
 Yet, simple in their life, I think, though few,
 The world was better that they lived. Don't you?
 The club's enrolled upon the scroll of fame;
 Old, thumb-worn volumes still preserve the name
 Of every member; history, deeds of arms,
 Its pranks and pastimes, with its coat of arms,
 Its motto "Rats," its crest a blunderbuss,
 "Cosmopoli—Cosmopolorum—Cus."

Its mantle wear we now. We are, I trow,
 Descendants of those wights of long ago;
 Their names are written on tradition's scroll
 And many of them still are on the roll.
 We've "Govie" Bradford, full of wondrous tales
 Of sport with Commodore Kellogg, catching whales
 Upon the marshes with a fishing-rod. The same
 His ancestor, who, nevertheless, earned his fame
 When markets there were none to hide the shame
 Of luckless sportsmen. Then there's Major Dodd, Whose latest craze is that Almighty God
 Made men who antedated Adam. Then
 There's Peter Lamb, most genial of men;
 Of him they tell a tale. It was one night
 When first the dining-room was given light
 By new device. Three globes had been let in
 The ceiling, and the light came from within.
 Now, Peter had been dining and his nerves
 Were none too strong. He suddenly observes
 The flood of light above. Then comes this cry:
 "Guid Gawd Almichty, three muins in the sky!"
 Other familiar names I read tonight;
 The list's too long to sing of every wight
 His praises. Merely, therefore, understand
 The club still lives, though in another land.
 "Cosmos" is its abbreviated name,
 And all its members play the same old game.
 We're here to toast St. Mike, our patron saint,
 With holy ritual, observance quaint
 As those who went before us did. We'll sing,
 Recite and read, keeping in everything
 We do the memory of our saint in mind.
 If you'll but listen for awhile you'll find
 Food for your brains, charm for your ears as well.
 Let laughter tinkle like a silver bell.
 Drink deep of wine. Forget for this one night
 You've aught to do save glut your appetite
 For fun. Ring up the curtain now.

In Financial Circles

Dealings on the Stock and Bond Exchange during the week past were a little above the average, yet still far from satisfactory. Transactions in bonds amounted to $284,000, in stocks, to 4,753 shares, as follows: 290 lighting, 766 water, 1,370 miscellaneous, 217 bank shares and 2,110 sugars.

The bond market is particularly strong, inquiries for good bonds continues unabated and the supply has been inadequate.

Both S. F. Gas & Electric and Spring Valley Water show a firmer tendency. No changes in miscellaneous stocks, no pressure to sell, though the supply seems to be plentiful.

Sugars displayed considerable firmness, especially Hawaiian Com. & Sugar Co., which scored an advance of $5.00, closing $67.1-4, the highest figure since March, 1901. I learn from good authority that dividends will be forthcoming in a very short time. The same can be said regarding Makaweli and Pauahau.

The Stage

It Depends on the Ear

From New York comes the news that people have been surfeited with musical plays, and that those that have been produced this season have not aroused any enthusiasm. The musical play has been done almost to death, and even here in San Francisco, though we do not see or hear more than one out of every ten produced in New York, murmurs of protest are being heard. We have come to the conclusion that there is nothing new in the best musical plays. Owen Hall, the librettist, over in London halts long enough in his occupation of stowing away royalties brought to him by "The Girl from Kay's" to confess that there is nothing original in them, and that one of the charms of libretto authorship is the receiving of praise for something you do not conceive. He gives a just estimate of the worth of musical plays when he says that all that is necessary for the start of a libretto is to "take care that there should be an English party visiting a far-off country." The American librettist, being on to the tricks, of the trade, takes care that a vulgar American is visiting in a distant land, and limits his plot chiefly to the making of a beautiful frame for the show girls. Anticipating the dirge over the grave of the musical play the Tivoli has started the renaissance of straight comic opera with a production of "Der Rastelbinder," something new from over the seas, light and tuneful. Being one of the protestants against musical comedy, I was more than open to conviction Monday night, and yet I did not enthuse, but the audience did. The theme is interesting, amusing and colorful, and the melodies are delightful, but in making the adaptation Alexander Henderson was too conscientious. He took no liberties with the libretto. There is more fidelity to the original in the humor than in the atmosphere, and the witticisms were not written for American consumption. If they had been Congress would have amended the Dingley Bill to meet the situation. However the opera is strong in its appeal to music lovers, but to get the benefit of the full strength of that appeal there should be no mangling of melodies. And I am sorry to report some ruthless mangling for which Ferris Hartman, who never was proud of his voice, is not alone responsible. Mr. Hartman plays the part of a Jew peddler with whiskers that are more Hebraic than his dialect. Thomas H. Persse, the tenor, has an important part, and in pantomimic expression is quite effective. He is of the Old School of comic opera tenors with a sense of humor akin to that of the librettist of "Der Rastelbinder." He was so warmly applauded for his throaty vocalization Monday night that I wondered whether I had grown tone deaf. When he soared to a high note I clutched the back of the seat in front of me and grit my teeth firmly, and then I looked in wonder at my esteemed friend, Paul Steindorff, waving his baton gallantly, as though he was really enjoying it. The audience seemed as well pleased as Mr. Steindorff and applauded tumultuously. Mr. Persse enjoyed a triumph, as they say on grand opera nights. So did Edith Mason.

even when one of her high notes went to protest. Dora de Filipppe and Kate Condon contributed the best of the vocal numbers but when it was all over I was in grave doubt whether I or the audience was suffering from some tonal infirmity, and my perplexity was heightened by my memory of the shrieks of Willard Simms in the role of the tinsmith with political aspirations. I know that Mr. Simms was conscientious in lampooning the parliamentary spellbinder, but the way he shrieked through the play was appalling. But Mr. Simms, too, pleased the audience, so why should I complain? On the whole the performance has many pleasing features. The ensemble numbers are spirited, and the development of the pretty story holds one's interest throughout.

The Importance of Style

There is a Broadway flavor to the production at the Alcazar this week, a circumstance due to the fact that there is nothing suggestive of provincialism on the stage. There are no home-made gowns or misfit suits such as we are accustomed to associating with the best regulated stock and road companies. That subtle something we call style is a feature of the production. The men wear their clothes well and the women look as though they are on good terms with modish modistes. And the stage-settings bespeak the artistic touch of somebody with a genius for interior decoration. The furniture wears an air of abandon. There is nothing stilted in the arrangement. The importance of these features is only to be properly appreciated when accentuated by manifest indifference to them. They are details that, when given the requisite attention, contribute in a great degree to the success of the scenic transcripts of actual conditions. In a measure they may be made to offset deficiencies of characterization. The Alcazar management deserves congratulation for more than one achievement. The strengthening of the company by the acquisition of new people is notable. I do not know whether it merely happens that John Craig and Lillian Lawrence are of the temperament best suited for the leading roles of Carton's "Lord and Lady Algy," but it is certain that in their conception and performance they are delightfully effective. It is quite probable that the play was selected with a view of enabling them to put the best foot foremost on the occasion of their introduction to the Alcazar clientele, and it is not unlikely that the first favorable impression will deepen under the severe test of a stock season. Miss Lawrence is a dashing woman of fine poise, and Mr. Craig is a manly fellow, sufficiently attractive to lure the matinee girl. He is a polished actor, skilled in the artifices of his profession, unaffected and free from the taint of artificiality. "Lord and Lady Algy" is an effervescent comedy, cleverly constructed, and the Alcazar performance is of real artistic merit.

"A Japanese Nightingale"

When, a long time ago, I read that pathetic little novel by Onoto Watanna, "A Japanese Nightingale," it was with regret that I learned of its later dramatization by William Young for Klaw & Erlanger of New York. It seemed such a pity to spoil a good book by making it into a poor play. That was my idea after seeing various other stage versions of novels. But "A Japanese Nightingale," the play, gives one no feelings of regret. Very few dramatized novels can approach anywhere near the excellence of this Young version of the Watanna book. Instead of being merely a series of pictures, requiring reference to the novel to bring a comprehension of the plot, in "A Japanese Nightingale" nothing is left out that is necessary to a thorough understanding of the play. It is a trifle long, but one does not feel that he could spare one sentence even of the dialogue, for all seems necessary to make the story complete. It is one of the best constructed plays I have ever seen, novel in situations and settings, and the Majestic players enter so well into their parts that they seem to be the characters, not merely assuming them for the night. I did not think it possible that they could, as a whole, do such fine work, for in the other plays given here the excellence was by no means general. However it only shows that, given the part that fits, the actor can always score. There is no use recounting the story, for nearly every one has read the novel, which was a "best seller" two years ago or more. It is of the usual Japanese wife, only in this case she was really married, and her husband is the erstwhile chum of her own brother. The Japanese customs are depicted faithfully, and the characters sketched with truthful pencil. The scenery, especially that showing the temple of Shiba, with the festival of lanterns, is splendid—no other word can describe it. During the festival there is a geisha dance, arranged by Bothwell Browne, and which must be very near the real thing. The music by the orchestra also fits in with the Oriental scheme, including Edgar Kelley's "Lady Picking Mulberries" and bits from "The Mikado."

"The Silver Slipper" and "Fan Tan." Miss Reals has the part of Yuki, the Japanese nightingale, with whom Jack Bigelow falls in love and marries. The character is written in a minor key, with only occasional changes, and Miss Reals invests it with simple, poetic charm. Thornton as Bigelow has a change from the characters he has been allotted in preceding productions at the Majestic, and he makes the lover a very manly and lovable chap. Gilmore in the small part of Harker the Californian and Eleanor Gordon as the Californian Miss Harker, put much life into their personations. Miss Gordon looks beautiful and carries herself with easy grace. She throws off her mannerisms and acts with naturalness and sympathy. Callahan as Ido, the marriage broker, and O'Hara as Nekko, of the Council, are capital in make-up and the carrying-out of the Japanese roles. Indeed it seems wrong to overlook any of the actors in the fine cast, they are all so good—Stockbridge as the Ensign, Marston as the American Consul, Johns as Yuki's brother Taro, Miss Maclyn as Yuki's maid, Miss Baltes as the stepmother and Miss Ross in the tiny part of Oharu San. "A Japanese Nightingale" was a financial failure in New York, chiefly no doubt because "The Darling of the Gods," somewhat similar in motif, had already sated Gotham's appetite for Japanese plays. Artistically, it could nowhere be other than a triumph, and judging by the packed houses still enjoying it at the Majestic, it is also a financial triumph in San Francisco.

"The Burgomaster"

It does not seem right that "The Burgomaster" should be given only a week at the Grand, for it is the kind of musical comedy that grows on the auditor and inspires the desire to see it not once but many times. It is not difficult to believe that it enjoyed big runs in all the Eastern cities. In it Pixley and Luders are at their best, and though it was written before "The Prince of Pilsen" and "King Dodo," it is quite as catchy and musical as those later successes. The company presenting it at the Grand is not an aggregation of stars, and perhaps for that very reason the cast is uniformly excellent. Stars are by no means necessary to the interpretation of a musical comedy when the latter is strong enough to stand on its own merits. Two San Francisco girls, Ruth White and Lillian Coleman, were hits in the Eastern productions of "The Burgomaster"; the former was in the original cast. Olga von Hatzfeldt is one of the brightest hits in the Grand production, and looks very pretty if not entirely masculine in her boy's clothes. With Louise Brackett she sings "The Tale of the Kangaroo" with charming chic. Oscar Figman is a clever comedian and so is Charles Sharp. The chorus is prettily costumed and sings with vim and dash.

The Elizabethan Drama

There is a distinctive, new charm in Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," given as it is this week at Lyric hall by the Ben Greet company after the old Elizabethan manner. The admirable work of the English actors, their musical, low-pitched voices, and their careful enunciation, make every line a delight. The mind is stimulated by the simplicity of the accessories and the imagination is pleasantly excited by the absence of the luxurious mountings of the productions of modern times. Somehow the illusion is more perfect when left to the magicry of the bard's lines, than when the attempt is made to bolster it up by the tricks of carpentry and electric lighting. One chair is the single piece of furniture but the imagination makes of it now a rustic garden seat and now a luxurious couch, fit for the elegant establishment of the Governor of Messina. From an ethical standpoint the performance is exceedingly interesting. Out of necessity there are a few changes made in the production, such as the substitution of women in the parts taken by the men and boys during the regime of Elizabeth. The comedy was given an even performance—hardly one actor overshadowing another in his or her part. Ben Greet made an interesting but slightly fatuous Benedict. His interpretation of the part seemed patterned somewhat after his Malvolio in "Twelfth Night." Constance Crawley made a charming Beatrice. Her raillery and madcap pleasantries were infectious and in her graver moments she assumed a sweet dignity. The Dogberry of Sydney Greenstreet was humorous in the extreme. Helena Head as Hero, Leonard Shepherd as Leonato and John Sayer as Don Pedro gave creditable performances.

Melody at the Orpheum

There's a lot of music in the Orpheum bill this week. Nearly every turn has a song in it. The stage aspirant is amusingly treated in the sketch produced by Lewis McCord and company, Elvia Bates having the part of a girl who thinks she is the ideal Juliet, and finds it hard to be convinced of her error. It is "Fredrick Lemaitre" done over for farce purposes, with a difference of course. It is one of the most laughable sketches seen here for many moons, and will be continued next week.

"In Summertime Down by the Sea" is the title of a new song and chorus written by Alfred J. Doyle, with a pretty waltz chorus.

Next Week's Bills

"Jimmy" Powers, always a prime favorite, and last seen here as a star in "A Mad Bargain," with Pete Dailey, returns to this city next Monday as the featured member of John C. Fisher's production of "San Toy," considered by many as the best example of musical comedy that London has ever sent us. It is eleven years since Powers visited us and betweenwhiles he has secured success after success as the principal comedian of the Augustin Daly company in both New York and London. There is said to be no more handsomely mounted production on the road than is represented in the two settings of "San Toy." The Columbia will have this clever Chinese-English musical comedy for two weeks beginning Monday. Then will come Isadore Rush in "Glittering Gloria."

"A Japanese Nightingale" will continue another week at the Majestic, and no one should miss seeing this really beautiful picture of Japanese life. The Outdoor Art League of California, which has done so much towards arousing a spirit for the beautifying and adornment of San Francisco's highways and parks, will take a benefit at the Majestic on Monday evening, October seventeenth. The League deserves the recognition of the public in a substantial way, and as the receipts of the evening are to be devoted to furthering the purposes of the organization there surely ought to be a jammed house at the theatre on the evening appointed.

At the Alcazar will be given a novelty to us, Clyde Fitch's comedy, "The Way of the World," which contains several new situations and is said to be written in Fitch's best vein. It will serve to show both Miss Lawrence and Mr. Craig in parts entirely different from those in which they appear this week and will also afford Miss Woodson, the new ingenue, an opportunity. The production of "The Way of the World" will be elaborate in every detail. The following week the first stock production of Esmond's comedy, "The Wilderness," will be presented. This is the play in which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin won favor two seasons ago.

"Arizona," which has twice been given in San Francisco and both times to weeks of crowded houses, is considered by many to be Augustus Thomas's best play. For the first time at popular prices, "Arizona" will be given at the Grand for two weeks beginning tomorrow (Sunday) matinee. It will be given with practically the same company which had part in the recent memorable run at the Academy of Music, New York, and the same elaborate investiture. A detachment of one hundred United States cavalymen from the Presidio, with their horses and equipments, will be one of the features of the production.

"Davy Crockett," Frank Mayo's old play, would be a drawing card without a star, but with James J. Jeffries, the champion, in the title role there is no doubt that the Central will be packed all next week. Jeffries has been starring through the State in the play and his hit has been tremendous, for he is not a bad actor by any means. Features of his production are the deer that he shot himself, and which are now stuffed "properties." One of the scenes of this old play, once so popular, shows Davy rescuing a girl from a terrible death in a blinding snow storm, and then defending her throughout the night from the attack of a howling pack of hungry wolves. After the performance Jeffries will give a three round sparring exhibition that will be a most spirited affair. Joe Kennedy will don the gloves with the champion.

The pretty German comic opera, "Der Rastelbinder" (The Mousetrap Peddler), has scored an immense hit at the Tivoli, which is nightly crowded. It will run next week and probably for some time longer. The London hit, "The Messenger Boy," is in rehearsal.

Techow's Cats, the most intelligent felines before the public, will head the Orpheum bill. In London, Berlin and Vienna they have been a sensation for several seasons. Sinon and Paris, "The Droll Greeks of the Olden Time," come direct from Europe. Josephine De Witt, a violin soloist and singer, will present her act that has won her fame all over the East, "Fiddle and I." "Rounding the Yeggman," the most sensational event ever depicted in Orpheum motion pictures, will be shown for the first time in San Francisco.

At the Chutes the newcomers will be: The Ellsworths, comedy sketch artists just from the East, in "The Silk Stocking"; the Lippincotts, singers and dancers; Master Marion and Little Gracie, a talented juvenile duo.

Leading features of the Sunday Call Magazine tomorrow will be the second installment of "The Grafters," Francis Lynde's diverting story of politics and love; a continuation of the "Adventures of Reuben," by Edward W. Townsend; "The Roping at Pasco's," a tale of the Arizona cattle country, by Ray Stannard Baker; a page of Alaskan folk lore, by Dr. Dorothea Moore; "Selling American Goods in the Orient," describing the methods and experiences of two live American drummers in the Orient; a practical "tooth talk" for parents and children, by Dr. William Merrill Tryon; a page of storiottes, fashion pages by Augusta Prescott and Madge Moore, and many smaller articles of timely note, in addition to the regular puzzle page.

A Scenic Triumph

Even in New York there can be found no more accomplished scenic artists than in San Francisco, and one of the best of the scenic engineers is at our own Central. "She," this week is produced on a scale of scenic splendor that was not surpassed in "Ben Hur." The first scene shows the city of Kor by moonlight, the volcano spouting fire in the background. In the second act the African coast, with the peculiar man-shaped mountain on the banks of the Ethiopian, is a masterpiece of scenic art. The ruined city of Kor and the cave of the Fire of Life, with the fire in which She comes to her ghastly end, were beautiful pictures. The theatre was crowded on Monday night, every box, loge, orchestra and gallery seat being filled. The occasion was rendered more than usually interesting as marking the return of Eugenie Thais Lawton for a week at her old acting-ground, after her Alcazar season with Whittlesey, and the young actress received a warm welcome and many flowers, among the "pieces" being a huge floral ladder denoting her climb up the ladder of footlight fame. Miss Lawton had the role of the mysterious She-who-must-be-obeyed, and acted with repose and dignity. Mayall as Killikrates in the prologue, and the fallen priest's descendant Leo Vincoy, in the play proper, had a part that suited him far better than the melodramatic characters he has been compelled to play of late. Miss Ellsmere, too, whom we have become accustomed to coupling with adventuresses' roles, was given the pretty, pathetic part of Armenartes in the prologue, Ustane in the play. Shumer as Horace Holley, Halifax and Corrigan as the servants of the two explorers, and Webster as Deep, were well cast. An army of natives, slaves and Amahaggars lent impressiveness to the production. It is safe to say, now that "She" has been resurrected, everybody will be reading again Rider Haggard's old novel, which once had such a vogue but of late years has been rather forgotten.

Sousa and His Band

No musical organization regularly visiting this city is assured of a warmer welcome than that which always awaits John Philip Sousa and his world famous band, now announced for a series of twelve concerts at the Alhambra, beginning tomorrow (Sunday). Sousa will give eight evening concerts and four matinees, more than he has ever given on any previous visit. The matinees will take place on the Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and the last Sunday of the engagement. Popular programs will be the rule throughout, the bill being changed at every performance. Mr. Sousa will present a number of European musical novelties and he will have several new compositions from his own prolific pen to offer, a new suite having been reserved by the composer for its original performance here. Seats may be secured at Sherman & Clay's. The soloists will be Miss Estelle Liebling, soprano, Miss Jessie Straus, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist. The engagement is under the direction of Gottlob, Marx & Co.

The Fleming Concert

Gertrude Fleming, the child pianist and soprano whose voice soars to high E, will give a concert at Steinway hall next Tuesday evening, at a quarter after eight o'clock. The little one has often been heard at church and charitable entertainments in this city and those who have heard her predict that she will some day become world-famed. She will play works of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Chopin, Bach, Schumann and other classical composers, including a left hand fugue, by Kalkbrenner, and in company with Rudolph Forster, her instructor, will give the "Lutspiel" overture for four hands, by Kellar Bela, and also some of the Moszkowski Spanish dances. The young artist, who is but eleven years of age, will sing Gounod's "Au Printemps," "The Last Watch," by Pinsuti, and the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," with a violin obligato by Charles Foley. Mrs. Jeanette Cofer, the well known soprano, will sing the aria and scene from Freischutz and "June," by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, and Mr. Foley, who is also an accomplished tenor, will be heard in Mattei's "For the Sake of the Past." De Beriot's "Air Varie," for the violin, will also be another number by Mr. Foley. Little Miss Fleming has hundreds of friends in this city and the house will undoubtedly be crowded. Seats will be on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, Monday and Tuesday.

Ben Greet's Players at Mills College

The Ben Greet Players will give a Shakespearean festival at Mills College on Saturday afternoon and night, October twenty-second, in aid of the endowment fund of that splendid institution. For thirty years past Mrs. Mills has devoted her labors and funds to the establishing on this coast of a college that now ranks with the best in this country. No young woman has ever been denied assistance in gaining an education, when her abilities warranted it, at Mills College. While there is a snug endowment fund already it is by no means adequate to the needs of the college and the performances by the splendid troupe of English players should help the fund considerably. The afternoon will be devoted to "As You Like It" under the greenwood tree in a beautiful spot in the college grounds. Ben Greet is famous for his elaborate open air productions and this will be the only opportunity to witness one in this vicinity. In the evening "The Merchant of Venice" will be given in the Elizabethan manner and in the original version, at Lissner hall, one of the handsomest of the college buildings. The casts will be very strong, Constance Crawley, whose portrayal of Everyman made such a deep impression, appearing as Rosalind and Ben Greet in his great role of Touchstone in "As You Like It" and also as Shylock. The costuming of both plays will be most elegant and Manager Greenbaum is giving special attention to the music, both vocal and instrumental. Tickets for either performance will be one dollar and a half, or a course ticket for the two, two dollars and a half. These may be obtained at Lyric hall, Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, Paul Elder's book store or at Mills College. The one o'clock broad gauge from this city to Twenty-third avenue, Oakland, will connect with electric cars direct to the college; the seven o'clock boat for the evening performance. As many will attend both, a supper will be served by the young ladies at a nominal price. Special rates for tickets will be made to schools, colleges and literary clubs in large parties on application to Will L. Greenbaum at Lyric hall, or Mrs. Mills at the College.

The Dutch to Go

We are to have surcease of Dutch dialect in O'Farrell street. Rice and Cady have decided to take themselves hence. George Lask, who was formerly stage manager at Fischer's, has been engaged to stage the Weberfield pieces in Pittsburg, and he wired Rice and Cady to come on. They decided to do so, and Bobby North agreed to accompany them. The Fischer management expects to return to musical comedy without the predominant Dutch feature.

Music

[Communications addressed to this department should be received not later than Tuesday noon.]

The Hofmann Concert

Josef Hofmann was certainly in a Chopin mood at his second concert. The most distinctive thing on his program was the group of this master's Etudes, delightfully played. In these studies we have Chopin at his very best; health and vigor are nowhere absent, and there is even a nice balance between the aesthetic and the technical, a balance well preserved in Hofmann's interpretation. The two more familiar ones in G flat, the arch "Black Key" and the nimble "Butterfly," he was forced to repeat. Another characteristic number was Schumann's "Carnival." Hofmann did not surround it with Bauer's orchestral iridescence, but brought out finely its tricky humor and fantastic merriment. The old French group was neatly done—charming technique in "Le Rappel des Oiseaux" (Rameau) and "Le Tambourin" (Couperin); pure and lovely feeling in "La Tenebreuse," something of which reappeared later in the Gluck-Sgambati "Melodie." The Schubert "Hark, Hark the Lark," done over by Liszt, which proved such a favorite when Hofmann was here before, has lost nothing of its charm in his hands. The Beethoven Sonata Op. 22 led the program, but only in the adagio did the young pianist get into the Beethoven depths. Nor did I care for the Liszt Rhapsodie, notwithstanding those pearly runs. It was an unreasonable audience that could and did ask for more, but in response it got one of the loveliest of the Chopin nocturnes, the one in C minor, and played divinely at that. Did I not say that the artist was in a Chopin mood that night? Hofmann has grown since his last visit. He gets nearer to the heart of his composers than he did then. Moreover he has no pose. He does not seek to impress his individuality upon his composers, but rather to seize theirs. His playing gratifies one's artistic sense. There is no violent declamation, no pounding out of fortes, no abuse of the pedal; on the contrary he understands the beauty of the pianissimo, the witchery of the nuance.

Josef Hofmann's Farewell

Tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon, at two-thirty o'clock, Josef Hofmann will give a popular concert under Greenbaum's management at the Tivoli, tickets for which will range from one dollar and a half to fifty cents. The program will be: Prelude and Fugue, D major, Bach-D'Albert; Lieder Ohne Worte, Mendelssohn; Sonata Appassionata, Beethoven; Polonaise Fantasie, Barcarolle, Impromptu G flat major, Valse C sharp minor, Valse A flat major, Prelude No. 25, Chants Polonaise G major, Polonaise A flat major, Chopin; Isolde's Liebestode, Feuerzauber, Wagner; Etincelles, Moszkowski; Rhapsodie No. 2, Liszt.

Gadski will be the next big concert attraction. The great soprano will be heard in song recital.

The course of free organ recitals by Louis H. Eaton, at Trinity church, will be resumed for the winter on Thursday evening, October twentieth, at eight o'clock. Miss Una Fairweather, contralto, and Miss Grace Courtney Jenkins, violiniste, will assist. A contribution of not less than ten cents each is expected from the audience, which sum, after deducting the expense of the program, is used to pay the carfares of the volunteers of Trinity church choir.

The first concert of the twenty-eighth season of the Loring Club, in Native Son's hall on Tuesday evening, occurred too late for review in this issue. The committee of management of the club has arranged for four concerts to be given during the present season, and in two out of the four concerts the club will have the assistance of a full orchestra, so that a number of compositions of much importance and of great interest to music lovers will be produced during the season. Several of these are such as are very rarely heard, owing to the difficulty of getting together

The Kopta Recitals

On Sunday afternoon, October twenty-third, assisted by Miss Maude Hohmann, soprano, and Gyula Ormay at the piano, Wenzel Kopta will give a violin recital in Lyric hall. A very fine program has been arranged for the recital: Concerto for Violin op 15, Bazzini; violin solos, "Romance op. 50 F major, Beethoven, "Gavotte," Becker, "Slavish Dance" from op. 67, Dvorak, "Cannonetta" from the Concerto op. 35, Tchaikowsky; song, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," Saint-Saens; concerto for violin, No. 2, Adagio, Rondo, La Campanella, Paganini; songs, "Summer," Chaminade, "Spring," with violin obligato, Weil; violin solo, "Ballade et Polonaise de Concert," Vieuxtemps. The Kopta Quartet, composed of Wenzel Kopta, first violin, John Josephs, second violin, Charles Heinsen, viola and Adolph Lada, violoncello, with Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt at the piano, will give six chamber music concerts in Lyric hall on Sunday afternoons, October thirtieth, November thirteenth, December eleventh; January fifteenth, February twelfth and March twelfth, 1905. The program for the first concert will consist of a Mozart string quartet, piano quintet by Sinding, and string quartets by Svendsen, Corsanego and Sinding. This organization gave concerts last season which were notable for their excellent programs and execution.

With You to Show the Way

With you to show the way,
To break the path and make it clear of thorns,
To help bewildered reason to the light,
To set, and guide, poor blundering feet aright,
With you as pilot, over any sea
Not known before, the course would easy be;
The world seems filled with naught but what adorns,
With you to show the way.

With you to show the way
How helpless and dependent have I grown;
I fear to venture lest I stray afar
And, wandering back to paths where sorrows are,
Again be lost within their Stygian gloom.
What weave the Fates upon their shadowy loom?
Must I, in some dread hour, walk on alone,
With none to show the way?

How, then, will seem the way?
The flowers will all be dead, the birds all dumb;
The well-loved paths, close-hidden from the throng,
Will all repeat my dead heart's funeral song,
I could not bear to look on things once shared—
One may not go and leave the other spared,
So, tarry but a little till I come
And show me, still, the way.

October, 1904.

Automobile Topics

George P. Fuller, the California racing king, has just added a new Oldsmobile to his stable. "It is my ambition," said Mr. Fuller, "to own the largest stable of automobiles of any man in California, and I will always find a place for an Oldsmobile."

The Pioneer Automobile Company is in receipt of the following letter from the Oldsmobile Company in Detroit: "Our expert representatives, Messrs. William E. Peck and Company, have just made a deal with Mr. Rafael Guirola Duke of San Salvador, for the agency of our Oldsmobiles in that country. The gentleman, who is of refinement and means, was formerly vice-president of San Salvador. He has just returned from Europe with his wife and family and is now at the World's Fair at St. Louis, whence he will return to his home in San Salvador and enter upon the duties of his new enterprise."

F. A. Lathe of the Pioneer Automobile Company has been spending the week visiting the Pioneer Company's agents in Southern California, and has already reported orders for five Oldsmobile light tonneau touring cars.

Mr. Klinger of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company has just returned from a two weeks' business trip to Watsonville, Salinas, Santa Cruz, and other towns adjacent thereto in his Stevens-Duryea machine. Mr. Klinger has everything good to say about the practicability of an automobile for getting over the ground and saving time.

A deal of interest is being taken by the public in the small car, or the car for the man of moderate means. Much of this concern is due no doubt to the recent reliability trials at Hereford, following which Messrs. Jarrott and Letts, Limited, have put two Oldsmobiles on the road for an extended trial. On Wednesday, September twenty-first, the two vehicles—one a two-seated car, and the other a four-seated light tonneau—started from Great Marlborough street, London, each car carrying two people and their entire luggage. The idea is that the cars will do fifty miles in the morning and fifty in the afternoon, making a total of one hundred miles per day, and this for thirty days makes a total of three thousand miles, throughout England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. The observer who will accompany each car will keep a record of everything that happens. The cars will be run under the ordinary conditions that any man would expect; i. e., to take half an hour in oiling the vehicle and looking carefully over it, then do fifty miles non-stop in the morning, stop at mid-day for lunch, again oil up his car and do a further fifty miles in the afternoon, non-stop. The observers will report to Messrs. Jarrott and Letts, by telegraph, the arrival at the destination each day, and a large map of the trip will also be made. The vehicles attracted much notice as they sailed forth from Great Marlborough street toward Hyde Park Corner, attended by a long line of other cars, and their progress will be watched with interest by automobilists.

Return Roberts of Madera made a trip recently through rain and mud from San Francisco to his home, and the following is a short newspaper account of the remarkable journey of his steam automobile: "Mr. and Mrs. R. Roberts, Misses Minnie Roberts and Olive Smith and E. M. Capurro arrived here this morning in Mr. Roberts's White automobile from San Francisco. The party left San Francisco Saturday afternoon and stopped all night at San Jose. Sunday morning the trip was renewed, the journey for most of the way being made through a heavy rain. The roads were in a frightful condition, especially so between Los Banos and Merced. The machine stood the severe ordeal well and made the way through the heavy, sticky mud without a stop or accident. The party arrived at Merced at seven o'clock last night, but on account of the threatening weather, deferred their trip home until this morning. Mr. Roberts is justly proud of his machine."

John A. Benson made a difficult but interesting tour in his White recently. He ran to San Mateo over the rough country road and then went over to Half Moon Bay, when he found he had no lubricating oil. He intended to go to Monterey, but decided to return home and came up the coast to Point San Pedro and then into Colma over the San Pedro road. This road is in bad condition and is seldom traveled, but the White touring car held its own through the unfavorable conditions and arrived in San Francisco in good shape.

Automobiling in Hawaii

BY GEORGE A. TURNER.

To the automobile enthusiast looking for pastures new, and having time and inclination, a visit to the Hawaiian Islands offers one of the most unique trips that one could imagine. At first thought one is very apt to imagine the cost of such a trip would be excessive, but having enjoyed a visit to these beautiful islands I am in position to state facts as to the cost incident thereto. We took passage on the Sierra, shipping on the steamer our Rambler touring car, the cost of transportation for the machine being but thirty-five dollars for the round trip. The Oceanic Company accepts the auto for shipment in running condition, the only preparation being the emptying of the gasoline tank. On steamers of this company the autos are carried in the baggage room and, judging from our experience, one need have no hesitancy in sending the finest of cars in this manner, as ours reached its destination at Honolulu in perfect condition and without a scratch. On our return we took passage on the Pacific Mail steamer Siberia, but, strange as it may seem, the port-holes of this steamer, though it is much larger than the Sierra, would not permit of the machine's being taken aboard through them, as was the case with the former. As it would have been necessary to have hoisted the auto by sling in order to have brought it on this boat we sailed without it, having made arrangements for it to follow us by one of the Oceanic steamers.

As the machine is carried in the baggage room on arrival at Honolulu it is practically the first freight off the steamer, and Hall & Co.'s warehouse is but three minutes' walk from the dock. Gasoline of good quality is obtainable at three dollars and seventy-five cents per case of ten gallons and it did not take us long to fill our tank. With a turn of the crank we started on our most pleasant tour.

The accompanying photographs speak convincingly of the quality and picturesqueness of the various roads. The climate being semi-tropical suits the gasoline car to perfection, and during our stay of one month there was not an incident connected with the running of the car that afforded the least trouble. The natives and the white population take very kindly to the auto, and occasions were very rare where the horses showed any alarm or fright. There are no automobile laws or regulations on the Islands and it is left to one's common sense to go where or how he will. Although there are but two touring cars on the Islands there are several first-class machine shops, which make a specialty of automobile repairs and carry a full line of tires and other necessities. One could start on this trip with no greater preparation than he would for a trip to San Jose.

Once arriving at Honolulu one should lose no time in looking up Mr. Boyd of the Honolulu Promotion Committee, who knows all about every road and byway, its condition, grade, distance, the locations of the most attractive plantations and the best hour to visit them. It was our pleasure to have him accompany us on many of our little tours, and he gave us all the information we asked for regarding the scenic features along our roadway. A tour of the Islands on an auto is one of the most delightful and satisfactory surprises one could possibly look for, and my only regret was that my camera was not used more freely. However on many of our trips the time of day was not the proper one for taking pictures, and I did not have time to cover the ground again. Any one contemplating this trip should by all means take his camera, and I should advise taking a goodly supply of plates or film. There are numerous photographic supply houses there, but I believe it is far better to carry one's own supply as the climate is such that all sensitive materials deteriorate very rapidly. One need not have any hesitancy in having his work developed in Honolulu, as the photographers there are competent and care-taking.

There are quite a number of runabouts on the Island and several orders have been placed for the larger cars. I am satisfied that it will not be long before any auto visiting Hawaii will find plenty of company. All the first-class hotels, the Alexander Young, the Moana and the Royal Hawaiian, are prepared to house and care for automobiles. Our Hawaiian possessions promise to become a favorite touring ground for the "lightning conductors."

Her Stratagem

Once upon a time there lived a pair of lovers. For the space of a few months they were the most devoted lovers that ever kissed and quarreled, kissed and made it up again. She lived but for his presence; he existed only upon her smiles.

But, as is the way when Cupid holds the reins with too passionate a grip, in time that unpleasant aftermath made itself felt—Surfeit. The woman tired of her passionate wooer, and became indifferent. To conceal her growing indifference, she acted her part with added ardor. This had the opposite to the desired effect.

From her over-ardent love the man sickened, and as is the way with men—who are never more than bad actors when their desire dies—this one considered discretion the better part of valor, and he fled the scene.

This should have been the proper ending to the love story—if it had not been that the woman was a woman. No woman enjoys being deserted by her lover; if there is to be a parting, she must take the initiative.

This action of the man caused the woman's dying love to spring again into lusty life. His defection caused her to love him more dearly than ever.

She did what she could to bring him back, wrote tender messages with the imploring sentences cleverly disguised in woman's wit. But he did not answer—perhaps he never received them. However, the woman could not bear the uncertainty and finally, after much thought, she sent a wire to him:

"I am dying—I long to see you once before I die."

Then she went to bed, and waited.

Posthaste, on receiving the message, the man traveled toward the erstwhile object of his passion. A great tenderness surged in his soul toward her, for she—so he interpreted it—was dying because of his cruelty.

All the way on his journey he thought of her, pictured her as she had been in the zenith of their mutual love, and as she must be now, with her footsteps on the threshold of death's domicile.

He forgot everything but that she was dying and had sent for him. Once more love burned hotly in his heart for her.

When he was led to her bedside, his head was bowed with grief. When he raised his head and saw the lovelight in her eyes, an answering gleam of warmth shone in his.

The woman concealed her satisfaction at the success of her ruse to bring the man again to her side. She buried her face in her hands and sank back on her pillow.

"Do not die," he cried, pressing her hands in his, "you must not die—live, love, for me."

He drew her unresisting lips toward his. Their lips met in a kiss that was full of thrills.

She dropped back upon the pillow, but did not take her hands from his.

"I feel, dear," she said, softly, "that I shall live. I was dying, but you have called me back to life."

And she lived, and they were married. And he considered himself the happiest man in the world. But one day, after they had been married a year, and each was satisfied of the other's love and devotion, the wife told of the stratagem to which she had resorted to draw him back to her. She thought it such a good joke she knew he would enjoy it.

He did. But unfortunately his love for her had been inspired by her frankness and candor and freedom from the characteristic arts of her sex. He had always believed her guileless. He was certain that she was different from other women that he had met. Her little joke disillusioned him.

He appreciated the fact that it was her love for him that impelled her to trickery, but he could not blind himself to the fact that hers was not a soul above deception. His ideal was shattered.

Thereafter his confidence waned. His suspicions were constantly being excited. He became a chronic skeptic. Incredulity saddened his heart.

A year later they were divorced.

It is well to make of the wooing period a closed book.

Letters

The Wail of Writers

Now goes up a cry for a "literary clearing house," in order that poor authors may be saved the suspense and expense resultant from the present method of peddling wares from place to place in the hope of making a sale. Grace McGowan Cooke has written practically and entertainingly on the topic, in which she sets forth the advantages of some recognized bureau at which editors could make application for short stories, timely articles, jokes and poetry, stating quality, quantity and price, on the same plan that housewives order tea and sugar from the grocery, or apply to a floor-walker of a dry goods emporium for directions to the proper counter. It is argued, reasonably enough, that today well written articles and good stories go a-begging from pillar to post because the authors cannot be informed as to what editors may have in stock or what they may particularly require, and miss their chance of acceptance because they fail to arrive at the psychological moment. If an editor could overhaul the stock of the clearing house and select what he wanted on Russia or Japan or the kindergarten movement, it would save him time and worry, and give him more freedom of choice than he now enjoys when he is compelled to take or leave what is offered to him as an individual, and as to writers, they would not be longer in placing their articles than they are now. All of which is good as far as it goes, but there still remains the problem of why people will persist in writing what no one wants. The diligent reader of periodical literature, even though the diligence expends itself on the indexes, must be struck with the fact that year by year the contents of the reviews and the better classes of magazines are the work of experts. Scientists, professional men, military and naval officers, artists and actors, furnish the information and opinions concerning their specialties. Re-hashes of old school books and encyclopedia pages are not wanted, and amateur inferences and conclusions have no market value. Most of the publications of any standing or influence do not wait for volunteer copy, but solicit from statesmen, college professors or others who are in a position to speak with authority on the subject desired, and offer compensation at a rate which is sure to secure what is wanted. The observations of the amateur are practically worthless, since he, and more especially she, seldom knows how to see, and about the only unfenced field open to all comers is the chance to describe how some popular author lights his cigarette or steps off the street car, accompanied by a snap-shot of the remarkable feat. As to fiction, there is a constant stream, of varying degrees of mediocrity and badness, pouring through every editorial office. No one will believe for a moment that if anything better were obtainable the trash would be printed at all. It is an idea as old as the art of writing that there is a "conspiracy to down genius," each writer with a returned manuscript seeing in himself the personification of genius. No doubt many good stories are returned for definite reasons. They may be excellent in themselves, but of a character to shock the sensibilities of the clientele of a particular school; they may be such as are unfit to put into the hands of growing boys and girls, or of adults of arrested mentality, and magazine editors have to consider their wares in connection with general circulation. Jack London recently made a strong plea for a periodical devoted to what he styles "tales of terror," but it is a question whether there are enough votaries of this style of literature to warrant a special medium, and it is unquestioned that a single such story might seriously cut off the circulation of a general magazine. The librarian at Santa Rosa found it advisable to remove Frank Norris's novels from the shelves and issue them only on direct application, because women who lacked the sense and discretion to know what was proper mental diet would read them and then complain, even write communications to their local paper concerning the altogether private fact that they, individually, could not sleep after reading "McTeague" and "A Man's Woman." But these are exceptional cases. The fact remains that most of the fiction offered is poor in quality, while as to quantity, if every accepted manuscript in existence today were to be destroyed and none more offered for five years at least, it would not be until the end of that time that publishers would need to feel any uneasiness as to the perpetuity of the supply. What is needed far more than a literary clearing house to enable scribblers to more easily dispose of their wares is some method of persuading them to turn their attention in some other direction. It is not enough that people would rather write than dig, nor even that they write better than they can dig, but that they can write better than any one else can, that should be the final factor in the case. Poor digging is better paid for than poor writing, besides making very much less difference to the world.

Mrs. Voynich's publishers announce that the interest which has been incited by her latest book, "Olive Latham," has been reflected in her first novel, "The Gadfly," and the inquiry has been sufficient to justify them in preparing a new edition. Nothing that Mrs. Voynich writes can be classed under the head of "pretty little tales," and it gives a better impression of that vague body, "the reading public," to know that there are a sufficient number interested in such strong, if unpleasant stories, as to warrant the re-issue of "The Gadfly." This was one of the first novels to fall into the hands of the dramatizer, but the stage version proved a particularly dismal failure. Just what connection Mrs. Voynich had with the venture never was made clear, but she disavowed any interest in the drama, whether it failed or succeeded, though, as one critic put it, she thereby showed ingratitude, for any one who saw the play must need read the book to find out what it meant at all.

Here is the very newest and latest bit of book booming—but it may turn out to be a boomerang. Marie Corelli has a new book out, "God's Good Man," and her publishers furnish the information that if the type were set in a straight line it would extend one hundred and twenty-five thousand miles! Miss Corelli would appear to have some method in her madness, in her recent tirade against the people who will not read books that are too long. How much is "too long"? One would imagine a one hundred and twenty-five thousand mile journey taken to better purpose than through one of her novels. At all events, if people do object to reading long books it is hardly a stroke of worldly wisdom to call attention to such an eye-tinerary as this.

The executors of Thomas Dunn English's estate have found half a dozen short stories among his effects, which they are going to publish immediately under the title "The Little Giant, and Other Wonder Stories." This business of trafficking in the affairs of the dead, publishing letters, raking out juvenile work, and turning all things to account, recalls that story of Dickens, "Somebody's Luggage." It begins to look as though any disappointed hectorer of editorial and publishing offices has but to die and leave a barrel of unaccepted manuscript to make sure that it will see itself in print, not in hap-hazard periodical publication, months and years ahead, but immediately, in book form, and with the additional advertisement of its being posthumous. Perhaps that adds lustre in some cases—the reasonable hope and expectation that this is the end.

—The Bookworm.

Charms and Omens

St. Luke's day, which falls on the eighteenth day of October, is reputed to be more lucky for lovers than even the day of St. Agnes. A love charm to be used on this occasion, and which is, of course, infallible, as they all are, is concocted as follows: Take marigold flowers, a sprig of marjoram, thyme, and a little wormwood; dry them before the fire and rub to powder, after which, filter through a piece of lawn. Simmer in white vinegar with a little virgin honey, over a slow fire, and after lying down, anoint the breast, eyes and lips, saying three times:

"Luke, St. Luke, be kind to me,
In dreams let me my true love see."

Then go to sleep at once and the image of the future wife or husband will appear betimes. It surely should bring dreams of the lover.

Michaelmas used to be on October tenth but it is now, I believe, twelve days later by the new calendar. The devil puts his foot on blackberries on Michael-

The Correct Idea

This is on a tablet in one of the English cathedrals:

"Ursula—

Tyndall by birth,
Coxee by choice,
Upcher in age and for comfort."

From "An Imaginative Man," by Robert S. Hitchens:

Everything that is strictly private is fascinating. Only when one has made it strictly public does the bloom vanish from the peach. The Bluebeard chamber of the soul is, after all, the only room worth looking into. But the worst of it is that one can generally find the means of entrance to it much too easily, and often it turns out to be only a barely furnished and respectable attic after all—the sort of a room a Christian mistress gives to a Christian housemaid.

The bewildered are never more bewildered than by their own unwonted moments of intelligence.

Submission may be one of the world's greatest sins, for it gives the rein to tormentors. It makes slavery, cruelty, all wrong, easy and effortless. I do not find submission in silence. There is nothing conquered in that which makes no sound. No statue, no picture or scene submits itself. You may chip it, paint it out, destroy it with a town or a railway, and it merely passes away. It is no longer there. It becomes a memory at once and has all the tender beauty of a memory forever. But when a man or an animal submits he is just as he was, with only an added ugliness, a servility in his demeanor, or a muzzle over his mouth—something about him to rouse contempt. (Dennison.)

The Champion Ananias

James Russell Lowell used to tell the story that one of the gentlemen he met in Chicago had a great deal to say of his travels in Europe. Lowell remarked that George Sand was one of his favorite authors. This reference to the great Frenchwoman called forth a characteristic reply.

"Oh, yes! I have spent many a happy hour with Sand."

"You knew Sand, then?" asked Lowell with an expression of surprise.

"Knew him? Well, I should rather say I did," cried the Chicago man, adding as a clincher: "I roomed with him in Paris."

OFFICE CHIEF OF POLICE

It gives me much pleasure to recommend to the public Mr. George Mayerle of San Francisco. I have been using glasses for the past six years and during that time have consulted several opticians but not until I had consulted Mr. George Mayerle and had him fit glasses to my eyes, did I get entire satisfaction.

Most respectfully,

J. H. ANDERSON,

Sergeant of Police.

Four Honest Judges

It is important that all decent citizens, irrespective of party allegiance, should consider it their highest duty to retain upon the bench the four incumbents—Kerrigan, Seawell, Trontt and Murasky—who are now candidates for re-election. It is extremely hazardous to yield to the influence of a partisan spirit. A bold effort is being made by the bosses to secure personal representation in the Superior Court, and their despicable plans should be thwarted. The push and every staffer on the register will vote for Burchard and Conlon, and it behooves decent people to defeat the villainous combination by casting a ballot for the two Democrats and two Republicans who are known to be honest. No man sensible of the importance of safeguarding the ermine from impurity should heed the requests of friends in such a crisis as this. The allied forces of corruption are powerful but are incapable of achievement when the respectable citizens of the community are united against them.

Our Shrinking Executive

Mayor Schmitz appears to be unaware of the efforts of the Grand Jury to uncover evidence of malfeasance and misfeasance in public office. The records of the criminal courts show that grave irregularities have occurred in departments of the city government over which Mayor Schmitz has absolute control. Yet the Mayor betrays not the slightest interest in the proceedings. He is giving a fine exhibition of stolid indifference to matters of vital importance. There is about him a sphinx-like silence suggestive of the great effigies of Egypt, though the figure that he cuts is less grand and imposing. He lacks the sublimity of repose that characterized those sculptured wonders. Dumb as an oyster he may be, but not as deaf as a post. He is not insensible to the ominous rumblings that portend a shock to his political system. But it is unfortunate for him that his crafty mentor did not instruct him to quit his shell and avail himself of an opportunity for a grand-stand play. Any official inquiry into the acts of commissioners appointed by Mayor Schmitz concerns him, and if he were a zealous and upright Executive he would be anxious to have them vindicated or condemned. A wiser politician would have at least affected a desire for a thorough investigation; he would have expressed a willingness to assist the jury in obtaining information and disclaimed intention of shielding his own appointees from scrutiny. But Mayor Schmitz seems to have deemed it advisable to stay in the background. His present attitude is in strong contrast to his conduct on other occasions, when there were opportunities to bathe in the spot-light.

Because He is Grateful

The Oakland Tribune has taken Professor Moses to task for delivering a political speech to his class at the State University. Our Oakland contemporary suggests that the class-room of a public educational institution is not the place to air political opinions. Quite true, but Professor Moses is an economical gentleman, and he has no inclination to go to the expense of hiring a hall. Moreover if he were so inclined it is far from certain that people would care to hear him discuss the Philippine question. He has aired his views on that question so often that they have become trite. They are the views of a man grateful to the Republican Administration for having made him a member of the Philippine Commission. It is of course improper for Professor Moses to exploit his gratitude under color of a lecture on the principles of government to the students of a State University. If he is impelled either through gratitude or a lively sense of favors to come to volunteer as a campaign orator, he should communicate with Mr. Cortelyou of the Republican National Committee, and send in his resignation to the regents at Berkeley. Meanwhile President Wheeler should caution him to abate his ardor as an advocate of Republican policy.

Another Heretic

Another Presbyterian divine is at issue with the creed of his church. He rejects the Westminster Confession because, in substance, it proclaims the dogma of eternal torment, and he is horrified at the thought that for the single sin of Adam countless millions were condemned to hell. There is only one logical thing for him to do and that is, quit his church. He should not wait to be arraigned for trial by his Presbytery as a heretic because some of his judges might themselves be in an embarrassing position. This Presbyterian rebel, who rejects fundamental dogma as "blasphemous" and "monstrous," represents a great deal of up-to-date evangelical sentiment. The dogma of the Fall of Adam and the redemption of man by Jesus Christ is the foundation of the Christian religion, but there are a great many Protestant clergymen with a smattering of theology who do not take it seriously. They have been revising the Westminster Confession, and have made several amendments but they do not dare remove the foundation, knowing that the whole structure would come tumbling down.

Confess and Avail

At a Methodist Church Conference held recently in Georgia, soon after a lynching in which negro prisoners who had been convicted were taken from the jail, a request was made that any member of the church who had participated in the affair should make public confession and withdraw from membership. "Open confession is good for the soul," but with the prospects of indictment for murder staring men in the face it is hardly to be reckoned good for the body, and common prudence would recommend a still tongue. In this connection it is pertinent to ask: what is the proper function of a church? Admitting that men who will resort to mob violence are not model Christians, what is a church organized for? Is it an exclusive club, to which only the "saved and sanctified" are eligible, and only "the good" may belong? "I call not the righteous, but sinners to repentance," said the founder of Christianity, but the modern church seems to make no provision for the sinner at all—after he has been found out. A church edifice, in these days, appears to be not a "House of God," but a private meeting place, and a minister not a public servant, but a lecturer to the few who are afraid of losing caste socially if they are not most careful of the morals and manners of those who sit in their pews. If the churches had done their part in the training of the community to respect for the law—if the ministerial body could not be relied upon at all times to preach warfare and intolerance—if, in a word, too often, the inflammatory speech and the anarchistic suggestion had not come from some ill-balanced cleric, lynching, burning alive and other horrors would have been less common than they have become. Instead of turning the lawless out of their communion, they should rather strive to gather the black sheep into the fold and by example and precept do their best to calm excitement and encourage coolness.

Taking Meredith Seriously

Simply because of the association of the name George Meredith, there is an unwonted degree of attention being given to the prediction that in time we shall have a working rule of marriage for limited periods, terminating at the end of the specified time without the necessity of formal divorce. The idea is not new. For twenty-five years at least it has been discussed and it has been held out ever since as a panacea for unhappy marriages and all their relative ills. It has even been said that if women were not permitted to monopolize a man for life their unmarried sisters would have a chance to sample wedded bliss, since it is a matter of statistical enumeration that there are not men enough to go round. The theory just at present is that if marriages were contracted for ten years and expired by limitation at the end of that time, the "divorce evil" would disappear of itself; that is to say, if every one were divorced it could not cause any more comment or criticism than there is over the universality of birth and death. As a matter of record, the average marriage which ends in a divorce court does not now endure for ten years, nor yet for five, and those who have contracted the divorce habit would chafe as much under a ten year contract as they do now under one which is nominally for life. What is sadly needed is not the open gate at the other side of the pasture, but a closely guarded entrance from the high road. Some effort should be made to instill into the growing generation a proper appreciation of the duties they voluntarily assume and a sense of honor in the matter of observing obligations. Clergymen and magistrates should exercise some judgment about uniting those who present themselves as candidates, when it is evident from their conduct that they do not know what they are about. All too frequently we have the spectacle of giddy girls applying for separations on the ground of their youth and the absence of parental consent, and brazenly telling how they laughed and skittered and otherwise misconducted themselves during the ceremony. It seems to be a joke enjoyed as much by the parents as by the children when they drop in for a marriage license on their way to a picnic, or stop on a transfer half way to the Cliff House and finish the trip as a wedding journey. Next week they see some one whose taste in bonbons or neckties approximates their own and application is made for a separation based on the grounds of extreme youth. More divorces are asked for by brides of a few months' standing than by those who have given the institution a fair trial, and by far the greater number of separations, even for sufficient cause, are granted to those who have been married less than the provisional ten years—a fair argument that things do not grow worse with length of years. It is one of the pleasant theories of the culture clubs that women are the only ones who have a grievance, and that, given free divorce, it is the men who would find themselves in a bad box and under urgent need for reformation if they hoped to have homes. It seems to be taken for granted that the women would be enabled to pack up and leave and the men would be left standing among the ruins. On the contrary, were men not restrained by habit and public opinion, it would be they who could walk out free and unencumbered.

A Ridiculous Hugo

The descendants of Victor Hugo seem to be taking up a fair share of public attention in France. Jeanne Hugo, the granddaughter of the author, is suing for her third divorce, and her brother, George, has announced his intention of making use of the family title. Henceforth, it he can engineer it, he is to be known as "Count Hugo." It is absurd enough for anyone to be laying claim to a title in this day and generation, when the probabilities are in favor of such distinctions being pretty generally abolished, or at least very much restricted, but "Count Hugo" is a little more absurd than the average wearer of borrowed plumes. The title, which was bestowed on his great-grandfather, was not "Count Hugo," but Count Cifuentes. It was a Spanish, not a French honor, and the soldier who might have borne it never made any use of it at all, but treated its bestowal as a joke. It was given to General Hugo by Joseph Bonaparte, then King of Spain, after he had defeated an insurgent force at Cifuentes, apparently in the same spirit which it is popularly recorded that an English King knighted a dish of beef. But even had it been otherwise, the Spanish titles are not handed down like old suits of clothing. They are not hereditary unless the successor petitions for special permission and pays the heavy fees demanded. In this case, no such privilege was ever prayed for, and even if it had been, there is no probability that it would have been granted, since the Bourbon rulers have never either confirmed or renewed any Bonaparte titles, nor acknowledged Joseph Bonaparte as a king. General Hugo's father was a carpenter, and his grandparents were peasant farmers, so "Count George" belongs to the same noble rank as our own "Count Murphy."

An Important Suggestion

Irene Clark's "Lady Caller," discoursing in the Bulletin on the subject of feeding the baby, suggests that a course in hygiene and the chemical value of foods should be established in the grammar grade. Of course. It would be pretty hard to imagine any subject that ought not to be crowded into the higher grammar grades. Children are expected to learn more or less of all the arts and sciences, to cook, sew, do carpentry, bead work, basketry, paint Christmas cards, weave shoestring gimeracks, master the rudiments of medicine and nursing, and incidentally pick up a few stray ideas in the matter of spelling, geography, history, reading, writing and grammar; not too much, of course, but enough to pick their way through the nature books and skim-milk literature. Any sort of a fad will answer if it will furnish an excuse for a new text book and another special teacher with a high salary to see that the regular instructor gives due attention to the new branch. There are so many things which "ought to be" introduced into the school course that the home is practically eliminated. Not only do parents no longer feel it incumbent on them to teach anything at all in the home, but children have no desire to learn. Ten-year-old Mary does not feel elated when she is permitted to take the cook book of a Saturday morning and experiment with her first loaf of gingerbread or pan of cookies. She has played that game in school, and she "knows all about it." Neither may her elder sister be called upon to get dinner in an emergency. She has had a lesson on how to prepare mushrooms, but potatoes and carrots are beneath her. Besides, she is accustomed to a gas range and the very latest of patent contrivances, and to adapt herself to the emergency and remember that her father's pocket is neither so deep nor so wide as the city treasury, is a lesson that is not thought of. Anything that any one doesn't want to do is foisted on the school department. The only wonder is that some one hasn't come out before this with a suggestion that there be a maternity ward attached to each building and a course in gynecology added, with a phalanstery in which the products of each institution may be raised at public expense with the pupils of the unfortunate upper grammar grades in charge. It is only half a step in advance of some of the things already insisted on. Nothing is so easy as for some idle theorist to add a straw to the pack, without a thought of the load already borne. It is a pity that there cannot be some practical plan evolved by which the Irene Clarkes and Ella Wheeler Wilcoxes and others of their stripe can be put into schoolrooms where they will be forced to teach all the fads in vogue in addition to their own particular pet hobbies. It is a pity that this cannot be managed in some way so that while they are made to bear the responsibilities pupils can be protected from their irrational folly. Teachers are expected now to do everything for children but bear them.

The Conscienceless Bryan

The Examiner suggests that the names of Cleveland and Olney be eliminated from the list of Democratic campaign orators. Why not include William J. Bryan? Does anybody believe that the eloquence of the hypocritical blatherskite is furthering the interests of Judge Parker? He is probably receiving pay for his campaign labor, but it is money pocketed under false pretenses. Like William R. Hearst, he is keeping his record straight, but he hopes that the Esopus candidate will be defeated. His support of Judge Parker is insincere and stamps him as a fakir. It is interesting to recall at this time some of the comments made by the Nebraskan, within the last few months, on the man whose election he is now advocating. Here are a few excerpts from his harangues:

With such a candidate, the battle would begin with a foot-race and end with a rout.

Parker goes before the country on a cowardly and straddling platform.

A speechless candidate and a meaningless platform.

A man weak enough to put his candidacy in Hill's and Belmont's hands.

The plutocratic element is in control of the Democratic party.

Parker's nomination virtually nullifies the anti-trust plank.

Parker's nomination was secured by crooked and indefensible methods.

He and his managers adroitly and purposely concealed his position until the nomination had been assured.

Despite those utterances and sentiments of the erstwhile silver champion, he is today advocating the election of Judge Parker to the Presidency of the United States. And yet he poses as a patriot and a gentleman. And he had the impertinence to assert in a recent speech in Omaha that he had neither recanted nor withdrawn from where he had stood before the nomination. The most discreditable feature of the Parker campaign is that arising from the toleration of the conscienceless mountebank from Nebraska.

Russia's Military Genius

Military experts are beginning to appreciate the tactics of General Kuropatkin. The Russian commander has been conducting the Manchurian campaign under stupendous difficulties and disadvantages for which he was not responsible, and yet he has suffered no humiliating defeats. He set out from St. Petersburg fully cognizant of the unpreparedness of his country and of the demoralization of the Russian army, due to the corruption with which the War Department was honeycombed. He knew that he would meet with reverses, and feared that as a consequence of the great discrepancy in the strength of opposing forces, the lack of facilities for reinforcement and the superior equipment of the enemy, his reputation as a tactician would suffer. But the contrary is the case. He was subjected to the severest of tests and has vindicated his generalship. He has steadily retreated but it has been a masterly retreat, and the achievements of the Japanese have been disastrous. It has been dearly bought prestige that they have won. Kuropatkin, so far, has been more than a match for the Japanese commanders. But, so overwhelming are the odds against him that he cannot hope to turn the tide of battle.

A Public Spirited Citizen

BY THEODORE BONNET.

The indications are that Mr. James Duval Phelan is being groomed for the mayoralty race again. Since his return from Europe his admirers have begun to sing his praises in a meticulous strain, for they are sensible of the danger of jolting the dear people unexpectedly. They probably intend to tickle the popular tympanum with the dulcet music of his name deftly arranged in alluring cadences before the blaring fanfare to arms in his support. There is unquestionably a large element of this community desirous of the services, in the Executive office, of James D. Phelan. It is so unusual to find a millionaire who has no inclination to graft off the public, willing to devote his time to civic duties, that people feel grateful to him, and being assured that he will sustain the dignity and the credit of the city they care naught for the trifling imperfections attributed to him.

I am not addicted to vaticination, but I have not the slightest hesitation in proclaiming that paragon of civic virtue, James D. Phelan, the People's Choice in 1905. And why not? After a season of Ruefschmitz we should not only be willing but eager to condone the comparatively trivial transgressions of the father of the organic law that happens to be responsible for the present demoralization of the city. Methinks I hear an anvil chorus faintly rehearsing the Knockers's Medley, but I hearken not. Mindful am I of the signs of the time. I read in them the revivification of the glory of James D. Phelan. The wanderer has returned from his fleshpots to give aid and comfort to the oppressed, and the oppressed lift up their voices and chant the praises of their redeemer. When Cicero returned from his banishment, the people met him with shouts of joy and congratulation and all Rome went out to receive him. How like unto the Romans are the modern people of the several hills! And how quick was J. Duval Phelan, the repudiated, to take at its flood the tide in his affairs, signaling his return by condescending to become an humble election officer intent upon safeguarding the sanctity of the elective franchise, and then reviving the credit of the city by securing purchasers for two million dollars' worth of its besmirched securities!

Mr. Phelan has many enemies in this city who, despite the importance of rescuing the government from the control of the grafters, are uncompromising and unreasonable in their opposition. They speak of his shifty tactics, his selfishness and his insincerity, and they are not open to the conviction that the good he is capable of doing will far outweigh the evils that flow from his political manoeuvring. The attitude is unfortunate. San Francisco is in need of an Executive who will frown upon grafters, who would scorn to traffic in demoralizing privileges, and in whom civic pride is etherealized. Such a man is James Duval Phelan, the natural born, enthusiastic, professional reformer; the tried and true friend of the people, three times Mayor of San Francisco, and throughout whose regime neither the security nor virtue of the statue of Justice on the New City Hall was jeopardized.

In such a crisis as we are now confronted with the objections that are made to James Duval Phelan, as a mayoralty candidate, are puerile. It should be sufficient to know that so far as financial matters are concerned he is an honest man, that he is proud of his native city, scorns corruption in public office, despises grafters and generously devotes his time and money to all enterprises for the development of the municipality.

I have heard him denounced as a pot-house politician. The accusation is unjust. Mr. Phelan is a politician of lofty aspirations. He confesses that he longs to adorn a seat in the United States Senate, and that his political activity is inspired by that laudable ambition. Surely he is not to be reproved for striving to reach that high goal. His enemies argue that in fathering the charter he was actuated more by personal motives than civic enthusiasm; that the charter was designed to promote the construction of a political machine, and that his insincerity became apparent when he ignored the Civil Service provisions, and appointed illegally his servitors to positions in the City Hall. To those charges I can only plead the Statute of Limitations, and suggest that Mr. Phelan should be taken for what he is worth, and not apotheosized. No demigod is he, nor does he counterfeit the graces of divinity. He is a plain, unassuming millionaire brooding over the egg of his Senatorial aspiration. The plain people should rejoice that he condescends to take an interest in the affairs of state, and that his passion for politics never flags. It is not to his discredit that, like a patient spider, he devotes his energies to the weaving of political webs with an eye on the broom of public opinion. Some of the most distinguished statesmen in the world's history have promoted their own interests under color of the public good. The motives of the best actions will not bear too deep scrutiny.

In the charter campaign Mr. Phelan carried out his program of perfecting the frictionless operation of a political machine, feeling no doubt that as a friend of the people he should scheme to compass his laudable ambition, and that as the people are blind to their own interests it would not be wise to take them into his confidence. The ultra-scrupulous say that it was unmanly in him to denounce as crooks all those who foresaw the mischievous effects of the instrument which he was foisting on the community for selfish and patriotic purposes, but it should be remembered that he was convinced that his own political success would redound to the interest of the people.

It may also be safely assumed that Mr. Phelan has been chastened by experience. He has probably repented the Machiavellian tactics that brought discredit on his last term in office. He had done much to earn the gratitude of the people, and he had won their confidence and esteem to such an extent that he was virtually empowered to do as he pleased, and that is what he did. He felt that in consideration of his great public service he was justified in manipulating the municipal government for the improvement of his private interests. Perhaps at times he exhibited traits of character that appealed not to the admiration of idealists, but his civic zeal was always rampant. His loyalty to the people was such that he has frequently defended their rights at the sacrifice of the closest friendship. Most of the political prestige of this fearless young millionaire was won by turning his back on his friends and sticking to the dearly beloved people. It is of such stuff that the best public servants are fashioned. For his characteristic loyalty to the people, whose favor he naturally appraises more highly than that of individuals, since it is to them that he must look for that which he holds most dear, he was denounced as a demagogue, and Prince Poniatowski went so far as to assert that he was no gentleman, and was unfit to associate with decent people. But the Prince was angry because Mr. Phelan would not keep a race-track open after having intimated that he would do so, under the misapprehension that the thing could be done without exciting serious protest or harsh criticism. Mr. Phelan was always quick to retrace his footsteps when he found himself on the quicksands of unpopularity. He knew his fickle public well, and nursed its esteem religiously. It was said at the time of the race-track episode that he induced two of his friends in the Board of Supervisors to vote for the ordinance opening the track, and then shocked them with his veto, but the fact was that upon judicious second thought he realized it would be a grave political blunder to approve the measure. His action proceeded from the inviolable dictates of a chevelar conscience and a high and necessary concern for the welfare of the city. As a sagacious politician he knew that he could better afford to sever the friendship of individuals than alienate the affections of the people. From experience he had learned that the people detest only those vices in an official that they suffer by. No man knows better than he that individuals are snobs, and that they are always to be conciliated by wealth and position. He returned to private life scoffed and sneered at by his social acquaintances and humiliated by being snubbed by the Irish whose friendship he had most assiduously cultivated. It seemed for a time that Prince Poniatowski had given utterance to an oracular pronouncement, but young Croesus calmly ignored the scowls and frowns of his erstwhile associates. Maintaining as he did his financial eminence, he could afford to be indifferent to the affronts that were offered. His confidence in the winning ways of Mammon was supreme, and it was vindicated when he was elected President of the Bohemian Club, not through esteem for his personal virtues, but because of his wealth, for which he is not to blame, and his vanity, the most superb of his vices. It was felt that by reason of his vanity he would so keenly appreciate the preferment that he would contribute generously to the glory of the organization, and right royally has he fulfilled the hopes of his sponsors.

And today James Duval Phelan is to be reckoned with as San Francisco's leading public spirited citizen, repentant of his past and eager to begin anew his career as the friend of the people. Let us welcome him with open arms, treasuring not the prejudices of disillusionment, and no longer inclined to pedestal him among the canonized, but prepared to make allowances for the weaknesses of the flesh. Let us remember that the highest virtue is often found in a mind where it is eclipsed by a hundred vices; that it is a mistake to expect more reason and virtue from human nature than it is capable of. Since we are all imperfect as to morals and character, why should any of us deride the shortcomings of another? Each man that prides himself on his virtues has vices that another may scorn who too is proudly cognizant of his own good qualities, though by no means free from deformities of character. There are wide differences between man and man in respect both of morality and intellect, differences established by nature and often effaced by society, for the man to whom nature has been cruel is often the favored of the world. Mr. Phelan, like all men, is the subject of his own individuality and temperament, and it happens that he is specially qualified by nature for the public service. Craving popular acclaim as he does, he is ever ready to serve the people and repudiate his friends. Even conceding that Poniatowski was right, it should be remembered that what San Francisco needs at this time is a Mayor who will flout the grafters and who will make a record for honesty and integrity, and restore the confidence of the business element. Why should we deal in fine distinctions that are immaterial and irrelevant? Why discuss ethics to determine whether it is improper for a host surreptitiously to lampoon one of his guests in the public prints, when a whole community is feverishly excited over the prostitution of public office to private gain? An honest, upright Mayor is wanted and James Duval Phelan fills the bill.

The Gospel of Loot

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.—Jeremiah xv: 13.

The Rev. W. S. Ament, D.D. was arrested by the French military authorities of Paoingfu on February fourth, 1901. He was charged with blackmail, extortion and looting. It was unfortunate for Mr. Ament that he poached on French preserves. In the American, British, German and Russian loot sphere he was free to gather the missionary harvest where he pleased, but when he reached out from that broad but overworked territory into the spoil yard set apart for the industrious chevaliers of France he was promptly jailed.

The story of the Reverend Ament's effort to collect a Boxer indemnity on his personal account has been partially exploited in the North American Review by Mark Twain, but as soon as the missionaries found that it was not one of the great American humorist's jokes they brought sufficient influence to bear on the magazine to suppress the discussion.

It was urged by Mr. Ament that he was merely "adjusting the claims" of native Christians; that as there was no provision in the indemnity demands of the Powers whereby these "converts" were to be remunerated for losses sustained by reason of their profession of Christianity according to the special gospel of the Reverend Ament, leading member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, he had taken it upon himself to remedy the omission. It was as raw a graft as was ever perpetrated in China. Even the mandarins, past masters in the gentle art of "squeeze," were astounded by the forthright thievery conducted under the personal supervision of Mr. Ament, whose gang of looting "converts" swooped down on everything in reach and brought it in cart loads to the Ament bazar, there to be sold to the highest bidder.

While his Chinese accomplices were stealing right and left in Peking and its suburbs, the Reverend Ament was foraging on his own hook. He went into the outlying villages and terrorized the officials by telling them that the foreign troops were coming and would lay the town in ashes unless his demands were fulfilled. It was on one of these expeditions that he was arrested by the French. That he was never brought to trial was due to the exertions of Mrs. Squires, wife of the First Secretary of the American Legation in Peking, and to the intercession of Mr. Conger, the American Minister. It is currently reported in Peking, by those who participated in the siege, that a large portion of the most valuable plunder acquired by Secretary Squires at this time came from the Ament loot; and it is said that Mrs. Squires was doubly anxious that the missionary should not be compelled to tell all he knew. Another proof now put forward by the Reverend Ament to corroborate his plea of innocence in this matter is the circumstance that he was not convicted. It is true that he was never convicted of his larcenies and his blackmail, but nobody in China considers this negative testimony sufficient to acquit the missionary of the crimes with which he has been charged.

The American Board of Foreign Missions did not dare to bring the accusation of Mark Twain to a direct issue. A private investigation convinced them of its absolute truth, and they were probably warned by Minister Conger against pressing the "vindication" of Mr. Ament too close to the bone of contention. If the American Board of Foreign Missions had probed the charges against Mr. Ament they would have been compelled to find him guilty, and this organization could not afford to stain their own 'scutcheon with the bar sinister of Ament. Their verdict would have confirmed all that has been charged against the missionaries of their Board. Moreover they would have involved other shining lights of the Presbyterian and the Methodist Episcopal missions then and now resident in China. Perhaps the American Board of Foreign Missions was wise to let the Ament episode drop.

The "adjustment" of the claims of Chinese Christians by the missionaries was a larceny of magnitude. Its illegality was not denied by the missionaries themselves. Their excuse for levying on the village authorities for compensatory damages sustained by the "converts" rested solely on the plea that the Chinese courts would not adjust these claims, that the various commissions of the Powers could not assess these damages, and that it was the season for loot anyway—a time of retribution for the Chinese who had presumed to question the right of the foreigner to invade the Middle Kingdom to harry and rob the people thereof. Everybody else was looting, and why should the missionaries and their retinue of poverty stricken coolies be debarred from the privilege?

Peter Turner, a well known contractor resident in Peking, says that he sallied forth one day armed with a Winchester rifle and accompanied by a Peking cart, seeking what he might devour. On his way he met the sexton or verger of the Methodist Episcopal mission, a pious old gentleman who had grown gray in the service of the Lord, returning with a Peking cart loaded with loot of varied and valuable character.

"Ah, ha!" sneered Turner, "it's an early bird that catches the late worm."

"Fair prey," responded the sanctimonious cynic, "fair prey, Mr. Turner, and ample warrant. We're spoiling the Egyptians—spoiling the Egyptians." And the old thief cackled merrily.

The total amount of indemnity charged to the Chinese on account of the Boxer revolt was four hundred and fifty thousand Haikwan taels, each tael worth at that time about seventy-four cents American money, or about three hundred and thirty-three million dollars. Of this amount the United States received thirty-two million nine hundred and thirty-nine thousand and fifty-five taels, or twenty-four million four hundred and four thousand nine hundred dollars. Subsequently the value of the Haikwan tael depreciated, but the Powers refused to calculate the unpaid portion of the indemnity at less than the original value. Neither would they listen to the generous proposition of the United States to accept payment in silver. Shylock was in court with his scales, demanding his pound of flesh and asking to be shown where it was otherwise nominated in the bond.

It has been charged by those who do not love us that America is a nation of grafters. But if there is a basis of truth in this wholesale accusation it must be admitted that we are also a nation whose sense of justice and equity is superior to that of any other, and we need only cite our proposed action in the matter of this Chinese indemnity to prove that fact. Only our missionaries joined the objection of the Powers to just and generous treatment of the Chinese—for only our missionaries were greedy of the profits within their grasp. Out of the American share of the indemnity the Methodist Episcopal mission of Peking, at the head of which is the Rev. H. H. Lowry, has erected a stone palace which they call the Peking University (Ching-tu Hui-wen Shu-yuan), a title intended to deceive in that it confuses this theological seminary with the Imperial University of Peking—the Han-lin of national education. The original mission of the Methodist Episcopal propaganda in Peking was a miserable pile of buildings and outhouses worth, probably, including contents and appurtenances, not more than ten thousand dollars at a very liberal estimate. The mission now occupies five hundred acres of the choicest section of Peking, close by the Hataman or East Gate of the Tartar City—an area half as extensive as the combined area of all the Legations. This domain is surrounded by a stone wall crenellated and loop-holed for artillery and rifles. Within the wall, besides the seminary buildings, are “humble cots” surpassing in elegance of finish and architectural beauty even the glass-enclosed villas of Kuling and the beautiful bungalows of Pei-tai-ho. The interiors of these Queen Anne “cots” are furnished throughout with imperial blackwood handsomely carved, and ornamented with priceless relics of “the loot.” Each of these “cottages” is occupied by a member of the “Peking University Faculty”—H. H. Lowry, M.A., D.D., President and Professor of Practical Theology; G. D. N. Lowry, M.A., M.D., Professor of Histology and Pathology; F. D. Gamewell, M.A., M.Sc., Ph.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physics; I. T. Headland, M.A., S.T.B., Ph.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Science; Tsao Yung-kwei, M.D., Professor of Gynecology and Obstetrics; H. E. King, M.A., Professor of History and Political Science; N. S. Hopkins, M.D., Lecturer on Diseases of Eye and Ear; Miss A. Terrell, M.A., Professor of Mathematics; and Mrs. H. E. King, M.A., Professor of English.

The story of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp is based on a Chinese legend—or so Monsieur Galland claimed. Here is a tale based on Chinese history that surpasses the Frenchman's romance—a story that tells how a Methodist “bethel” and a cluster of “shanties” were transformed to a magnificent possession more than “baronial” in its splendor and more than “princely” in its grandeur.

Undertones

BY HARRY COWELL.

When we come to be old enough to have seen the children of whom we knew as children, the chances are that on days when we are not feeling quite ourselves, the thought of the trivial round life makes, of its senseless return into itself—seed, plant, flower, seed—strikes us with sickening reiteration. We become subject to fits of philosophic blues, are, for the time being, apostles of pessimism, and are like to find ourselves hortatorily holding forth, preaching an end to it all by means of the universal adoption of celibacy.

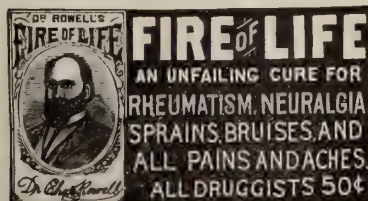

Look at yonder group of school girls floating down the stairs like a bouquet of uprooted wild flowers flung by Capriciousness on the bosom of a stream. (The figure is, I fear me, inept, writ in water, sure to erase itself. Clever reader, make for yourself one in every way appropriate.) Well, there the girls are, gliding seaward down the school stairs—surely a gladness to behold. A gladness—no, not on a man's bad day. “Only too well I know what is before you, poor drifting flowerets,” he, the sick one, the sophisticated, says to himself, with a sigh. “Unless Death intervene, you will grow up, the most of you, but to go the way of all womankind. There is already about you from which a fool could foretell your doom: Sooner or later, along the journey you will fall in with the fateful blind boy, and because of him will smile ecstatically and grievously weep. Each of you will be gladder and sadder than was ever girl before. You will make, as did your forebears, your compromise with the Ideal, and marry; and in due course of time little likenesses of your fair selves will grow old and wise and wonder at your children's folly.” Thus, on one of his off days, the optimist to himself, as he gazes, contemplatively, at what he “only too well” knows to be foredoomed to wife- and motherhood.

How well Turguney wrote it in his inimitable “Enough.” “All this was, has been, has been again, and is a thousand times repeated—and to think that it will last on so to all eternity—as though decreed, ordained—it stirs one's wrath! Yes . . . wrath!” And the beautiful plaint of Russia's great prose-master finds the cosmopolitan heart of far-away San Francisco. He is spokesman not only for his own people—as Renan said of him—but for the whole race of reeds that feel rather than think. He is perfect mouth for the dumb many of all times and lands. Had you and I but the gift of speech and we, too, had said: “All has been felt, all has been gone through. . . . I am weary. What to me now that at this moment, larger, fiercer than ever, the sunset floods the heavens as though aflame with some triumphant passion? What to me that, amid the soft peace and glow of evening, two paces hence, hidden in a thick bush's dewy stillness, a nightingale has sung his heart out as though no nightingale had been on earth before him, and he first sang the first song of first love?” How exquisitely between the wonderful, sad lines is written the old inevitable contradiction—life reasserting itself! How enchantingly the disenchanted tongue, despite itself, proclaims the truth that love and beauty are forever new! In the weariness of the flesh that comes of much study, I have read and read again and yet again Ivan Turgunov's re-saying of the saying of Israel's preacher that all has been said, all done; and bathing in its beauty as in a river whereof the water is ever being renewed, found refreshment ineffable. With every return of spring new songs are sung. If you will not take my word for it, ask the first pair of lovers you meet in a lane when either side them the hedges are the color of pleasure, and they seem to be walking right into the blue heavens before them over the hill. But even the ecstatic new Now lets lovers out of its grasp "every once in a while"; when, say, the stars come out, and the twain, tired of their sweet talking, watch in silence those bright distant worlds, brood over the everlasting mysteries, grow melancholy, and remember that the very words which they have been saying with such rapturous spontaneity each to each have all been said before a thousand times and a thousand times a thousand. Well for them if it be impossible for either to recall saying the self same things in the self same way to some other man or woman. And then, to think that all golden lads and lassies—even golden to you and me—going heavenward between green hedges, must some day come to dust and nothingness! Yes, "wrath," that's the word. But whether early or late we cry "Enough!" for the last time and fall into the ditch, nothing daunted, our children, led by the blind child, will go on toddling toward the lane. An old world, truly, boring the sun with its sameness, but ever being rejuvenated by new "I love you's" whispered into new ears.

All this, however, had it a moral purpose, would be but vain writing. By no contemplation of the inevitableness of his coming to dust; by no realization of his woful lack of originality; by no humble saying to himself: "The stars are large and I am little; time is unthinkably long and my interval ridiculously short," can any man be permanently cured of egotism. What happens to me is important, the least trifle; original my imitation; my repetition the reverse of trite. Is there, upon the face of the globe, the like of my native land? My moment, has eternity a match for it? "No; I do not read French literature," says one to me, and with a word the incomparable thing is bereft of all its beauty. Says another, "Beer is my drink," and forthwith champagne goes flat. No need to multiply instances. The sorriest ragmuffin reading with reminiscent eye his own life history is engaged with matter of more interest and moment than is to be found in Carlyle's "French Revolution," or Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." The universe has as many centres as there are men and women, to say nothing of the so-called brute creation. The question which Alfred Russel Wallace raised awhile back is easily settled. We inhabit the earth.

The will to live smiles at the "I am weary" of men. For a brief space of his brief space life may seem to a man a great running and no goal, but run he must. Though to one the processio of the suns lead no whither, none the less will he leave behind him heirs to his ennui. In a dream the other night I found myself in a vast forest astir with spring—I with a wildness in my blood. (Before falling asleep, I must say parenthetically, I had been in no very happy frame of mind. I was then, in fact, of the opinion that wholesale killing in kindness aforethought was the one benefaction, and the bringing of children into such a world as this the only crime. "Were I and a lone woman the sole inhabitants of this pestiferous planet," I had been declaiming to myself in righteous indignation, "and there would soon be an end to human existence, or I'd know for what!") And there, to go on with my story, lying full length at the foot of a great tree, was a woman of immense majestic stature. She was reading from a little book and from time to time she laughed. I burned to take her in my arms, but they, even in the dream, I knew to be absurdly small. On a sudden, she turned and seeing my insignificant self, "One of my many lovers," quoth she with a smile. "Your most devoted, Mistress Nature," said I, somewhat taken aback; and then, to change the subject, "The book you seemed to be enjoying so much, may I ask—" The whole forest seemed to go into ripples of laughter as she interrupted: "This old fellow is simply killing; don't you find him so, my friend?" And she held up to scorn a noted name. It was Leo Tolstoi. With that I came to my senses. Here we end where the dream ends; would that life did the same.

Repentance

The man who sinned
Is old and gray,
He sins no more
In his sad decay,
Nor thinks of the life
He spoiled one day,
That day at the old Rotunda.

The man who sinned
Has now no care,
For now as he lolls
In his easy chair
He sings a psalm,
Or breathes a prayer
Ne'er thinks of his youthful blunder.

Ne'er thinks of one,
So old and gray,
Now slowly starving
Over the way.
He doesn't remember
That awful day;
Will God remember, I wonder?

The Saunterer

It was not Harry Holbrook

By reason of an unfortunate confusion of names I was led into a most mischievous error last week that proved very embarrassing to Mr. Harry M. Holbrook. I reported that he had been involved a few weeks ago in an unpleasant dispute with the management of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York. The information came in a letter from New York, the writer of which confounded Mr. Holbrook with some one else. As Mr. Holbrook has not been in New York in several years it is obvious that he did not figure in the episode. He was probably the most surprised man in town when he read the story of the adventure of which he was absolutely ignorant.

Colonel Mazuma Under Cover

Though Chairman Stone of the Republican State Central Committee assured Mr. Cortelyou that California expected no contribution to the Presidential campaign fund from the National Committee, a little money would be thankfully received in the Congressional districts. The Republican Congressional candidates are almost as much in need of financial support as are the Democrats. The shortage of funds in this campaign is felt all over the State, and the apathy that exists is largely due to the economical basis on which the fight is being made. Even Julius Kahn is complaining, and yet he seems to be having a walk-over this time. E. A. Hayes is the only man who is not looking for financial assistance and he is said to be making great headway. The Republican leaders think that Roosevelt's plurality will be so large in California that he will carry with him the Congressional nominees in doubtful districts. They also figure on getting many votes through the voting machines, believing that people unfamiliar with the devices will cast a straight ticket.

The Spectacular Braunhart

Supervisor Sammy Braunhart, a professional reformer, wishes it to be understood that he does not dead-head his way into prize-fight exhibitions. Therefore the announcement from the immaculate statesman that he "gives away" the free passes to the exhibitions presented to him by the promoters of the profitable pastime. The pose is excellent in that it is eloquent of the Braunhart's conception of the distinction between right and wrong, and affords inspection of his moral code. It is pretty generally understood that the free passes given to Supervisors are tokens of esteem inspired by the granting of the permits for the holding of the exhibitions. It is common report that the Supervisors and other shameless officials demand these passes; that they get big bunches of them, and distribute them among their political servitors. Mr. Braunhart, I have been told, is one of the greediest members of the board, and it appears that he differs from his associates only by reason of the fact that he retains not a single pass for himself. As prize-fights bore him there is nothing remarkable in his act of unselfishness. And his failure to join the grand army of dead-heads is hardly to be attributed to moral scruples, for he does not scorn to accept the passes as perquisites of office, or to use them in the fortifying of political friendships.

The Big Stick

In one of his harangues the other night Congressman Livernash took occasion to refer to President Roosevelt and his "big stick." Democratic orators all over the country are making capital out of the President's "big stick." It seems to be the general impression that Roosevelt gave utterance to the sentiment that a big stick should be used by Uncle Sam to intimidate other nations. There is not the slightest foundation for this notion. The President wrote in one of his books: "To boast is bad, and causelessly to insult another is worse. Yet worse than all is to be guilty of boasting, even without insult, and when called to the proof to be unable to make such boasting good. There is a homely old adage which runs:—'Speak softly and carry a big stick; you will go far.' The adage appeals to all sensible people and its misinterpretation is hardly to be commended.

An Old Club Feud

That contretemps of the Phelan dinner has passed into Bohemian Club history, but the questions of ethics growing out of it are still efflorescent. The consensus of opinion among those Bohemians who are skilled in the niceties and punctilios of social intercourse is that Vice-President Hall was not an ex-officio toastmaster of the occasion, as the dinner was given by members, and was not a club function. It was proper for the committee in charge of the affair to select the toastmaster, and Mr. William Greer Harrison, I am told, was the choice. But Raphael Weill, a member of the committee, though in the minority, presumed to change the program at the last minute. He shifted the cards. Mr. Harrison did not retire on making the discovery, but took the place assigned to him, and was about to seat himself when Mr. Weill rushed over and took him to task for having marshaled the guests and escorted Mr. Phelan into the dining room. It was then that Mr. Harrison, feeling that he had been rudely affronted, withdrew. Such is the version of the affair gathered in the aftermath, and along with it is recounted the story of an old club feud that had its origin in a dinner given at Marchand's some years ago. Suffice it that the relations between Mr. Harrison and Mr. Weill have been strained ever since the former questioned the propriety of the dry-goods merchant's conduct on that other memorable occasion.

It was considered somewhat significant that on the evening following the unfortunate misunderstanding, Mr.

Phelan gave a dinner to Architect Burnham, and that Mr. Harrison occupied the seat of honor on his right. It is believed that Mr. Phelan's purpose was to indicate his sympathy for Mr. Harrison and, at the same time, vindicate his conduct of the preceding evening. At the Burnham dinner the old familiar complaint against the knocker who is believed to be indigenous to the soil of San Francisco was voiced, and Willis Polk made a hit with a bon mot. He said that it was a well known fact that whenever a San Franciscan applied for admittance to Paradise, and divulged the name of the city whence he came, St. Peter admonished him to enter without knocking.

Roncovieri's Pet Scheme

The toughest of tough old boards during the pre-charter days was never guilty of such raw work as the present Schmitz-Ruef-Roncovieri Board of Education is now engaged in. During the past week the public school teachers have been furnished with copies of Roncovieri's proposed amendments to the charter, and have been instructed to place them in corner groceries and other places where the necessary signatures could be obtained in order that they may be submitted to the people at a general election. High school boys have been going round the streets begging citizens to affix their signatures to a paper purporting to be a petition for the establishment of separate schools for Chinese and Japanese,—thus obtaining signatures under false pretenses. It is safe to say that few of the signers have taken the time or the trouble to read the two pages of closely printed matter containing the proposed amendments, and are perhaps not aware that the meat of the matter is not reached before Section III. This section is vicious in the extreme. By its provisions the Board of Education is entirely liberated from any and all restraint by the Supervisors in the raising and spending of funds. The Board makes up its own budget, and the Supervisors, being unable to object or even to alter an item, are to be compelled to levy a special tax to make up the sum demanded. Furthermore, the School Directors can compel the Supervisors to levy each year a building tax of not more than ten cents on one hundred dollars, which fund shall be under the exclusive control of the School Board. Section II. takes away from the teachers the privilege of going down to the treasury to collect their own salaries. It provides that the school principals shall collect the money due to the teachers and janitors under them, less deductions for absence, tardiness and "other causes" (mark the possibilities for graft that lurk in other causes), and shall pay over to said employes within twenty-four hours, the sum to which they are entitled. The principals are not under bonds and the responsibility of the city would cease when the money was paid over and receipted for. It is safe to assert that under a reign of graft but few full salaries would be paid. It is generally understood that school employes who neglect or refuse to work for the success of President Roncovieri's proposed charter amendments are to be blacklisted, and fear of the Board's displeasure is driving many teachers into activity, or a show of it.

Backing Mizner's Ponies

Some very fast young bloods from this city are making merry in New York and contributing to the gayety of the tenderloin. Conspicuous among them is Ollie Tobin, who is still well supplied with the coin of the realm. One of the Mizners—Wilson of that ilk—is always on hand to discourage symptoms of nostalgia. I am informed that Mizner is cutting a wide swath as a horse owner, and that with true Californian loyalty young Mr. Tobin backs them liberally whenever they go to the barrier. It is said that if Mizner can keep his horses from going lame it will not be long before Ollie goes broke.

The Hagers are Bored

Here is a bit of information that should prove an incentive to philosophical reflection: Ethyl Hager has made up her mind to withdraw from the social whirl. She has been surfeited with the mild dissipation, mechanical gaieties and monotonous diversions of the smart set. In other words, the ebullient belle is bored. The popular heiress who for years has been one of the most active spirits in the fashionable herd, and to whom society was indebted for the little effervescence that saved many of its functions from insipidity, has reached the conclusion that the life of a social butterfly is hardly worth while. Perhaps she feels that the infusion of new blood, instead of quickening the fashionable pulse, has superinduced torpidity of the liver. The whirl is surely tamer than it used to be and even the compelling individuality of a Hager is no longer appreciated. Both Miss Alice and Miss Ethyl have been going out less and less every year, and of late they have been cutting out dances altogether. Once they were the life of Greenway's and other swell dances, but only special attractions will lure them hereafter. Ethyl Hager surely will be missed.

Great Minds—Crossed Wires

My attention has just been called to the fact that George Hamlin Fitch and Bailey Millard, the leading local literary critics, are agreed in their estimate of the comparative merits of three leading local literary gentlemen whose flight athwart the horizon of up-to-date letters has been termed "meteoric" by their admirers and likened to "a phosphorescent exhalation out of the decaying literature of the book swamps," by those who delight to condemn the efforts of young and struggling genius. In his weekly melange Mr. Fitch, perfunctorily reviewing "Prosit," a book full of verse that sings the pleasure of drinking to excess, tells us that "the extracts range from Anacreon and Omar to Tom Moore and Wallace Irwin." Mr. Millard, in his printed thought concerning the volume, says that the "poets represented range all the way from Will Irwin down to Will Shakespeare, and from Anacreon up to Gelett Burgess." This is funny but the laugh seems to be on the critics as sardonic as it is intended to be on the victims. What a jumble up and down the "range" of the "classics"! And presuming that the two great men whose function it is to make and mar the careers of rising young geniuses did not collaborate in this sneer at the expense of our trio of literary rockets, we must be astounded at this added proof of telepathic intercommunication. Mr. Bailey Millard, in his atelier at Larkspur, luring gold from the coffers of yellow journalism, unconsciously absorbed the thought of Mr. George Hamlin Fitch, at that moment concentrating on the sublimely ridiculous incongruity of Anacreon, Tom Moore, Omar Khayyam and Wallace Irwin. In transmission, however, the wires were crossed and Mr. Millard not only reversed the comparison but he substituted the inferior for the superior Irwin and mixed Anacreon with Gelett Burgess. But it is seldom thus in the critical output of Mr. Saintsbury Millard and Mr. Taine Fitch. This was their lighter mood—their most playful humor.

A Pertinent Query

Furthermore, Mr. Millard consoles us with the reflection that if we cannot "claim Homer as one of us, nor Dante either, we can claim John McNaught." It would be hard to decide whether this shaft is directed at the dead poets or the living journalist. Is Mr. Millard grinning at Homer and Dante, or at John McNaught? I wonder how Mr. McNaught would answer this question.

Mr. Fitch's Discovery

In his brief resume of opinion concerning "Prosit" Mr. Fitch declares without any qualification whatever that "one of the best" of the "fine things" contributed by "local men and women" is a "drinking song by Ernest Sylvester Simpson." Now, Mr. Fitch, who in thunder is "Ernest Sylvester Simpson"? Is he another of these literary meteors preparing for a flight athwart the horizon of "local" letters? Has this drinking songster "arrived" or is he only on the way? Construe, good Master Fitch, construe! A town full of clubwomen who are blushing at some of the drinking songs in "Prosit" want to know more of this Ernest Simpson whom you appear to have "discovered"! If the lyric gentleman referred to is none other than my old and talented college chum, plain Ernest Simpson, City Editor of the Chronicle, then why deprive him of the glory of illustrious achievement in the literary world by attributing to him a name that conceals his identity?

Merely a Suggestion

Mr. Millard's inference that the best "local talent" was not called in to provide gayety for "Prosit: a Book of Toasts," and naming Lillian Ferguson, Edward H. Hamilton, Edward F. Cahill and Ashton Stevens as sins of omission, suggests a "companion volume" to "Prosit" to be entitled, "Malescribat: a Book of Roasts," with the literary Peris mentioned by Mr. Millard inside the gate.

Mrs. Martin's Castle

The departure of Mrs. Eleanor Martin just before the opening of St. Brigid's Church Fair occasioned a great deal of comment in the parish. Mrs. Martin is one of the parishioners of that church, and she was expected to lend eclat to the fair and assist Father Cottle in raising some of the money needed to pay off the indebtedness on the sacred edifice in Van Ness avenue now approaching completion. One of the features of the fair is an Irish castle which was to have been the headquarters of the Dowager Martin. It was understood that she would have a booth therein, and stimulate the patronage of her society friends. But she renigged, and went off to St. Louis. And the people of the parish were greatly disappointed. However, I am informed that Mrs. Martin made a very generous donation to the church, and that there were no strings to it such as were reported to have been attached to the one she agreed to make some years ago, when she proposed that Martin dust be interred beneath the altar.

"I hear your husband is fond of sport."

"Yes, he gives duck dinners, and he assures me that they are stag affairs."

The Genius of Mrs. Salisbury

Mrs. Monroe Salisbury has spoken, the edict has gone forth, the Fortnightlies are not to be. Mrs. Salisbury felt that her physical condition was such as to make it imperative for her to put by the sceptre. The responsibility of leadership was too great, and besides there was nothing more for her to achieve. Through her clever management of the Fortnightly dances, in spite of her humble circumstances, she became powerful socially and raised her entire group of relatives to social importance. When you reflect on all that this brilliant tactician accomplished, the successful matches made by her children as a result of the environment created by their distinguished mother, you cannot but marvel at her genius and acclaim her talents for leadership. A woman of vast wealth, such as Mrs. Astor of New York, is deserving of no great credit for compelling recognition of her claims to the title of Queen of the Four Hundred. The force of her wealth was irresistible. She displayed neither tact nor cleverness. Though Mrs. Salisbury was once in affluent circumstances, it was after struggling for years against the storms of adversity, and while bravely bread-winning herself, that she performed the Napoleonic feat of crowning herself Queen of the fashionable herd, a feat that was all the more remarkable when we consider that the scope of her activities was confined to a society of knockers, climbers and snobs. Her success must have been due to the fact that her superior character asserted itself, and that our conglomerate social push realized her innate equipment for leadership. It now remains to be seen whether, by reason of her retirement, those brought to the front by her will slip back into oblivion.

Drawing the Line

With the passing of the Fortnightlies the Assembly dances loom up as the most popular of functions. There were a few people that had the entree to Mrs. Salisbury's functions who were barred by the patronesses of the Assembly, and there were people who were personae gratae to the Assemblies whom Mrs. Salisbury drew the line at. Mrs. Salisbury always made it a rule that no one should be invited to the Fortnightlies who had not first called on her. In a few instances she allowed her friend, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, to invite her friends, and most of the visiting military men who attended the Fortnightlies did so at Mrs. Martin's invitation. There was one well known belle who never attended the Fortnightlies, for she had once given offense to Mrs. Salisbury, and there was a girl who was barred from the Assemblies because several snobs objected to the way in which her father made his money. This year she is on the invitation list. The Assembly patronesses are Mrs. A. H. Voorhies, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. James P. Langhorne, Mrs. W. A. McKittrick, Mrs. W. H. Herrin, Mrs. John D. Spreckels, Mrs. Bowman McCalla, Mrs. Frank Sullivan and Mrs. J. W. McClung. Many were surprised to find Mrs. McClung's name among the patronesses again, as it was rumored that she had given up society for all time.

In the Swim

The social push is jockeying at the barrier, and the starter is about to drop the flag for the winter handicap on the fashionable turf. The first big dinner of the season is that to be given by the Henry Foster Duttons next week at the Bohemian Club in honor of Kathryn Dillon, Gertrude Dutton and their fiancés. Fifty people have been invited. Kathryn Dillon and Lieutenant Winship have been dined every night since their engagement was announced. As both are sturdy young people they have been standing the ordeal well. Shortly after their marriage they will take a tour abroad. A lucky chap, that Winship. Another big event scheduled for next week is the Kohl reception to be given by Mrs. Kohl in honor of Mrs. Frederick Kohl. As all the Four Hundred have been invited there will be a crush. The Kohls are identified with the Oxnard-Irwin-

Winslow set, but are popular in all the social cliques. They are fond of entertaining and the Kohl dinners are famous for the elegance of their appointments. Saturday is the day set for the Kohl reception and on that same day Miss Natalie Coffin and Miss Carol Moore will make their debut. So it will be a strenuous day for society. The following week a series of functions will be pulled off, including the Draper dinner and dance, and the first dance of the perennial Greenway who is now in the East.

The Borels are Coming

Keep your eye on the Borels, the record breakers for grand balls. I am informed that they will return from their country home at Burlingame in the early part of next month, and that they are contemplating giving society another treat at a ball that will be more dazzling than the one that caused Mrs. Peter Martin of Newport to gasp with astonishment. This interesting family sets a fast pace and has won much prestige by past achievements. The latest recruit to the ranks of the debutantes is Miss Eliza Kline, daughter of the George Klines. She is a rosy-cheeked girl, the sister of Mrs. Thomas Jagers (Helen Kline), who, it will be remembered, broke the record by marrying a few weeks after her debut.

The Wilson Program

The Alexander Wilsons, I hear, will entertain at only small dances during the coming season, though their daughter will be one of the first to give a large tea at the St. Francis. I hear that it has not yet been settled whether Miss Bernice is to make her debut. She is very anxious to be one of the winter's buds but her parents and sister consider her too young. If she does not make a formal debut she will be seen at some of the smaller functions now and then.

Kirkpatrick's Stiff Bracer

An occasional correspondent writes me from Manila an amusing story of the whitewashing of Captain Thomas J. Kirkpatrick, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., by a military tribunal. He was sentenced to suffer the loss of "five files," but big brushes and plenty of lime were used at the trial. The defendant was charged with drunkenness and conduct unbecoming an officer. While intoxicated he invaded the residence of H. D. C. Jones, a British banker, in company with Paymaster Irwin of the navy, and because the female members of the family would not come downstairs and entertain them they assaulted two Filipino servants and broke up the furniture. It appears that they thought they were in a brothel and behaved accordingly. The defense was that Captain Kirkpatrick had been the victim of a practical joker. According to his story he had been drinking a little, and feeling the effects of the liquor he asked a friend at the Army and Navy Club what was best to take to counteract the dizziness that he was experiencing. The friend suggested green absinthe. Though Kirkpatrick is a graduate physician he took the prescription of his jocular friend, and swallowed two doses of the elixir of wormwood. He was soon in a playful mood, and then, inviting Paymaster Irwin to accompany him, he invaded the privacy of the banker's home. He swore that he had no recollection of what occurred after the second dose of absinthe. And the officers of the court believed him.

Timid Mrs. Oelrichs

The fate of the Fairmount, now in the hands of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, is awaited with keen interest in business circles. Ever since Willie K. Vanderbilt Jr. threw cold water on the enterprise Mrs. Oelrichs has been worried. She has been fearful of getting into financial straits. Shortly after work on the hotel was started she wanted to call a halt. She did call a meeting of the contractors for the purpose of submitting a proposition by which they might be induced to rescind their contracts. About that time the architects were very much alarmed over the prospect of losing the big commission they had calculated upon. Naturally they hoped that the contractors would demand more money than Mrs. Oelrichs would be willing to pay. And their hopes were realized. All the work contracted for at that time has been finished, and now Mrs. Oelrichs wishes to do some figuring with her local agents before proceeding farther. Such a large sum of money has already been spent on the building that it is not likely to be left unfinished. I have no doubt, however, that Mrs. Oelrichs would gladly dispose of the property at a comparatively low figure. She is a very timid financier, and has great respect for the advice of her Newport friends who regard San Francisco as an overgrown village. The Fairmount was the pet project of Mr. Hermann Oelrichs who has confidence in the enterprise, and who would be willing to risk a fortune in the venture, but Mrs. Oelrichs isn't taking his advice these days.

Tony and the Lord

Tony Drexel and his chum, Lord Herbert Vane Tempest, brother of the Marquis of Londonderry, spent a few days at Del Monte, and enthused over the famous hotel. It was reported in the dailies that Drexel contemplated emulating the example of his friend, William Waldorf Astor, by becoming a British subject, but he has no intention of expatriating himself. He is an ardent American and though he lives abroad his son is being educated at Harvard. His wealth is estimated at eighty millions, and he is enjoying it in royal fashion. He is an enthusiastic yachtsman and owns the largest steam yacht afloat. He sold a yacht a few years ago to King Leopold. He hobnobs with royalty and he recently entertained the German Emperor on his yacht. He is a brother of John R. Drexel of New York whose wife owns the finest collection of pearls in the world.

The Presentation Nuns

The Presentation nuns of this city celebrated their fiftieth anniversary this week. Very few people know that these nuns are absolutely ignorant of what goes on in the world. It is a "close" order, and until recently the nuns belonging to it were not permitted to stir beyond their convent walls. What bits of life they learned came from the lay sisters, who were permitted to go abroad on the necessary purveying jaunts. Lately from Rome came a new rule, that those sisters who desired might venture outside their convent home, but this privilege has not been seized with such avidity as one might suppose. Those sisters who took the vow of eternal privacy no doubt believe their souls' welfare would be endangered were they to depart one whit from their original pledge to God. The younger sisters, less used to discipline, are naturally willing to take a look at the outside world occasionally. I am told that the Mother Superior of the Presentation Convent near North Beach has not been outside the place for thirty years. When she took her vows, the western half of the city was nothing but sand dunes, and to her the story of San Francisco's growth reads like a fairy tale.

Among Those Not Present

Joe Redding was not Edgar Peixotto's best man after all. Mr. Redding found himself detained in California on business and was unable to reach New York in time for the wedding. He sent Mr. Peixotto a fifty-word telegram from the mountains, explaining his absence, which Mr. Peixotto never received. The latter was rushing wildly about New York for a best man at the last minute; but on Mr. Redding's return, after the Peixottos had returned from their wedding trip, he was host at an elaborate theatre and supper party, at Sherry's, at which the bride and groom were the honored guests.

Getting Up-to-Date

The Hotel St. Francis musical season was brilliantly inaugurated by Mme. Fannie Francisca. The management set a belated example of comfort and elegance in receiving the guests of the occasion that ought to be followed at all theatres and places of refined public amusement. As Town Talk has often pointed out, San Francisco with its wealth, beauty and fashion ought not to take its public outings in "rough-house" fashion or as if this glorious city is to be forever content with the makeshifts of an undeveloped civilization. Coming from New York or the European capitals, it is positively funny to see the meagre arrangements made for the comfort of patrons in public resorts. When Town Talk, three years ago, urged feminine theatre patrons to leave wraps and hats in dressing-rooms a writer of social gush in one of the dailies gave voice to a protest that smacked of rank provincialism. She said that such a practice would be dangerous, for maids might try on wraps, and opportunity would be given for copying hats. The warning was amusing. The women of New York have no such fears, and as for having people copy your hats—oh, la, la! if they are worth copying they will be whenever you wear them. And Madame Backwoods should remember that even queens love to set fashions. I have digressed at such length that I almost forgot the concert, which though artistic and entertaining was not half so instructive as the object lesson in up-to-date management. The diva was as charming and sang as brilliantly as on her previous appearances.

To Promote Humor

San Francisco is rapidly becoming as cultured as Boston. Organizations for the encouragement of mental activity among women are becoming more numerous every year. One of the latest—the Cap and Bells Society—is devoted to the cultivation of the sense of humor as well as to the development of literary sense. Mrs. Buckingham, the president, was formerly of the Papyrus Club which, having been enlivened with several warm controversies, was playfully dubbed by a wag "The Scrappers." It was owing to the lively tilts that the club split, or rather that Mrs. Buckingham and her most intimate friends withdrew.

She Dotes on Antiques

Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels has become one of the most ardent of antique collectors, and during her recent trip abroad the purveyors of historic junk and artistic curios were generously patronized by her. She made many purchases and brought handsome presents to her friends and numerous relatives. She is the proud possessor of a choice collection of bric-a-brac which she will use in the further adornment of her big wooden house in Pacific avenue.

The Literary Joliffes

Mrs. Spreckels's three sisters, Gertrude, Minnie and Frances, have developed a great fondness for literature. Miss Gertrude is said to have written several short stories that have merit. Miss Minnie has become a veritable bookworm, and has almost deserted society for literary research.

Miss Frances, who discovered, after years of perseverance on the stage, that managers are slow to discover dramatic temperament, has turned dramatic critic. I have often wondered that with all her social pull she did not make greater strides in the profession; it would have been so easy for Mr. Rudolph Spreckels to have starred her. She has become a great student of the drama and has joined the Bulletin staff of critics. In her criticism of "Ajax" the other day she naively exploited her familiarity with Academic criticism of the Greek drama.

"There is a great deal of literary merit to his play."
"Then of course you consider it unfit for production."

Her Father's Gift

Among Charlotte Russell's wedding presents a magnificent set of pearls is probably the most prized by the bride-elect of "Clem" Tobin. It is not the intrinsic value of the gift that makes it prized by Miss Russell, so much as the fact that it is the gift of her father, Captain Russell. The pearls are of fine size, and are beautifully mounted, the settings being of rare workmanship and design. Miss Russell, by the way, inherited her good looks from her father, who is one of the handsomest officers in the steamboat service.

He—Shall I order a pint of wine?
She—Not if you expect to drink with me.

An Exceptional Official

In these piping times of graft it is refreshing to learn that there is one official in the City Hall who is willing to render more than the service he is paid for by the taxpayers. I refer to County Clerk Greif who, it appears from disclosures made before the Supervisors' Finance Committee, has devoted much of his time to the task of bringing up to date the work of his shameless predecessor. He found the records of the Probate and other departments fully a year behind, and without extra assistance, but by working overtime, succeeded in catching up. Mr. Greif is a zealous public servant, deserving of commendation.

The Turn in Banker Alvord's Life

By what curious roads most of us poor pilgrims of life reach our Mecca! I could not help ruminating on the text the other day when I saw William Alvord, head of the California Bank, led gently into court by an apologizing deputy sheriff to explain why he should not take up the burden of his citizenship and do common jury duty. He explained to the Judge that he was suffering from a severe cold. The sans culottes are apt to grin at this apparently flimsy attempt to dodge court service, but anyone who knows the florid and big-bodied capitalist could tell at a glance that his health was suffering. The judge evidently thought so, too, for he excused him. I looked at the banker as he walked slowly from the courtroom, and ruminated on the anecdotes I had heard of his youth. He was a weakly young fellow, and several doctors took turns at trying to transform the sickly sapling into a healthy oak. But all to no avail and young Alvord and his relatives began to lose hope that he would ever pull through and reach man's estate. At last came along a plain, easy-going Aesculapian who had picked up a deal of hard-headed, common sense among the multitude. "The lad's all right, for he has the basis of a sound constitution if it's forced to come to the front and do its duty. Give him plenty of whisky and milk, and don't spare the whisky—good whisky." And on gentle toddies young Alvord's health began to mend; he broadened out and laid a physical foundation that made him one of the commanding figures in the city, and the anemic microbe that was wasting his youth was completely knocked out. And by this curious road did young Alvord reach health and his financial mecca.

"His wife refuses to speak to him when he's drunk."
"Is that why he cultivates a perpetual jag?"

Will Take an Auto Trip

The marriage of Helen Pettigrew and William Lemon will take place on November tenth. Miss Pettigrew has selected her most intimate friend, Alice Sullivan, as her maid of honor. Her uncle, Henry Callahan, with whom Helen is a special favorite, will give her away, and her brother, Percy, will be Mr. Lemon's best man. The honeymoon trip will be novel and decidedly after the latest pattern in wedding journeys. They will take an automobile journey, the itinerary of the trip being a secret except to themselves. After touring for a few weeks they will return to town and settle themselves for the winter in their own home in Jackson street. Mr. Lemon is, I hear, an expert chauffeur and auto mechanic, so if there are any breakdowns on their wedding journey there will be no necessity of their being obliged to drag the touring car to the nearest town.

Society Amateurs

The De Youngs are to give another vaudeville in town this year for the exploitation of amateur dramatic and musical talent. Mrs. Jack Spreckels, who had a strenuous season at San Rafael last summer, and who is probably the most vivacious young matron in society, is to be the star of the occasion. Mrs. Mark Gerstle, who is to take part, is now trying to organize a dramatic club for the winter to put on some of the serious plays. I hear it predicted that before long the stage fever will lure at least one society woman to the professional stage, so many of them have become assured that they possess real dramatic temperament.

Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase is giving her wind-up house party at "Stag's Leap" before returning to town. This time she is relying upon her own gift for entertaining, her brother, "Addie" Mizner, not being available. It is probable that he will remain in New York all winter.

"Brown says that he is his own worst enemy."
"He must be a gullible chap."

Their Short Honeymoon

Juliet Wilbor Tompkins's long stay in California is puzzling her friends. She left New York a month after her marriage with Emery Pottle, and seems to be in no hurry to return. Now her friends are recalling the fact that before marriage her love affair was not a continuous performance. Her engagement with Mr. Pottle was broken and renewed. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pottle are indefatigable, and they are among the most prolific of short-story writers. Mr. Pottle is still editor of the Criterion, but Mrs. Pottle is doing no editorial work at present.

Failed to Bag the Bull

The duck hunters were relating their experiences coming up from Mt. Eden, last Saturday, on the opening day of the season. They were all in merry mood although only two of the bunch had shot the "limit." The empty bags evened up matters by digging up all the "hot shot" yarns they could muster on the full bags. And among those thus peppered was John Stack. Stack had been plodding his way across the Mt. Eden marshlands, making a short cut to catch the train at the station. The way led him across a field in which were confined a bull and several cows. Stack payed no attention to the animals but heaved his game and gun case to an easier position on his shoulder as he jumped unconcernedly from the fence and trudged along. Very soon there came a challenging bellow and when Stack looked around to see the cause, lo and behold, the bull was making toward him with lowered head. Fortunately there was a great rock in the field and dropping his game Stack made toward it and clambered up to a point of safety. He got there just in time to see the bull horning the base of the rock in his impotent rage. Stack saw his early train go by with still no chance of release and he began to call that bull all sorts of unkind names. Three hours passed by with no prospects of release, for the bull was pawing and fuming below as if whetting his appetite for the victim he felt confident would soon be his. By this time the rage of Stack exceeded that of the bull and he uncased his gun. For thirty minutes he fingered the shells, restrained only by the morals of the good sportsman: he was out after ducks, not bulls, and to stalk a bull at two yards when he wouldn't shoot at a duck, unless it was on the wing, at twenty, seemed like a heinous crime. But at the end of another hour, just as the sun was going down, his sportsman's code, conscience and everything else went up in smokeless, and with flaming eyes he banged straight at the bull. There was an answering bellow and for five minutes each tried to tell the other what he thought of him. In the midst of the fracas along came the farmer and more rage was added to the mix-up. The farmer brandished his fists and made all sorts of threats. Stack loaded his gun with more shells and punctuated the atmosphere with red hot remarks, and the bull brandished his head and replied in his kind. After another hour of raging the three cooled down enough to consider a compromise. The bull was led away. The farmer accepted what Stack offered in payment for the damage to the bull's hide, and Stack, seizing what was left of his game, sprinted for a train that was just looming into view in the darkness.

Whom the gods would destroy they first make grafters.

Bruguiere and His Opera

My playful swat at Emil Bruguiere, some weeks ago, appears to have prompted him to loosen up. I remarked that though he was the most prolific composer of the age and was always on the point of producing an opera, no child of his musical genius had yet come out to defy the critics. I marveled that he should be able to achieve so much newspaper fame for his muse without ever producing a birth certificate to prove that his relations with the goddess of harmony had not been in vain. About ten days later his press-agent announced that the young composer's comic opera, "Baroness Fiddlesticks," was soon to be produced on Broadway. Since then the press-agent has been busy. First he caused a story to be wired out about how Jack Gallatin "called down" a Vanderbilt in a New York bar. Incidentally it was stated that Mr. Gallatin, scion of a once rich family, was to appear in the Bruguiere opera. Then came a sensational story about a Miss Fitzhugh, prima donna of the Bruguiere opera company. Being skeptical, I am wondering whether Miss Fitzhugh, of whom I had never previously heard, was as mythical as some of the numerous Bruguiere operas. However there is some likelihood of the opera being produced at Bruguiere's expense. Theatrical managers are as generous as book publishers when handling the products of the artistic rich.

The O'Connell Libretto

It is to be hoped that Mr. Bruguiere's opera will prove a success. The society gushers of the dailies have touted the young dilettante musician so many years that it would be embarrassing if "Baroness Fiddlesticks" proved meritless. And by the way, I believe that this opera is not one of his latest works. The name is familiar. I think it is the first opera he was ever credited with, the librettist of which was Dan O'Connell, the poet of Bohemia who has been dead many years, a circumstance indicating the length of the period during which Mr. Bruguiere has been grinding out operas in the society columns. The O'Connell-Bruguiere opera has for its theme the trials and tribulations of Count and Countess Festetics during their tour of the world in a yacht. Their experience abounded in comic opera incidents. It will be remembered that the Count was a penniless Austrian who married Miss Haggin. After shining for awhile in society he studied navigation at his wife's expense, bought a yacht and started on the tour of the world with a crew of fresh-water chaps. It was an eventful voyage. Whenever the Count took the sun he made the painful blunder of locating the yacht in the Atlantic instead of the Pacific. As a consequence the sailors became impatient. Entering the harbor of Honolulu he ran the boat on a reef, and then the crew deserted. Later the Countess procured a divorce.

Young Harrison's Ambition

"Our Mary," Mary Crocker Harrison, is achieving more than the regular young society matron's share out of things political in the East. Her husband, Francis Burton Harrison, the son of his mother, has been nominated for Lieutenant Governor of New York on the Democratic ticket. Young Harrison has been helped in more ways than one by his wealthy young wife. She is a cousin of Mrs. J. Sloat Fassett and J. Sloat Fassett is a power in New York politics. The inference is easy. Any way, young Harrison had the best kind of backing for the nomination. He was the slate candidate and captured the plum as easily as if it had been nailed down for him. This is his second attempt to climb the ladder of politics. Two years ago he was nominated for Congress and won after a hard contest. His first bid for prominence was in the Spanish war. He went to the front as a private in Troop A and returned a Captain, promoted for gallantry at Santiago. A good record for a chap only thirty-one years of age, even if he has the strongest kind of literary, political, social and financial backing. In a way he inherits his keenness for a public career: his father was secretary to Jefferson Davis. Win or lose in his forthcoming fight, he is bound to have the hearty co-operation and support of his Californian wife. There is no doubt that if he fails of election this time he will have her aid in the attempt to bag a bigger political prize later on.

Drew a Prize in the Money Mart

Mary Crocker Harrison is an ideal wife for an ambitious politician. She has not the irascible quick temper which makes her brother, Templeton, whoop things when his wishes are frustrated. Jennie Crocker, the younger sister, has a bumptious sense of her personal importance, which time may sandpaper smooth as she is yet extremely young. But to Mary has been given the most equable disposition in the family and it would be hard to find a more loyal and lovable young woman than Mrs. Frances Burton Harrison. A conspicuous example of her loyalty to old friends was exemplified the last time the Harrisons were out here. Mrs. Harrison took Augusta Willey, an old playmate, to Del Monte. Miss Willey is the granddaughter of the former principal and owner of Van Ness Seminary from which so many of our society girls have been graduated. "Gussie" Willey, as she was always called, was the pet and pride of the head master's heart and was born and raised in the seminary. She and Mary Crocker were inseparable as children, and about the time that the Van Ness consolidated with another fashionable school Mary Crocker went East and to Europe for finishing touches while Gussie Willey prepared herself for the bread-and-butter problem, the family finances having suddenly gone to the bow-wows. Mrs. Harrison took a great interest in her less fortunate friend's welfare and on the occasion of her last visit to California insisted that Miss Willey spend her vacation at Del Monte as her guest. Such qualities as Mary Crocker Harrison displays are a valuable political asset for her husband. As a rule a man of social standing who goes into politics finds his wife excess baggage in the game political. She rubs the common herd the wrong way and is sure to rouse the enmity of any of the ordinary politicians' wives with whom she chances to come into contact. But Mrs. Harrison can kiss babies with just the right amount of osculatory fervor and she can small talk with the mothers without showing a taint of condescension in her speech. Frances Burton Harrison drew a prize not usually found in the money marts.

The San Mateo Flower Show

Mrs. A. B. Ford, Mrs. John Johns, Mrs. C. E. Green, Mrs. J. H. Doane and Mrs. I. L. Tibbetts form the committee of arrangements for the San Mateo flower show, which will be held on October twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth. Other active workers for the success of the affair are Mrs. J. O. Lincoln and Mrs. George Ross. The annual show of flowers is always a big event socially as well as artistically in San Mateo, and is conducted by the Women's Auxiliary Civic Club. It interests the whole county, as well it may, since the Civic Club devotes itself to beautifying and improving the neighborhood. All the Blingumites will be in attendance, for they are all flower-lovers. Mrs. Frank Harrison takes as much pride in her flowers when she is in California as she does in her husband's political progress in his State. The Eastons have a beautiful garden, and the gardens of the Tevis and Will Crocker homes are horticultural paradises.

Passing of a Pioneer

William Mandeville Lent, who passed away on Monday, was one of the best-known and active of the pioneers who were active in the upbuilding of San Francisco. Mr. Lent was in his eighty-seventh year, and he came to this city when he was but thirty-one years of age. He was a member of that famous party of California and Oregon pioneers who came West in 1849. It was in April of that year that Mr. Lent arrived here. He organized the commission firm of Grogan & Lent, later Lent, Newell & Co. and Lent, Sherwood & Co. As a result of his energetic effort the Holladay-Flint line of steamers, plying on the Mexican coast, was launched. He furnished funds for the survey of the State of Sonora, was interested in the Comstock mines and also advanced money for the development of Central, Mexican, Savage, Bullion and Yellow Jacket mines. He was a man of simple habits and high ideals. Much of his life was passed in traveling, and he was as well known in New York as here. His wife died some time since, and his eldest son, Will, passed away many years ago. A sister, Miss Catherine Lent, is still living in New York, but his brother died some years back. He was the father of Eugene and George H., and Mrs. Fanny Lent, all of whom are prominent in San Francisco society. The Lents lived for years in the large old-fashioned house at the corner of Polk and Eddy streets of which the distinguishing feature is an expansive and beautiful garden.

Her Friends Will Be Bridesmaids

Tom Driscoll's fiancée, Alice Bacon, is, with her mother, visiting Commander and Mrs. Phelps in Piedmont. The marriage is not to be pulled off until January, and is to be solemnized in the quaint old Mission church in Santa Barbara. Miss Bacon, who is an exceedingly pretty girl, and very young, is, I hear, a prime favorite with the exclusive set of Uncle Sam's navy. She has an intimate friend in sweet little Kitty Kautz, daughter of Rear-Admiral Kautz, and the latter will be one of the bridesmaids at the coming wedding. Eleanor Phelps, whom Miss Bacon is now visiting, will be another, and Cornelia Kempff is to be maid of honor, the girls all having played together in their babyhood in the solitudes of Mare Island. After the wedding the young people are to spend a year in foreign travel. Mrs. Henry A. Butters is planning to give a dinner at Alta Vista, in honor of the betrothed couple.

Her Popular Father

The bride-elect's father, Rear-Admiral Bacon, is one of the most popular officers in the navy. It is told that when he was detached from the command of the Marblehead and, having said good-bye to his comrades, entered the gig that was to take him ashore he found it manned by a crew of his fellow officers, Lieutenant Daniel W. Wurtsbaugh pulling stroke oar.

Black Sheep in the Service

It has been a long time since a commissioned officer of the Marine Corps has been haled before the authorities on charges of financial irregularity; and the latest one, Lieutenant George H. Mather, has the distinction of being the accused in the only two cases of recent years. It was only a year or so ago that he found himself before a court-martial in the Philippines on the same charges that confront him now, and the light sentence given him then appears to have emboldened him to the point of recklessness. Like the Army, the Marine Corps, at the close of the Spanish war, took a lot of questionable material into its commissioned force, and has been suffering ever since from the resulting evils of too hasty appointments. The Army is energetically weeding out its black sheep, and it might be well for the Marine Corps to do the same thing. There are other Mathers in the corps whose places might be vacated with benefit. Political influence, however, has done more to retard the weeding out in the Marine Corps than in the Army. Fortunately for the Navy, it was spared the influx of a horde of "mustangs" at the close of the war.

No Occasion to Deplore

Army officers are constantly bemoaning the fact, emphasized in time of peace, that few soldiers whose terms of enlistment expire care to re-enlist. One enlistment seems to be about all the majority of them care for, with the result that there is a constant flow of discharged soldiers into civil life, and a corresponding activity on the part of recruiting officers to get new men to replace them. I fail to see that the situation is a cause for much mourning. If the same men re-enlisted over and over again, the dissemination of military knowledge throughout the country at large would be retarded. The more men we have in the country, no matter in what occupation, who have had a military training, especially in active service against an enemy, the better it is for the country; and the more men who are sent back into civil life, the more men there must be to replace them and get similar training. Two or three years with the colors will make a seasoned soldier, and, with a steady current of these back into civil life, with an equal current of raw recruits going into the army to

The Man Behind the Gun

The ward-rooms of our men-of-war are ringing with admiration for the splendid work done with the eight-inch guns of the flagship New York's after turret, commanded by Lieutenant Clarence C. Kempff, during the recent target practice in Magdalena Bay. Kempff's guns broke the record of the world's navies for weapons of their calibre, the best string being that of Coxswain A. W. Gay, who pointed the gun that made four hits out of four shots, in a few seconds over a minute, fired at a twelve-foot target at a range of over a mile, with the ship at about ten knots' speed. That was certainly shooting, especially when the size of the guns and the fact that those of the New York are of old pattern are considered. Lieutenant Kempff is a son of Rear-Admiral Louis Kempff, a resident of California. There are many officers in the navy whose fathers and other ancestors were officers before them, and, with rare exceptions, they are strikingly efficient. I need mention only "Tommy" Phelps, "Dick" Wainwright, "Tom" Stevens, M. R. S. McKenzie, Raymond Rodgers, "Mack" Ridgers, "Tommy" Rodgers, "Billy" Truxtun, "Cam" Winslow, "Reggie" Nicholson, W. R. Gherardi, R. R. Belknap and Kempff, to show what good material the service has obtained from its own people. Many years ago, appointments were regularly made of "sons of officers," but an idea got into some people's heads that this practice would create a military caste, and the practice was abolished, sons of officers now having to take their chance with sons of civilians in getting appointed to Annapolis. As few naval officers, however, have any fixed abodes until late in life, their sons were thus generally left out in the cold, until the recent practice was established of giving officers' sons the preference in appointments "at large."

The Newspaper Artists

The things that went off like hot-cakes at the exhibition of the Newspaper Artists' League, that closed last Saturday night, were the caricatures. Sold signs decorated nearly every one of the caricatures, the purchasers being the subjects caricatured. Abe Ruef, Sam Shortridge, George Hatton, Tiley L. Ford, the Mayor, C. H. Markham, Emil Pohli, E. I. Wolfe, E. A. Hayes, Livingston Jenks and Leon Sloss were among those whose sense of humor moved them to approve to the extent of purchase of their portraits showing them in characteristic attitudes. E. I. Wolfe also bought the beautiful sketch in colors by Nahl, "Fishing at Night." Young Nahl, by the way, has certainly inherited a big share of his late father's talent. He is doing things for the Examiner that are artistic as well as clever, and by and by he is sure to do something better that will place him in the front rank of Californian artists. Langguth of the Chronicle always seems to hit the popular fancy with his sketches, and has good luck in parting with them for fair prices. Last year he sold his few exhibits for one hundred and fifty dollars. Laura Foster of the Bulletin shows the strength of a man in her sketches. One of hers this year that caused considerable comment was the figure of a girl, a strange sad face full of character, which she titled "Volga." The best thing shown by Cahill of the Call, that wonderful young artist who draws with his left hand, was the portrait of Joaquin Miller, sketched from life. I did not care so much for those works of Cahill's that are drawn after the Gibson model. He is far better when he draws in his own original way. Several of the other artists also show this leaning toward the Gibson school, which is a weakness of their work. Since Gibson picture copying was made a feature of the course of drawing at the high schools, every embryonic artist can copy Gibsons that are as good as the originals, except for the especial touch that only Gibson himself can give. Haig Patigian, though he has become a sculptor, has not wholly given up his newspaper art work. Of his twenty-one sketches in the exhibition quite a number were sold. I have not sufficient space to dilate on each of the artists' work, but as a whole it was a remarkably fine showing of what our newspaper artists are capable of doing.

Theodore Wores is showing an exhibition of his Spanish sketches at Claxton's, where Mrs. Mary Mott Smith Bird is also showing her latest designs in artistic jewelry. Wores stayed a long time in Spain, and his Grenada pictures are well worth seeing.

A Rabbi's Mot

Rev. Dr. Bernard M. Kaplan, the new Rabbi of the Bush street temple, is a wit, and he dearly loves his little joke. The other day some friends called on his family and tea was served in the regulation small afternoon cups. When one of the tiny cups was passed to the Rabbi he said: "I should prefer a cup of tea as usual." "This, my dear, is tea," said Mrs. Kaplan. "No," said the Rabbi, "this is formalitea; I prefer my every-day cup."

Brastow-Henrici

The marriage of Miss Wanda Brastow and Ralph Henrici surprised all but their intimate friends. Those who had fancied there might possibly exist an engagement had no idea the marriage would occur so soon. Mr. Henrici is a brother of Edith Henrici of the Bulletin staff and of Ilse Henrici, who married Lieutenant Andrew a year or so ago. The bride is a daughter of S. D. Brastow, one of the "old" members of the Bohemian Club. Both Wanda and her sister Virginia are very clever and belong to the literary set.

The Majestic, which always has a gala air owing to the lightness and brightness of its interior decorations, was in more than usually festive array on Monday night, when the Outdoor League held its benefit. The ladies of the League had worked busily during the day, bringing flowers, ferns and plants to add to the scenic accessories of the auditorium, and the effect was very pleasing. I have no doubt they made a lot of money on the occasion, for the theatre was crowded.

There is hope for Oakland yet. The fact has been proclaimed from the social housetops that Alta Vista, the home of the Henry Butters, is not to be closed and that the autumn nights of full moon are to be made still more gorgeous and spectacular by the dashing through the suburbs—and perhaps even down Broadway itself—of the red English coach, to the brazen strains of the winding horn, made in London, and for the tooting of which a lusty-lunged Britisher was imported. And there are to be hunting breakfasts out at Piedmont. What would Oakland be without the Butters!

Some of the thirsty members of the Athenian Club of Oakland are elated over the success of their scheme for procuring free drinks. When they catch a Democratic tenderfoot they propose a straw vote on the Presidential contest. Two or three Republicans are asked their choice, and in loud tones they exclaim "Roosevelt," each one accentuating the name more stentoriously than his predecessor. Finally the Democrat is called upon, and not to be out-shrieked he announces with all his lung-power, "Parker!" That happens to be the name of the barkeeper of the club, who appears on the scene as though projected through a star-trap, and ingenuously asks the astonished gentleman for his order. The bar receipts have grown wonderfully since the opening of the campaign.

The Allan Chickerings will not winter in San Francisco. They have rented their house and will stay in Oakland with the W. H. Chickerings who are just back from a trip abroad. Added to the family party is Emily Chickering, whose glibness in the use of the French and German languages is the despair of her girl friends. She has been educated abroad and is taking the place of Fraulein Von Rippert of Miss Horton's school, thus giving that hard-working lady an opportunity to take a rest and visit her own beloved Vaterland.

FASHION IN CHAMPAGNE.

Speaking of champagnes, our New York correspondent writes that the predominance of Moët & Chandon White Seal at all fashionable functions at Newport, Saratoga, and other watering places is remarkable. The present vintage appears to have caught the taste of the bon vivant, it being pronounced not too sweet, but medium dry, of an exquisite bouquet, and is said to agree best with a constitution taxed to the utmost by a strenuous society life.

She Rehearses Her Characters

That clever writer of fiction, Mrs. Grace Gorrill Gowing, has found a novel way of putting life into her heroes and heroines. When she finally decides upon the people who are to figure in a book, she gives a dinner out at her parents' place in Piedmont. The guests are told beforehand what character in Mrs. Gowing's books they are to impersonate at the function, and what they must wear, and they then come prepared to act the parts to the life. "It is the strangest sensation," said a girl to me, describing one of these affairs, "to find that you are engaged to a man whom you have never heard mentioned. And there are other strange situations, but they are perfectly dear, not in the least like anything that has ever been done." After dinner is over, the guests adjourn to the library where they read and discuss their own parts. Mrs. Gowing says that this gives her a "working idea of her plot."

The Valentines

Mrs. John Valentine, widow of the late Wells-Fargo magnate, has forsaken Oakland for the time being, and is established in Germantown. She intends to return to California when her son, Dudley, graduates from the Hill school, Pottstown, Pa., and finishes his course at a university. Ethel Valentine meanwhile lingers in Oakland, the guest of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Jack Valentine. She is to be bridesmaid for about half a dozen of the brides-to-be between now and Christmas.

St. Anthony of the Hills

Out in the hills near Joaquin Miller's place there is an eight-sided house. It is one of the queerest places imaginable, and the occupant, a hermit, has not spoken to a woman for nearly half a century. He is a German and a man of letters. Over his windows, set far from the ground, possibly for fear of a female invasion, are carved "Love," "Fear," "Hope," "Satan." Some weeks ago an attempt was made by some daring Oakland girls to get an interview with "the octagon hermit," but the man was not to be trifled with. In language that indicated his distaste for polite society he shouted his disinclination to have any acquaintance, either at long or short range, with the seductive belles of California. "If the hermit can escape the women of Oakland he is a good one," remarked a club man the other day, when the matter was under discussion.

The Hooper Wedding

One of the attractive features of the Hooper wedding, in Alameda, last week, was the arrangement of the bridal party during the ceremony. The Hooper house looks out on the bay and is beautifully situated. Every window shade was up as high as it would go, and the effect was an improvement on the stuffiness of the house electrically lighted in the daytime. During the ceremony, which was performed by the popular Mr. Shaw, the bride and groom stood on a dais in the library, which is three steps above the level of the other rooms. All the guests could see. Later, tables were set throughout the rooms and the bridal table was brought in in halves, tablecloth and all, beautifully decorated and entirely set. When the two semicircles were fitted together, a handsome round table was formed.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I have procured the entire output of the Cedar Knoll Vineyard and Winery, Napa Co., and all the business connected therewith. This I have combined with my largely increasing business with my Dos Mesas Wines, from the Dos Mesas Vineyards and Winery in the Livermore Valley. As the hills around the Livermore Valley are justly celebrated for the production of fancy Sauternes and Clarets, so are the Napa hillsides celebrated for the highest types of Rieslings raised in California.

I have leased the old wine cellars at 319 Montgomery street, with 5,400 feet of floor space, and shall be ready to do business from that place about the first of October. I shall be pleased to show interested persons through this cellar at any time, and you are cordially invited to visit me and to sample my peerless vintages.

in the Greek theatre in Berkeley, promises to spread to the four winds the refusal of the university representatives to compensate her as per contract. Miss Barrows says that she did not come to the university unsolicited, but at the earnest invitation of President Wheeler. And while it is true that the managers of the affair agreed to pay the director of the play seventy-five per cent of the gate receipts, they now say that the illness of Miss Barrow during the last week and her inability to appear in her chosen part, that of Tecmessa, wife of Ajax, absolves them from the agreement. The role was assumed at the last moment by a student, Augustus C. Keane, who, not expecting to have the mantle of genius fall upon his shoulders, was not prepared for the honor and had to read the lines, thus spoiling much of the effect. Under these conditions, William Dallam Armes informed Miss Barrow, when, after the play, she appeared to claim the promised seventy-five per cent of the money taken in, that he was perfectly willing to give her seventy-five per cent of what was left after the expense of putting on the tragedy was paid. This the young woman declined to receive and there is likely to be another tragedy played with the Greek theatre as a setting.

Wants Genius to Be Conventional

Professor Adolph C. Miller of the State University uttered some heterodoxical sentiments in an address before his class in economics, the other day. He was telling his class in economics of his recent visit to the World's Congress in St. Louis. "One thing that attracted my attention," he said, "was the polish of the European scholar. It did not seem to matter that he had gray matter to burn; he found time to make a careful toilette and he thought it worth while to be courteous in speech and manner. Scientists of this country are too apt to think that it is beneath them to look like or act like a gentleman; the grizzly bear is their favorite pattern. It is true that many of our learned men and women are of small calibre, they lack the all-round education. But I am proud to say that in the Congress at St. Louis the scholars from the University of California compared favorably with the great men from abroad. California received high honors at this congress. Not only did she send chairmen of divisions, but after Yale, Harvard and Columbia, the principal speakers were from the State University."

An English Art

There is not a man in the Faculty Club of Berkeley, I am told, who can touch Professor Henry Morse Stephens when it comes to concocting a rarebit. As Charles Mills Gayley remarked apropos of this accomplishment:

"He is the superior of any of the staff when it comes to the practice of English arts."

Professor Henry Wetherbee Henshaw, who has but lately returned from a long visit in Hilo, has received an important appointment at the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, D. C. During his last stay in California, prior to his departure for the East, Professor Henshaw was a guest of Mrs. Henry Wetherbee, of Fruitvale, whose nephew he is.

"San Toy"

We waited a long time for the coming of that dainty Chinese musical comedy, "San Toy," and now that we have heard its delightful melodies and feasted our eyes on its wealth of Oriental color we readily understand its great success in London and New York. Though it took four seasons for it to reach us it came right-side-up-with-care as to scenery and costumes. The color scheme has lost none of its effectiveness. From the stage-manager's critical viewpoint the production is a fine appeal to lovers of the artistic, but in selecting his company Manager John C. Fisher depended too much on the fame of the piece and the popularity of the featured comedian, James T. Powers. I should have preferred to have been introduced to "San Toy" through the medium of the Daly company, which came to the California with the intention of producing it, but which grew discouraged after presenting "The Runaway Girl." Mr. Powers was not a member of that company but in the organization were some women with pleasing voices and some knowledge of the vocal art. Miss Margaret McKinney is the most pretentious of the vocalists with the Fisher company, and though she has grown vivacious she lacks magnetism, and makes no distinct impression. Yet she has the famous Rhoda song that enabled the exquisite Minnie Ashley to captivate a young millionaire to whom she is now married. Miss Ashley played the English maid in the first production of "San Toy" in America and through her ability to grasp the opportunities of the role she rose from obscurity to brilliant musical comedy prominence. Her pretty dancing with the irresistible James T. Powers, and her naivete, accentuated in her rendition of the song about the girl who ran the pagoda in London tower, were the talk of Broadway. I cannot imagine Miss McKinney luring a passionate millionaire to her feet while singing about Rhoda. However, though she does not make Mr. Powers look anxiously to his laurels, she assists nobly in the exploitation of his comic section. And that breezy comedian shows not the faintest signs of staleness in the part he has so long played. He is the most amusing heathen I have ever seen on the stage. George Fortesque, the roly-poly mandarin, looks as though he had been taking some anti-fat concoction since his last visit, but there has been no diminution of his fun-making energies. The important part of San Toy is played by Miss Mina Rudolph, petite and pleasing to the eye. She would be qualified for the role if the composer had not imposed on her certain vocal obligations that must be as painful to her as the attempt at fulfillment is to the audience. But Miss Rudolph is not the only sinner against the vocal proprieties in this company. It is not a pleasant task to discuss them candidly. I should rather meet Manager John C. Fisher, and tell him what I think of certain incompetents who are engaged in supplying the demand for amusement in this country. I do not ascribe the shortcomings of his company to motives of economy, for he has given us a sumptuous production of the famous musical comedy. It has some excellent features, and I know that we should be grateful. It must be pure, sublimated ignorance that is responsible for the casting of people in important roles that they are utterly incapable of filling. I am not captious. I do not petition for high-priced song-birds in road companies. I have encountered much mediocre vocal talent that did not cause my gorge to rise. I am tolerant of the voice that does not split my ear, but voices corroded, voices that come through a sieve, voices that are raucous and shrill, are voices that should be hushed, Mr. Fisher.

Theodore Bonnet.

Comedian Powers

That comedian James Powers has not been seen in San Francisco for several years is evidence of his high standing along Broadway. He is one of the highest priced comedians in the mountry and it is seldom that he wanders afar from the New York rialto. He is best remembered in this city as the original "Rats" of the "Tin Soldier" in which he made a big hit at the old Bush street theatre. But he visited San Francisco some years before that with Willie Edouin's company in a farce-comedy called "Dreams, or Fun in a Photograph Gallery." In that same company was Lillian Russell who had just begun her stage career.

At the Orpheum

An original and pretty phase of the illustrated song is Josephine De Witt's "Fiddle and I" at the Orpheum this week. Miss De Witt has arranged the charming song very cleverly as a vaudeville stunt and sings and plays with excellent technic and command of voice and violin. This arrangement of Miss De Witt's offers a new field for vaudeville artists. There are many songs and recitations that could be converted into picturesque numbers with a little stage business added. Techow and his educated felines are looking fresh and handsome, and are as full of animation as ever, after their season in Paris. The cats are cleverer than some humans.

"The Way of the World"

It was a capital idea of Clyde Fitch, in "The Way of the World" which the Alcazar is showing us for the first time, to make all his characters married men and women at the beginning of the story. This eliminates the bread-and-butter ingenue and the ebullient college lad from the program, and gives a much more interesting tinge to the opening scenes. The plot of "The Way of the World" centres about the wife of the future Governor of New York. She is a woman of such purity of mind that only the barest of facts show her the villainy of a man she has befriended but who betrays her trust in him. Miss Lawrence enacts the role of this trustful woman, Mrs. Croyden, and enters so fully into the spirit of the part that she wins and retains the audience's sympathetic interest throughout the play. The Alcazar has certainly a great acquisition in its new leading woman. What pleases me particularly in Miss Lawrence is her lack of affectation. She walks and talks like a real woman, not a puppet, and never in any way overdoes her emotional scenes. It is possible that after acting with her and Mr. Craig for awhile the other members of the company may acquire, by association, this repose of manner that differentiates the metropolitan stock leading man and woman from the product of the provinces. Mr. Craig has very little to do as the husband, Mr. Croyden, but he does that little gracefully and naturally. Upon Mr. Connors's shoulders falls the burden of the action. He is Neville, the false friend, and as he is used to playing villains he does well by this one. Miss Woodson as Mrs. Lake acts vivaciously. A real live baby is a feature of the cast. One of the most natural scenes is in the first act, when real automobiles chuff-chuff over the stage.

ELEANOR KINSEY,

With the Harvey Comedy Company, at the Orpheum.

Popular "Arizona"

Augustus Thomas's "Arizona" bids fair to exist as a popular favorite even as has his "Alabama." Thomas's chief hold over his auditors lies in his mastery of color. He so clearly obtains the atmosphere of the locale in which he places his characters that he interests from the start, and what is better, succeeds in retaining that interest until the final curtain. By a few adroitly arranged situations he constructs a play that is absorbing from A to Z. This is "Arizona's" third visit to San Francisco, but no one would fancy that it is not a new play to see the audiences at the Grand this week. The house has been packed every night. It was Dustin Farnum who won the women auditors when the play was first given here, at the Columbia, the same Farnum who is now winning laurels as "The Virginian," which has not yet come West. In the Grand production the idol of the audience is Escamillo Fernandez, who has a role in which he fits like a glove, that of Tony the Mexican. His thrilling exit never fails to bring down the house. The women in the cast, though not brilliant actresses, fill their parts successfully, and the men are very good indeed. Frances Justice as Lieutenant Denton acts well, especially in the second act. James Kirkwood as Canby and Carol Arden as Bonita do capital work. The production on the whole is deserving of high praise.

Next Week's Bills

"The Wilderness," the pretty play by Esmond, in which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin appeared a season or so back at the Columbia, will be given at the Alcazar with all the new people in the cast. Also of the company will be the little Sorenson children who were in the Miller production. To follow, October thirty-first, comes the first San Francisco production of "Drusa Wayne" by Franklin Fyles, for years the well known dramatic critic of the New York Sun, who collaborated with Belasco in "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The play is stirring, with a melodramatic flavor, and its incidents are greatly diversified, covering Montana mining camp, Cuban battlefield and fashionable New York drawing-room.

The advance sale for the second and last week of "Arizona" at the Grand, which begins tomorrow matinee, seems to indicate that crowded houses will continue till the end of its run. Jane Corcoran will begin an engagement at this theatre Sunday matinee, October thirtieth, in "Pretty Peggy," of which the New York Herald says: "Nothing of the sort has been produced here as beautifully since the days of Augustin Daly."

"San Toy" could easily crowd the Columbia for a month, but will only have one more week, when will come Isadore Rush in "Glittering Gloria."

The Majestic theatre company has been augmented by its consolidation with Oliver Morosco's original organization which created such a favorable impression with the theatre-going public during its engagement at the California theatre during last May and June. The changes resulting from the combination are noticeable in the cast of next week beginning Monday night, when Harry V. Esmond's comedy "When We Were Twenty-One" will be the attraction. The consolidated organization includes Amelia Gardner, Elsie Esmond, George Woodward, Robert Morris, Frank MacVicar and Harry Mestayer of Oliver Morosco's original company and J. H. Gilmour, Henry Stockbridge, J. D. O'Hara, Joseph Callahan, Eleanor Gordon and Margaret Maclyn of the Majestic theatre company as it stood before the combination went into effect. "When We Were Twenty-One" is an attraction that will enable all the players in the cast to show themselves to advantage.

"Der Rastelbinder" (The Mouse Trap Peddler) continues to draw large audiences at the Tivoli. The next attraction will be the London and New York musical comedy success "The Messenger Boy" in which Teddy Webb will have a character much on the order of the one in which he scored such a hit in "The Toreador."

No stronger story of the Reign of Terror in France exists than that told by Steele Mackaye in his powerful five-act drama "Paul Kaurar" which will be produced at the Central on Monday night with Herschel Mayall in the title role. Henry Shumer will also have a strong character. Scenically the piece will be better staged than any seen at the Central in many months. For the past four weeks the carpenters have been busily at work and no expense will be spared to make it one of the greatest productions of the year.

When the Dumond Parisian Minstrels were at the Orpheum before only three men constituted the little band, but one of these has been dropped and a talented girl, the daughter of the violinist, substituted, and will appear here next week. The Harvey Comedy Company, which includes Charles Rowan, Eleanor Kinsey and George C. Harvey, will be new to this city. William J. Sullivan and Clarice Pasquelena promise a distinct novelty in their comedy song act, entitled "A Newsboy's Appeal." Owley and Randall, comedy jugglers, will also make their first appearance here.

There will be five new acts at the Chutes: Frank Stafford, whistler and mimic, and Marie Stone, soprano, in "A Hunter's Game"; Emile Chevril, comedy trick violinist; Fields and Whalen, the "Bowery Sweethearts"; Mademoiselle Ventura, Parisian danseuse, and the three Forrests, triple horizontal bar performers.

Madame Bavarde will have some specially interesting society chat in next Sunday's Bulletin, and the doings of the smart set, as pictured in the latest European cablegrams, will be fully described. The same number will contain an account of the latest great swindle for eighty million dollars that has set the Paris boulevards agog. It rivals the Humbert case; indeed, the Humberts are indirectly mixed up in it. There are numbers of capital features in the same line. That alluring pencecraftswoman, Dorothy Dix, has an article that is bound to entertain you. As for the children, they will find amusement by the hour in trying to win the capital prizes offered those who solve the puzzles, and who guess what the famous Wogglebug said. Get next Sunday's Bulletin if you want to entertain the household.

A NEW SHOE STORE.

The Brockton Shoe Store, just opened by E. J. Carter and D. J. Keer, of Brockton, N. Y., is the newest thing in metropolitan shoe stores in San Francisco. The Brockton $2.50 shoes are the equal of those twice and thrice that price. They are made in all leathers and styles, welted soles, and every pair guaranteed to wear. The fit is perfect, the style modish to a degree. What is more, the Brockton shoes are comfortable. The store is at 925 Market street, next to Zinkand's, in the Emma Spreckels' building. The goods are sold directly from factory to feet.

In Financial Circles

The usual tranquility prevailing in financial circles gave no sign of the approach of the good-sized shake-up of the market. S. F. Gas & Electric, which had been selling at about $62, declined to $56.1-2 under a strong selling pressure. The reasons therefor have been fully stated in the dailies. The opposition which threatens the Gas & Electric Co. thus far has not passed the stage of talk, no tangible signs of its materializing being perceptible.

The most sensational decline in the history of the Stock and Bond Exchange was made by Alaska Packers' Association. At the corresponding period of last week the quotation stood $127, from which it rapidly lost twenty-five points, closing a trifle stronger at $106. Such breaks are unnatural and greatly detrimental to legitimate business. The company has been paying and earning good dividends for years and the stock has always been considered a safe investment. Their affairs by no means justify a panic of such ferocity. The company carries a large floating Bills Payable Account; estimates vary from four to five millions, but its stock on hand amply covers the indebtedness.

Spring Valley Water showed strength, scoring an advance of 1 1-2 points to $40.

Sugar stocks were inactive, the interest of brokers and dealers being confined to Gas & Electric and Alaska Packers' Association.

Transactions amounted to $332,000, bonds, and 7,190 shares, divided as follows: 3,180 lighting, 900 water, 1,390 miscellaneous, 100 bank and 1,620 sugars.

The Sunday Call magazine tomorrow devotes considerable space to special fiction stories. In addition to the third installment of "The Grafters," there is a breezy, rollicking yarn, "A Fill of Adventure," by Albert Sonnichsen, author of many stirring sea tales. A new serial, "On and Off the Bread Wagon," by Charles Dryden, begins, being chapters from the life of an amateur hobo. There are nearly a dozen clever and entertaining stories, together with one of Kate Thyson Marr's pithy dissertations, "How to be Miserable Though Married." Madge Moore has a page on

Next — "THE WORST WOMAN IN LONDON"

ELIZABETH WOODSON,

The charming and winsome ingenue of the new Alcazar stock company, adopted the histrionic profession under circumstances that border on romance. She is the daughter of John Woodson, president of the Memphis Cotton Exchange, who for years was more prominently identified with this great industry than were any of the Southern cotton speculators. It was when a reverse in fortune came that Miss Woodson, considered the most beautiful type of Southern beauty, adopted the stage as a means of making her independent. From the beginning her success has been most favorable. She combines a most excellent personality, beautiful features and supple girlishness with magnetism that has won only the most favorable notices wherever she has appeared. With Stuart Robson and Jacob Adler, at the Academy of Music in New York, she made a most decided hit. It will be recalled that Miss Woodson replaced Josephine Cohan in "The Governor's Son" as a singing and dancing soubrette for an entire year.

Jeffries the Actor

When Mr. James J. Jeffries made his fistianic debut in this city some years ago his art was as crude as was his art on Monday night, when he made his appearance in the role of Davy Crockett at the Central. Nobody that saw the boiler-maker on his initial appearance in the twenty-four foot ring detected the slightest hint to the talent that he developed within a few years. The critics were impressed with his bulk and his strength, but they had no hesitation in expressing the opinion that he would never develop great skill. In their opinion he lacked both mental and physical ability. But today he is one of the most scientific of the heavyweight boxers. Who shall say that he lacks the artistic temperament essential to notable achievement on the histrionic stage? I thought that I detected more than a hint to it on Monday night. The Central star is an enthusiastic actor. He is worth taking seriously. Of course he is a bad actor. He has had no Billy Delaney of the dramatic school to train him. He has not caught the trick of expressing his emotions emotionally. His heroic uppercuts are monotonous. He is a poor judge of distance in climaxes. His short-arm jabs at the risibles are not effective because he telegraphs his leads. When the heroine feints at him in sentimental mix-ups he side-steps awkwardly. But when he cross-counters the villain he lands effectively, and the gallery tears the roof off. What stirring melodramas could be written around James J. Jeffries! No buzz-saw or locomotive could ever approximate the realism of this powerful giant. It is worth the price of admission to see him carry off the heroine under one arm. All that he needs is a play that calls for muscle, something distinctly in the heavyweight class. In the atmosphere of the stage the requisite temperament will probably develop as it did in the roped arena. Perhaps the great American Othello is now in his incipency.

Sousa's Greatest Achievement

Why do we always go to hear Sousa and his band? Perhaps it is because all the world loves a brass band and especially Sousa's. We have come to look upon him as the most successful bandsman since great old Patsy Gilmore. He is the only man who could make "The Stars and Stripes Forever" heard round the world.

SOUSA,

As he was caricatured by one of the English newspapers. The great composer and bandmaster is now at the Alhambra theatre in this city and with his fine band is winning as much favor as ever. His engagement comes to a close next Sunday night.

MISS ANNA BAUMANN

In the Tivoli opera company is a young girl who is destined for great things in the music world. A palmist, reading Miss Anna Baumann's rosy palm, would be interested at once in her career, the fate line showing that her future contains name and fame. Miss Baumann is musical by inheritance. Her father, Adolf Baumann, was the noted Wagnerian stage manager, who was lost on the ill-fated Elbe in 1895, on his way to New York to stage the Wagner operas at the Metropolitan Opera House. Her mother is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Music in Leipzig, Germany. It can therefore be readily seen that Miss Baumann's easy, graceful stage manner and sweet, musical voice came to her as naturally as water runs down hill. Nothing is quite so potent a factor in the success of a singer or actress as to have been born of parents who are of the stage. It is quite in the ordinary course of matters that the daughter of musical parents, born to and bred in the musical atmosphere, should be also musical. When the musical taste goes hand in hand with talent, that usually means an artistic career for the child. Very few young singers come into the world under such favorable conditions as those surrounding Miss Baumann, who is just now acquiring experience at the Tivoli.

The Open-Air Performance at Mills

No one should miss seeing the beautiful pastoral production of "As You Like It" by the Ben Greet Players at Mills College this afternoon. The woodland stage has been erected under a beautiful cluster of trees and the broad lawn of the campus will be the auditorium. A fine quartet of singers will render the charming music and the entire production will be given as only the famous stage manager Greet can give it. Constance Crawley will be the Rosalind and Ben Greet, Touchstone. The costuming will be particularly elegant and a most enjoyable performance will be given. In the evening in Lissner hall, one of the handsomest auditoriums in the West and one of the finest college buildings of the character in America, "The Merchant of Venice" will be given in Elizabethan style. For those desiring to attend both performances supper will be served by the young ladies of the college at a nominal price. All this is for the benefit of the endowment fund of the splendid institution. Tickets can be secured at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s in this city and Oakland, Lyric hall, Paul Elder's and also at Smith Brothers' in Oakland. The one and seven o'clock broad gauge boats connect with electric cars at Twenty-third avenue, Oakland, direct to the college grounds. Tickets are one dollar and a half for each performance or two dollars and a half for both.

Mrs. Buckingham's Shakespearean Readings

Mrs. W. P. Buckingham, whose talents as a dramatic reader have so often been given to the cause of charity, will make her debut as a public reader at Lyric hall next Tuesday night and Saturday matinee when she will read Shakespeare's tragedy "Macbeth" in costume. Mrs. Buckingham has personally designed each costume and all will be historically correct as well as magnificent. Appropriate music will be rendered between the scenes. Tickets may be secured on Monday and Tuesday at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s and the rest of the week at Lyric hall. The price of seats is one dollar. Among the list of patronesses are Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. John F. Merrill, Mrs. Ira Pierce, Mrs. Cyrus Walker, Mrs. W. P. Morgan, Mrs. Julius C. Reis, Mrs. J. C. Morong, Mrs. Bradford Leavitt, Mrs. Isaac Hecht, Mrs. Ralph C. Harrison, Mrs. B. F. Norris, Mrs. J. Hemphill, Mrs. J. J. Brice, Mrs. M. H. Hecht, Mrs. J. C. Martel, Mrs. Marcus Gerstle, and Mrs. John H. Jewett, besides the presidents of the Century, Browning, Channing, Sorosis, Outdoor League, California, Sketch, Ebell, Forum, Philomath and Cap and Bells clubs. As Mrs. Buckingham has always been an active member and earnest worker in many of these clubs, a crowded house is to be expected at each recital.

ERNEST HOWELL,
At the Central.

Burton Holmes, the famous traveler, has just returned from the British Isles and among the subjects for his next course of "Travelogues" will be "In London," "Round About London" and "Beautiful Ireland." He comes here in January next to Lyric hall.

The Ben Greet Players will return here for one week before going East and will produce the beautiful Miracle Play, "The Star of Bethlehem," adapted and arranged by Professor Charles Mills Gayley of the University of California. The opening performance will be November twenty-eighth for the benefit of the Channing Auxiliary.

When the Sultan Goes to Ispahan

BY RICHARD VALENTINE.

In the boxes the occupants showed their delight in that familiar opera, "Faust," by disregarding it for a demi-heure at a time. In the box where sat Mrs. Gray-Smythe's party the conversation was more than usually punctuated with vivacity. That inimitable wit, "Maddy" Laureston, was regaling his hostess with the latest club mots, and Trix Dewing was carrying on a brisk flirtation with the newest addition to Mrs. Gray-Smythe's list of available lions. Only Mrs. Sidney Brown was silent. She had heard the opera many times, but she loved the music and she hated to lose even a bar of the "Salve Dimora." But the chat around her became so noisy that in despair she gave up the attempt to listen to the music, and for the lack of someone to talk to her she occupied herself in gazing at the audience below.

As with lorgnette upraised she scanned the people in the stalls her eyes caught those of a man sitting in a seat near the stage. He was staring directly at her, and she could not help being drawn by his gaze. Something in the poise of his well-shaped head attracted her critical art-sense, and she found herself wondering where she had seen some one that looked like him. Mrs. Gray-Smythe, in a pause of Maddy's animated talk, turned to look at her young friend, and following the direction of Mrs. Brown's lorgnette she also caught the eye of the man in the stall below.

"Of all things in heaven and earth," she exclaimed, "there is the very man I wanted you to meet, Sibyl," to Mrs. Brown, "and here he is. What corner of the earth, I wonder, did Len Newton drop from."

With the easy air of the social leader whose every action is right, she leaned over the sill of the box and waved her fan at the man. He made an insignificant motion that let her understand that he had seen her, and would meet her later on. He was too well-bred to leave his seat until the act was over, but as soon as the curtain was rung down he came to the box.

That meeting marked an epoch in Mrs. Sidney Brown's life. She was a bride of the preceding season. Her husband was many years older than she, and his business necessitated constant traveling, for he owned many mines and oil wells, and he was his own manager. In his absences he left his young wife to Mrs. Gray-Smythe's chaperonage, and the delights of town society to which she had been a stranger until her marriage. She had been a country girl, brought up on a ranch, and had known nothing at all of the gay world of cities until Sidney Brown married her and established her in a luxurious apartment in town. She had everything now that heart could wish—unlimited credit, a bank account of her own, an automobile, a trap and horses—everything indeed but some one to fuel her consuming passion.

In her girlhood's days on the ranch, she had fed her mind on novels, all kinds of books, and in these she had always read with deepest interest those tales that told of great love stories, women and men who loved deeply, not always wisely, but with the love that counts sacrifice nothing for the beloved object. To Sibyl these men and women were realities, not the creations of the author's imagination. When she married Sidney Brown, her fancy invested him with some of the qualities of the heroes of whom she had read. But a few weeks had disillusioned her. Sidney Brown was a man of affairs. He loved his young wife, but he could not be making love to her all the time. His business absorbed him. He therefore left her to amuse herself week after week, while he was journeying up and down the State. "Be a good girl," he would say when he kissed her good-bye, "have a good time, flirt and amuse yourself. I'll be thinking of what a nice time you are having when I am far away."

He was not in the least jealous of her. He could not imagine his wife caring seriously for any other man than her husband.

And Sibyl did not, until that night at the opera. Len Newton opened to her a new world. When they were introduced, and later sat together in the back of the box, when the others paired off as before, Len whispered to the young wife:

"Do you know what I was thinking when I saw you looking at me below? I felt that it was a meeting of two souls that had known each other many aeons ago."

This sort of jargon was new to Sibyl, though it was then the fad among a certain cult. Len Newton saw that it fascinated her, and found no difficulty in retaining her interest in the subject.

She was not at all shocked at the man's boldness in making such open love to her at their first meeting. It was a part of the program she had learned since she entered the whirl of society in

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Department No. 3. No. 92728.

MAY HARVEY ELY, Plaintiff.
vs.
FRANCIS H. B. ELY, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said County in the office of the Clerk of the said Superior Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to:

FRANCIS H. B. ELY, Defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, upon the ground of Defendant's willful desertion of Plaintiff for the period of more than one year continuously, next immediately preceding the date of the commencement of this action, and also upon the ground of Defendant's failure to provide for Plaintiff the common necessities of life he having the ability so to do, for the period of more than one year continuously next preceding the date of the commencement of this action; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the Complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

AND YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

GIVEN under my hand and the Seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 7th day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and four.

town. An evening without its flirtation was, to quote Trix Dewing, "an evening of unmitigated boredom."

Besides she felt that this was her fate. At last she had met him for whom she had waited all her life.

The next day Len Newton called at her apartment. It was not his last call. He came every day, and sometimes oftener, after that. The automobile was in constant requisition for trips into the country, and the trap for drives to the Park. Len Newton confided to Mrs. Brown that he had a wife, but they were mismated, as she was, and they might as well revel in their little dream of bliss for awhile, as it must end some day.

It ended, and in a sordid, commonplace way that did not harmonize with the tales of grand passions that Mrs. Brown in her romantic girlhood days had fed her mind upon. Mrs. Len Newton had long been looking for evidence upon which she could secure a divorce from her husband. She had another husband in view for herself, but that does not belong to this chapter of the story. She lived in another city, but there are ways and means by which a wife in search of evidence of her husband's peccadilloes may obtain what she seeks.

Mrs. Len Brown took up her morning paper one day and read her name in big type as the co-respondent in a divorce suit brought against Len Newton by his injured wife. As all were people of social prominence, the letters were large, and the names could not be mistaken.

Sibyl Brown sank into a wretched little heap on the floor. She was too miserable to weep. The maid came in and found her thus. The girl tried to cheer up her mistress in her kind-hearted, tactless way, but the effort was futile. A message came from Newton. He was on his way eastward, but wrote that all would be right. "Cheer up," he said, "I'll fix it with her. There'll be no more scandal. There never was any real cause, as both you and I know. Ours was only a little flirtation."

So that was the way he looked at it. A little flirtation, and she had dragged her husband's name in the mire for a thing like that.

There was only one thing for her to do. She would kill herself, and pass out of Sidney Brown's life. Her "grand passion" would thus end with self-sacrifice, as it generally did in the novels she had used as her model.

So she sat down and wrote a piteous little note, the refrain of which was: "Forgive me, but believe me when I tell you, dear, that I was never guilty of more than folly. I never was untrue to you, never. If you had not left me so much alone—"

After she had written the note, her head fell upon her nerveless hands. She was not of the stuff that martyrs are made of, but only a weak, silly little woman. She felt that the only thing for her to do was to kill herself,—but she hated to do it. She began to cry like the merest baby as she thought of herself lying in her coffin, and life still going on without her.

As she wept a strong arm lifted her up, and her husband's kind voice said:

"You are not going to die, now, little girl. Come, and we'll talk it over."

Sidney Brown had returned to town, when he read the despatch in the paper in the mining town not far away, where he had been looking after some of his interests. His first impulse—for he was a man of hot temper—was to kill the man and the woman also. He had speeded home, and there on the desk he had seen the tear-blotted note Sibyl had written. It moved him to compassion. And the weeping woman intensified his softened feeling.

He remembered that he had, as she had written, left her much alone.

Sibyl nestled in the arms held out to her. There was a feeling of protection in those strong arms. She sobbed out the whole story. There was nothing in the tale but, as she had said, folly. Her husband believed her.

"Do you want to marry him?" he asked when she had finished.

"Marry him?" she returned, with an accent of utter loathing, "I despise him from the bottom of my heart."

"Then I will take you away," he said, "back to the ranch, if you wish, and you can stay there until you want to come back."

"I can never come back," she said, "they will never speak to me again."

"They will be glad to speak to you," he answered proudly. "If I forgive, what can the world say? We will make them believe the truth, as I believe it."

And they did, for the world judges more leniently of the woman whose husband stands up for her than of her whose follies are dragged through the divorce court.

The modish woman's stationery is as much a part of her nowadays as her dainty wardrobe. Cooper & Co., 746 Market Street, are showing the newest modes in paper and envelopes, dies and seals.

Loring Club Concert...

The Loring Club offered a good old-fashioned program at its first concert of the twenty-eighth season, many of the choruses being unaccompanied even by the piano. The club was in good voice, and the different numbers were carried off in splendid style. That good old stand-by "The Three Chafers" was given with the real Loring Club finish, and familiar as it was, it had to be repeated. Mendelssohn's "Voyage" was a particularly delightful number. For the first time in the history of the club since Mr. David W. Loring resumed its directorship, he failed to conduct, being confined to his home from the results of an accident. Mr. W. C. Stadtfeld assumed the honors and responsibilities of conductorship, and led with credit to himself and the club. The following is the program in full: "Saint John's Eve," Rheinberger; The Stars in Heaven, Rheinberger; Image of the Rose, Reichardt; The Voyage, Mendelssohn; O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast, Kucken; Night on the Ocean, Brambach; Morning in the Woods, Rheinberger; The Three Chafers, Truhn; Proposal, Osgood; The Lotus Flower, Schumann; Sea Greeting, Arthur W. Thayer. The solos by Messrs. Macurda, Boysen and Kneiss were very effective. The hall was, as usual, packed.

Josef Hofmann had a very large audience to hear him play his farewell last Sunday afternoon at the Tivoli. The audience was a typical matinee one, mostly of the gentle sex, and applause was of the enthusiastic order. Hofmann becomes more popular with San Franciscans every time he plays, and it seems almost impossible for them to get enough of him.

The Kopta Recital

There should be a large audience in Lyric hall tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon, when Wenzel Kopta gives his violin recital. Kopta's playing is a lesson for all violin students, and there will no doubt be a large percentage of ambitious young students in the audience tomorrow. The program will be: Concerto for Violin op. 15, Bazzini; violin solos, "Romance" op. 50 F major, Beethoven, "Gavotte," Becker, "Slavish Dance" from op. 67, Dvorak, "Canzonetta" from the Concerto op. 35, Tschaiakowsky; song, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" (from Samson and Delilah), Saint-Saens; concerto for violin, No. 2, Paganini; songs, "Summer," Chaminade, "Spring," with violin obligato, Weil; violin solo, "Ballade et Polonaise de Concert," Vieuxtemps. Miss Maude Hohmann will be the soprano soloist, and Gyula Ormay the piano accompanist.

The Kopta Quartet

The first of the series of chamber music concerts by the Kopta Quartet will be given in Lyric hall on Sunday afternoon, October thirtieth. Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt will be at the piano. The program for the first concert will be: String Quartet, No. 12, Mozart; string quartets, "Andantino" from op. 1, first time, Svendsen, "Scherzo" op. 6, first time, Corsanego; piano quintet, op. 5 (by request), Sinding.

Madame Fannie Francisca, assisted by Eugene Marcellino as accompanist and piano soloist, gave a song recital last Friday evening in the ball-room at the Hotel St. Francis, which drew a fashionable audience. This was the first of the concerts that are to be given at the St. Francis this season, modeled on the Waldorf-Astoria concerts of New York, under the management of Mr. Bagby. Will Greenbaum will direct the concerts here, and owing to the limited size of the ball-room only four hundred tickets will be sold for each concert. The St. Francis Musical Art Society is the new musical club that planned these affairs. Gadske will be the second offering.

Miss Carrie Sheuerman, who played at a recent "open meeting" of the Adelpian Club of Alameda, made an exceedingly pleasing impression on her cultured audience. Miss Sheuerman is a very young girl, a pupil of Hugo Mansfeldt, and I have before commented on the remarkable qualities of her interpretations. The Adelpian Club contains in its membership some very fine pianists, and they all expressed their delight at Miss Sheuerman's recital. It takes technicians thoroughly to appreciate the difficulties of interpreting certain masterpieces, and praise from these means more than from the lay musician.

All you need for the trip can be obtained at the Tourist Outfitting Co., 227 Montgomery St. Cut this ad. out. It will obtain you ten per cent discount.

A Song Recital

Miss Sannie Kruger will give a song recital at Lyric hall Thursday evening, the twenty-seventh instant. Miss Kruger will sing in five languages, with all of which she is said to be familiar. Although she is an unusually accomplished pianiste, she is not to play except as accompaniste, preferring to devote her program to song. For a long time she has studied the vocal art with Fernando Michelena of this city. A matter of interest connected with Miss Kruger is that she is a relative of the late Oom Paul Kruger. She will close her interesting program with the Boer national anthem. Miss Kruger's plans for the future are, I believe, a season of study in Italy.

Lucchesi's Testimonial

The testimonial concert given to Mr. Richard Lucchesi by the Pianistic Club was a great success. The commodious, artistically arranged rooms of the United Arts and Crafts building were completely filled with an unusually appreciative and enthusiastic audience. The members of the club, Mrs. Lizzie Chamot, Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Miss Sadie A. Wafer, Miss Mabel Vanderhoof and Miss Alice Dunn, were assisted by Miss Christine Labarraque, soprano, Mr. Nathan Landsberger, violinist, and an orchestra of twelve. The program opened with an eight-hand selection for two pianos, "Genoveva," by Schumann, which was played with precision and dash by the club. A very graceful minuet was next played (its first rendition here), and was followed by the inspiring Marche Militaire of Schubert. A most interesting study for violin and piano was played by Mr. Landsberger and Mr. Lucchesi, the "Ciaccona" of Vitali. Mr. Landsberger played the selection with great fervor and was obliged to respond to an encore. The sextet from "Lucia" for left hand alone which Madame Bloomfield Zeisler has made so famous was played skilfully by Miss Sadie Wafer, bringing out the beautiful theme very clearly and with admirable expression. Miss Lizzie Chamot was handicapped by the orchestra, which for some reason only followed her occasionally. She played the big number entirely without notes. The orchestra redeemed itself in the big selection from Verdi's "Don Carlos." Miss Christine Labarraque sang the solo part splendidly. The aria brought out the brilliancy and dramatic quality of her voice. The selection from "The Cid" by Massenet she also sang with great artistic expression. Miss Labarraque leaves for Boston soon to study and last week's concert was something in the nature of a farewell.

Sousa and his band remain at the Alhambra up to and including Sunday night. There will be popular matinees today and Sunday. Programs for the closing concerts are especially attractive and will bring out big houses. Estelle Liebling, the soprano, and Jessie Straus, the violiniste, are winning no end of commendation for their solo work at the various concerts. The band is this season in better form than ever before and is equally effective in the rendition of the great operatic works as in the popular airs and famous marches of Sousa.

A very enjoyable evening of song was given last Thursday, in Berkeley, by Miss Virginia Goodsell of San Francisco. Miss Goodsell possesses a rich soprano voice, and the artistic manner in which she rendered her program completely enraptured her hearers. Especially charming was her rendition of "Regrets," by Delibes, "My mother bids me bind my hair," by Haydn, and "What matter?" by Delibes. Miss Orrie Young assisted her as accompanist.

The choir of the First Congregational church of Oakland will give its eleventh oratorio service Sunday evening, October twenty-third. Upon this occasion the work to be presented will be "The Daughter of Jairus" by Stainer, one of the most popular of the less pretentious oratorio works by English composers. The oratorio will be sung by the chorus choir of sixty voices under the direction of Alexander Stewart, and the following soloists: Mrs. Grace Davis Northrup, soprano, Mrs. Carroll Nicholson, contralto, Mr. Arthur A. Macurda, tenor, Mr. Henry L. Perry, bass, with Miss Virginia de Fremery, organist. In addition to the musical numbers of the oratorio, Mrs. Carroll Nicholson will sing Gounod's "O Divine Redeemer" with violin obligato by Miss Helen Sutphen. Miss de Fremery will play two special organ numbers.

Professor Joseph Beringer has issued invitations for a piano recital to be given by his pupil, Alta Yocom, assisted by Stella Silverstein, dramatic soprano, at Steinway hall on Friday evening, October twenty-eighth.

The Fleming Concert

Little Gertrude Fleming shows great improvement since her last recital. She is certainly a very talented child and possesses the true musical temperament, besides a self-possession that older artists might well envy. I notice a great gain in power and technique, as well as a firmer grasp of the meaning of her composers. There is still a childish tendency to rattle off the quick movements with a total disregard of color and phrasing; but time and training will no doubt remedy this defect. Some of her selections at her concert on Tuesday night were very prettily rendered, notably the Chopin nocturne, the "Traumerei" and Beethoven's "Farewell to the Piano." The Kalkbrenner left hand fugue was quite a tour de force. Miss Fleming's musical gifts are not confined to the piano. She sings like a canary bird, her top notes being remarkably full, strong and clear, and her voice showing no signs of a break. Her solos were all good, particularly the Gounod "Ave Maria." Miss Jeanette Cofer sang an aria and scene from "Der Freischutz" and later Mrs. Beach's "June." Her voice is too throaty to be agreeable. Mr. Charles Foley was too modest at first to let his audience know what a really good tenor he is. Toward the end of his solo he warmed up to his work and did justice to an uncommonly fine voice. His violin solo, a De Beriot air with variations, was a very neat piece of work. The program ended with a four-handed piece, Moszkowski's Spanish Dance, No. 2, by Miss Fleming and her teacher, Rudolph Forster.

Schumann-Heink in Comic Opera

Mme. Schumann-Heink, the greatest contralto in the world, made her comic opera debut in New York recently. The best critics, mindful of her wonderful vocal art and splendid gifts, forbore to speak harshly of her efforts in the new venture, and tenderly and differentially pointed out the rose-bowered return avenue to the grand opera field. The critics of limited vision make no allowance for the bad judgment of the great artiste trying to be commercial, and see only a ludicrous old dame making wild and pitiable attempts to be a queen of giddy opera bouffe. All agree that the opera is mediocre and that it does not give Mme. Schumann-Heink sufficient scope to display her rare vocal accomplishments. One of the best song hits of the piece is "Fellow Your Country's Flag," sung by Wallace Brownlow, her leading man, who played a short engagement at the Tivoli a few months ago. To be a great light opera star requires special talents. Vocal understanding and achievement alone will not suffice to keep one in a fixed orbit. No, Madame, your light would go out as quickly on the musical comedy stage as would that of the gayest butterfly who ever fluffed about in some whirlwind, frothy extravaganza should it enter her pretty head to try to do your own strenuous, magnificent roles.

The program rendered by the pupils of Mrs. Davis-Northrup and Mr. Stewart was given too late in the week to be reviewed in this issue.

—The Music Critic.

Automobile Topics

All over the United States it is beginning to be appreciated that the record of fifty-eight hours and forty-five minutes total elapsed time from Chicago to New York, which was made this month by Bert Holcomb in the thirty to thirty-five horse-power Columbia car, is about the best long distance record ever made and the most valuable one. The new inter city record was made with every delay counted in and the car kept running day and night by the operators relaying one another. The big four-cylinder car was in perfect condition after its Eastward flight against time. The value of this record lies in the fact also that the machine used was a regular stock model. The Columbia car started on its record-breaking trip from Chicago to New York. At two o'clock on a Tuesday morning, South Bend, Ind., was reached, breaking all records to this point; Buffalo was reached at seven-forty a. m. Wednesday, and Binghamton, eight hundred and fifteen miles, at nine o'clock, when over a thousand people had gathered to greet the sturdy car and gallant crew. The run of three hundred and eighty-four miles from Chicago to Cleveland was made in sixteen hours. The total elapsed time for the eleven hundred mile journey was fifty-eight hours and forty-five minutes. The previous record was seventy-three hours and twenty-three minutes, a drop in the record of fourteen hours and thirty-eight minutes.

Duncan McKinnon of Salinas has bought another automobile, the fourth he has purchased since they came into use. The last is a handsome Autocar with ten horse-power engine, with double cylinders of the newest and best type. The body is painted black and the running gear a dark blue. The carriage will accommodate two persons and has a commodious baggage box. Mr. McKinnon is his own chauffeur.

The Autocar runabout has established a name for itself as a vehicle with speed, an abundance of power and wonderful high climbing capabilities. The Edison Electric Light Company of Boston recently purchased eight Autocar runabouts and these natty little horseless carriages will be used principally for collecting purposes.

Dr. J. Wilson Shiels is having much pleasure with his Autocar runabout. Motoring is nothing new with the doctor, he having previously owned three other makes of cars.

Charles B. Shanks, general sales manager of the Winton Motor Carriage Company at Cleveland, Ohio, spent last week in San Francisco. Mr. Shanks has a great deal to say about the automobile industry for the season of 1905. All the principal factories in the East are being enlarged with the expectation of doing a big business next season. In speaking of the Winton factory, Mr. Shanks said that it is now running day and night, getting out their 1905 machines.

C. F. Montgomery last week purchased an Oldsmobile runabout from the Pioneer Automobile Company. The Pioneer Company shipped to its agents at Stockton during the past week three Oldsmobile runabouts, and also shipped one Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car to Lillie Brothers at Lodi.

W. F. Hunt and party of friends made a trip to San Jose on Sunday last in the Winton Quad. Mr. Hunt expects to do considerable touring around San Jose and vicinity before his return to San Francisco.

Dr. J. K. Warner, of Livermore, last week purchased from the Pioneer Company an Oldsmobile runabout. The doctor has abandoned horses entirely, as he now has two automobiles in use in his daily practice.

R. J. Mier and party of friends made a trip around the bay on Sunday last in Mr. Mier's Winton touring car.

James L. Flood in his twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledo touring car, toured to Los Angeles recently, in his party being Perry Eyre, John W. Twiggs and the chauffeur, Pierre. They made the trip in forty-two hours without any attempt at record breaking. Mr. Flood in an interview says: "We just loafed along, enjoying ourselves." The trip from Santa Barbara to Los Angeles was made in five and a half hours, and Mr. Flood said he was very proud of the way his car behaved. They came by the new Canejo grade, a beautiful way for a motor car, going up the entire grade on their second speed without difficulty, although the car was heavy and carried much weight. "I have heard much about the road in the vicinity of Calabasa being bad," said Mr. Flood, afterward, "but we found it easy going."

The Pope Motor Car Company advises its agents, the Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company, that had it not been for a delay of forty minutes in the Vanderbilt cup race on account of tire trouble, the twenty-four-horse power Pope-Toledo would have won the race easily. Heath's delay on account of tire trouble was very slight. The New York World said: Herbert Lyttle, in his twenty-four-horse power Pope-Toledo, finished third in the Vanderbilt cup race. It had been predicted that this small machine would be the first to drop out. Lyttle met with many tire troubles, losing about forty minutes on account of same. He was compelled to drive many miles on his bare rims. Had he Packard four-cylinder car. This car is the one that made the record run from Los Angeles to San Francisco, W. R. Dinsmore at the wheel, the personal representative of the Packard Co., who had charge of the expedition.

been as fortunate as Heath in losing but a few miles on the whole course, Lytle would surely have contested first place with Heath in his ninety-horse power Panhard. As it was, he was the only other entrant who made the entire journey." The New York Tribune said: "The fine showing of the twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledo car was one of the features of the race. This little twenty-four horse-power machine met with an accident last week, was driven by Herbert Lytle in yesterday's race and came in third. Lytle was unfortunate in having many tire troubles." The New York Telegraph's verdict was: "The twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledo, driven by Herbert Lytle, was improving all the time and was holding its own with Tarte in his ninety-horse-power Panhard, and was running away from Campbell and Wormser in their huge Mercedes of sixty and ninety horse-power. It was the best performance ever made by an American car in a great International contest."

The Pope-Toledo Touring Car Company reports sales of forty horse-power 1905 Pope-Toledos to E. R. Dimond, Rudolph Spreckels and George A. Pope. All of these cars will be fitted with cape cart tops and side entrance tonneaus. Both Mr. Dimond and Mr. Pope have at the present time twenty-four horse-power Pope-Toledos. Mr. Boyer, manager of the company, is much elated over his sale of a Pope-Toledo to Mr. Spreckels, who has just returned from abroad and who, while there, thoroughly investigated all the fine cars of Italian, French, German and English makes.

C. S. Dewey of Chicago has just passed through San Francisco on his way to the Orient and a trip around the world. He has placed his order at the Toledo factory for a forty horse-power Pope-Toledo.

C. J. Stovel made his maiden trip in his new four-cylinder Packard, going to San Jose on October eighteenth. This is a duplicate of the car that made the record run from Los Angeles to San Francisco.

H. B. Larzelere, formerly with the Pacific Motor Car Company, has accepted a position with the Jones-Corbin Company of Philadelphia.

The Pacific Motor Car Company has a full line of Packards in stock now, having just received a carload.

There has been a change in the management of the Mobile Carriage Company. Mr. F. E. Hartigan having been retired as manager and from all connection with said company. The Board of Directors has appointed an executive committee from among its own members, who will give more of their personal time and attention to the affairs of the business than heretofore. This committee will have the general management of the affairs of the company. William J. Harvey is attending to all of the details of the business, having special charge of the garage and livery department.

American cars scored heavily at the hill-climbing contest of the Hertfordshire Automobile Club in England recently, the five White steamers entered capturing first, second, third, fourth and seventh places in competition with twelve gasoline cars of French, English and Belgian make, ranging from six to twenty-four horse-power. Among the big foreign cars was a twenty-horse-power Napier, two twelve-horse-power Wolseleys, and a twenty-four-horse-power Bollee.

C. A. Hawkins, general manager of the White Sewing Machine Company of San Francisco, is on his way home. Mr. Hawkins witnessed the Vanderbilt cup race. In a letter received last week he wrote: "Mr. White got a telegram last night saying that the 'White' had been awarded the grand prize at the St. Louis Exposition." The White steam touring cars still manage to carry off their share of the prizes in the various big automobile race meets throughout the country. At the recent races at Pittsburg a White car entered four events and won three firsts and one second. The race in which the steamer was awarded second was a five-mile open event and went to Barney Oldfield in his big machine by a very close margin.

Frank Daniels is the owner of a White car. While in this city he and his wife enjoyed many a pleasant spin in one of the White Company's touring cars, Mr. Daniels being perfectly at home at the steering wheel of the steamer.

STANDS FOR DURABILITY

The Packard Stock 22 H. P. 4-cylinder touring car made a continuous run of 600 miles from Los Angeles to San Francisco, sustaining the most severe practical test ever given a touring car without need of adjustment to either car or Diamond tires, with which it was equipped. The same car was driven 1000 miles without stopping motor at an average of 33 1-2 miles an hour.

The "Yosemite Legends"

This work, by Bertha H. Smith, with illustrations in color by Florence Lundborg, is a veritable edition de luxe. With appropriate end papers, marginal decorations and cover design, printed on heavy, tinted paper, in large type, with good spacing, and wide margins; mechanically, there is nothing left to be desired. Miss Smith has selected six of the legends of the Yosemite tribe and has related them sympathetically. Her versions correspond very closely with those of Galen Clark, for many years guardian of the valley, and more conversant with the Yosemite and their traditions than anyone else has ever been. Though Mr. Clark gave warning that the legends were probably more or less modified by many repetitions, and embellished in translation, so that they could not be definitely described as purely aboriginal, it is a valuable endorsement of Miss Smith's work that she has selected the same tales and the same versions which appealed to the Father of the Valley as best entitled to preservation. They are: "Yosemite, Large Grizzly Bear;" "Po-ho-no, Spirit of the Evil Wind;" "Hum-moo, The Lost Arrow;" "Py-we-ack, The White Water;" "Tu-tock-ah-nu-lah and Tis-sa-ack," and "Kom-po-pai-ses, Leaping Frog Rocks." There are thirteen full page illustrations and sixty-four pages of text, and accustomed as we have become to the artistic elegance and mechanical perfections of the issues of the Tomoye Press, in this instance the Paul Elder Company has surpassed itself. An exhibition of the originals of Miss Lundborg's illustrations, together with camera studies of Yosemite, by Mr. N. E. Dassonville, will be continued until the end of the current month at 238 Post street. Lovers of beautiful books and pictures, or of the Yosemite Valley, will be equally pleased with a copy of this volume, which will make an appreciated holiday gift to residents of the State, or Eastern friends.

"The First American King"

This work belongs to the "Looking Backward" school of literature and doubtless, if it were the pioneer of its kind, it would attract as much attention as its early predecessors. A chief of the New York detective force and an ex-professor of the Chicago University were put into a state of suspended animation as a joke, the perpetrator intending to restore them to consciousness in twenty-four hours and enjoy a laugh at their expense. Dr. Jacquet was killed on his way home from the cave in which he had exercised his hypnotic powers, and the mysterious disappearance of two well-known men went down into history as an unsolved problem. Seventy-five years later they were discovered and resuscitated, to find that the American Republic was no more, the growth of the trusts, the desire of the moneyed classes for a titled aristocracy and the indifference of the people to corruption in office and the rectifying force of the ballot having worked together towards the establishment of a monarchy, with a court composed of the Baron Gold, the Marquis Marquanna, and the Macquehays, Rockinghams and other descendants of our plutocrats under various titles. Apparently everything was working along smoothly enough, but in reality there was a revolution ripe, and Chief Kearns and Professor Dean awoke just in time to be in the thick of the melee, for there was a powerful element of Reactionists intent on restoring a new and better republic on the ashes of empire. As all of the action is compressed into a few days, the author has been unable to show his visitors from another age anything but a glimpse of the court, but apparently, from that, the world has not had time to change very materially between 1900 and 1975. There are some conversations through which we learn of wars and of the increase of the money power and the concentration of trusts until seven gigantic corporations control all the industries. Society appears to be made up of military men, attaches, unchaperoned maids and emancipated matrons, and gossip, scandal and intrigue flourish as ever. Bridge appears to have followed ping-pong, but baccarat and poker are still to the fore, and it may interest the eternal feminine to learn that chiffon and the Directoire style are yet in vogue, and that the "fetching costume" of short skirts, high boots, and a becoming cap perched jauntily have not yet entirely disappeared. One might have expected some new slang phrases, since the court society is only our own smart set lifted forward three-quarters of a century, but the same old language still does duty. The book might easily be worse. It is interesting, though not absorbing, and as the text upon which the sermon is preached is

Take a Rest

A great many San Francisco people are planning to spend days and weeks during the Fall and Winter at Hotel Del Monte. No other resort in California offers such a combination of attractions—sea bathing, golf, automobiling, bowling, tennis, fishing, and all out-of-door sports. Instead of going from place to place seeking comforts, the wise ones of society spend their time at Del Monte by the sea. Address GEO. P. SNELL, Manager, Del Monte, California.

1 Protest from Fiona

A new book by Fiona Macleod has brought out again the old querying wonder who she is. The London Daily Telegraph recently remarked that there is "no means of identifying her with any one known to commentators" as connected with the Celtic revival, and the following communication from the author is the result:

"Will you permit me to say that as there is no mystery (beyond the privacy I have ever sought to maintain and have a right to ask to be respected) as to the authorship of my forthcoming book, 'The Winged Destiny,' and its predecessors, there is neither necessity nor courtesy in the use of inverted commas when you honor me by quoting my name, nor in the implication that I am other than Yours, very truly, Fiona Macleod."

For some unaccountable reason, ever since this author made her first appearance in the literary field, critics and editors generally have persisted in assuming that she is some one else writing under a nom-de-plume. What difference it would make if this were so is one of the unanswerable questions. A nom-de-plume is supposed to be adopted for the purpose of concealing identity, so that a writer may pursue some other occupation without being subjected to annoyance or interference. When the pen name is bracketed with the real appellation, it would as well be omitted. Many authors have adopted names at first because, doubtful of their success, they have chosen to provide a means to conceal possible failure. Later on, when they come out openly, it is necessary for them to identify themselves. Henry Harland wrote his earlier novels under the name "Sydney Luska." The late Henry Seton Merriman was in actuality Hugh Stowell Scott, but owing to parental objection to a literary career, he was discreetly silent as to his writing at all as long as the elder Scott lived, and once he had the unique experience of having the irate parent, in the course of a discussion of the subject, hand him a copy of one of his own stories, with the remark: "Now, if you could ever hope to write a book like this, it would be another thing altogether." Pierre Loti has quite effaced Lieutenant Viaud of the French navy, and Professor Harry Thurston Peck calls himself Rafford Pyke when he feels particularly captious. The late Andrew C. Wheeler was remarkably successful in marking out a new line of work under the name of J. P. Mowbray, or the initials of J. P. M., and keeping his secret so well that though there was suspicion in some quarters, the identity was not revealed until his death. Charles Egbert Craddock was the name assumed by Mary N. Murfree because she felt convinced that under a masculine name her stories would have a better chance for receiving fair criticism. Clement Shorter, the English critic, makes use of several signatures since he contributes matter to a number of different literary journals, and Samuel Clemens, like Lieutenant Viaud, is better known under his pen name than his own. A generation ago a pen name was like a ball gown, more or less of a necessity, and alliterative floral cognomens had a great vogue especially among the contributors to the poets—or was it the poetess's corner? We had Fanny Fern and Florence Fane and Violet Vane and Lily Laburnum, and every other combination. But it is not the name that makes literature, so whether Fiona Macleod be Fiona Macleod or some one else matters not a jot as long as she continues to give the appreciative the products of her pen.

The Marriage Broker

The marriage broker, called "Nakodo," in "A Japanese Nightingale," is a very interesting character, and evidently a very necessary personage in a Japanese marriage. I remember when "The Children of the Ghetto," Zangwill's play, was given at the Grand a few years ago. A marriage broker figured in the dramatis personae, and created much discussion among those unfamiliar with ancient Hebrew customs. A good many said that they did not believe such a person could exist. I wonder how many have ever read Charles Dickens's delightful sketch of the marriage-broker as he found him in Genoa? He wrote: "Do you know of the marriage-brokers among the Genoese? Sometimes they are women, who are always presenting themselves mysteriously at unexpected times, like their sisterhood in 'The Arabian Nights.' But there are men brokers, shrewd, hard thorough-paced men of business. They keep formal registers of marriageable young gentlemen and marriageable young ladies, and when they find a good match on their books—or rather when one of these gentry does—he goes to the young lady's father, and says: 'Signor, you have a daughter to dispose of?' 'I have,' says the father. 'And you will give her,' says the broker, 'fifty thousand francs?' 'On fair terms,' replies the father. 'Signor,' says the broker, 'I know a gentleman with fifty thousand francs embarked in business, who will take the fifty thousand francs and the clothes.' 'Clothes to what value?' asks the father. 'Clothes to the value of five hundred francs,' says the broker, 'and a gold watch. She must have a gold watch.' 'His terms are too high,' says the father; 'my daughter hasn't got a gold watch.' 'But, signor, she has a cast in her eye,' says the broker, 'and a cast in the eye is cheap at a gold watch.' 'Say clothes worth two hundred and fifty francs,' retorts the father, 'and a silver bracelet. I admit the cast in the eye, and will throw in the bracelet, though it is too much.' 'We couldn't do it, signor,' says the broker, 'under a gold watch. The young gentleman might have done better in his last negotiation, but he stood out for a watch. Besides, signor, as a fair-dealing man, you must make some allowance for the ankles, which,' says the broker, referring to his books, 'are thick. If I did rigid justice to my employer, signor, and hadn't a personal regard for you, I should require one hundred and fifty francs at least for each leg.' On such terms the bargain is discussed and the balance struck, and the young people don't see each other until it is all settled. In short, it's very like the system of our own dear dowagers at home, except that the broker boldly calls himself a marriage-broker, and has his regular percentage on the fortune."

The world is full of musical treasures, but we are not being enriched by these to half the extent we ought to be.—Booth.

Proverbs of the Sea

When you walk, pray once; when you go to sea, pray twice; when you go to be married, pray three times.

He who would learn to pray should go to sea.

Women are ships and must be manned.

All the rivers go to the sea, and it never overruns.

The sea is not soiled because a dog stirs it up.

What comes by larboard goes by starboard.

He that will not sail till he have a fair wind will lose many a voyage.

Unless you have the wind astern, you must know how to navigate.

You cannot sail as you would, but as the wind blows.

In a calm sea every man is a pilot.

To a rotten ship every wind is contrary.

It will not do to have two mainmasts in a ship.

Better lose an anchor than the whole ship.

Any port serves in a gale.

A mariner must have his eyes on the rocks and sands, as well as on the north star.

Strict moral and mental training produces our best men—why should not strict art be required in order to train artists? The principles of true morality and those of pure art taste must be inculcated early in life.—Merz.

The Choice of the Bar

Some lawyers like to have personal representatives on the bench, but the bar as a whole would like to see the judiciary free from the influence of individual practitioners. Every lawyer, it is said, would rather try a case before a judge partial to him than before one absolutely impartial. Human nature dictates a preference for advantage, and few lawyers are advocates of the idealities when the opportunity to avail themselves of judicial sentiment presents itself. A lawyer's love of fair play is most ardent when he fears that it is not to be for him, and though he may not expect a friendly judge to be unfair to his adversary he feels more secure if he is sure that the man on the bench is likely to resolve doubts in his favor. However, the morality of the profession is of finer quality than that of any individual member, and moreover the profession is sensible of the fact that its interests are safeguarded by a judiciary composed of men who are conscientious in the discharge of their duties. Whatever safeguards the interests of the profession, safeguards also the interests of litigants. It is therefore wise for laymen to be guided by the profession in the selection of judges. Those who are convinced of the force of this argument will vote for the reelection of Judges Kerrigan, Seawell, Troutt and Murasky. Those four jurists have won the respect and confidence of the bar, and it is the earnest desire of the profession that they be retained on the bench.

Our Official Paradox

Instead of bewailing the grafting proclivities of Mayor Schmitz's commissioners why not congratulate ourselves that the Administration has not availed itself of all the potentialities of the Charter. Upon reflection it will appear that Mayor Schmitz is a man of remarkable forbearance. His commissioners have not attempted to exploit some of the most fruitful fields of graft that are under their control. Their neglect of their pecuniary interests is astonishing for unquestionably it is not due to squeamishness or regard for public opinion. Neither is it likely that the Mayor has put any restraints on the members of his official household. He is evidently pleased to see them prosper, for he is a kind soul, is the city's executive, and he is true to his friends. So intense is his loyalty that he cheerfully shoulders all the odium cast on his Administration both by his commissioners, and his thrifty pal Abe Ruef. Such loyalty is seldom encountered in these degenerate days. If the Mayor were sharing in the graft he would be deserving of no credit for fidelity to his friends, because it would be a purely selfish devotion. But the Mayor is moved entirely by sentiment. A high sense of gratitude impels him to put money in the purse of Mr. Ruef but not a cent into his own. It is estimated that Ruef's "legal practice" has netted him a quarter of a million since he established his "drag" with the Administration, but Mr. Schmitz has been content to worry along with nothing but his meagre salary and heaps of abuse. If he were a crook and inclined to exercise the vast power with which he is vested in vicious activities, what a fortune he could accumulate! But he is not mercenary. He is merely good to his friends. For their sake he will retire from office repudiated by the community, scorned by all who have been disgusted with the indecencies of the Administration, and yet he will have none of the spoils the accumulation of which he made possible. In all history there is not such another example of loyalty. Men have sacrificed their lives for their friends, and they have also risked their honor, but the peculiar circumstances of this case are unparalleled, for here is a man who actually encourages his friends to heap dishonor on him, who invites opprobrium purely in the interest of his sordid friends, and yet who loves virtue to such an extent that he would not pocket a dishonest penny. The man is a paradox. And yet skeptics are not inclined to regard him as such. They think that there is a partnership between Abe and Eugene, an unholy suggestion, unwarranted by any disclosures that have yet been made. Mayor Schmitz is a man of artistic temperament, and he loathes money. He is a philanthropist, of a most sympathetic character, free from sordid taint.

The Dogs of Newport

When Rome began to assume imperial proportions, the aristocracy of wealth and luxury and pride gave itself up to the relaxation which comes of easy indulgence. The higher life became bestial. In those days no fashionable dinner was considered a success unless the host introduced a series of surprises. Caprice followed caprice, but monkey dinners were unknown. The same craving for the novel prevails in Newport, and it would be interesting to know where it will end. First Mr. Lehr introduced the simian as a guest, and then came Mrs. Lehr with her dog "Mighty Atom," perfumed with violet powder. By depriving the little beast of his doggy odor Mrs. Lehr gave a hint to Mrs. Belmont, who has her pet pug sprayed with the essence of mignonette. And now the Sloanes, the Clarks and the Lovejoys are buying ounces of attar of roses, which is sold by the drop, for their favorite poodles and terriers. If the ladies must have dogs at the table it is perhaps well that they keep the atmosphere free from the canine scent. Even a few monkeys among the guests will not be so objectionable if they are properly deodorized. Indeed we are not quite sure that we would not prefer the society of a simian uncologned to a Harry Lehr, scented for a function.

A Lesson from the Orient

In their war with Russia the Japanese have done more than merely demonstrate their wonderful progress in military tactics. They have almost solved the problem of preventing disease in an army in the field. The best strategists in the Mikado's army are the members of the Medical Corps, who have shown that they are capable of equalizing the armies of the two nations, notwithstanding the fact that Russia has four men to put into the field for every one that Japan can muster. Disease as a factor has been eliminated from Marshal Oyama's calculations. In six weeks of actual hostilities in the Spanish-American campaign the mortality from wounds in our army was two hundred and sixty-eight; from disease, three thousand six hundred and eighty-two. Under the Japanese medical and commissary system the proportions have been nearly reversed. It is the effort of the Japanese to lose no man except from wounds received in battle, and every effort is made to save the wounded. They have an omnipresent medical corps, the officers of which travel with scouting parties and prevent the troops that follow from drinking contaminated water. They lecture the men on hygiene, and they have a rigid quarantine system. The men are carefully fed and scientifically safeguarded against all the ills that soldiers in the field are heir to. No country ever before paid such strict attention to the importance of enforcing sanitary regulations as has been shown by Japan. The Japanese have demonstrated that the efficiency of a medical corps is of greater importance than generalship, for the ordinary percentage of mortality in war is four deaths from disease to one from wounds in battle.

The Heroic Stoessel

Kaiser Wilhelm has been directing his latest appeal to German patriotic pride through the personality of General Carl Stoessel, commandant at Port Arthur, for that spectacular and highly distinguished officer is a native son of the Fatherland and an exemplar of German military science. He is a natural subject of the German Emperor and was formerly an officer in his army. And he is worth boasting about for he is a man whose memory will be perpetuated in marble and bronze. Up to date he is the greatest hero of the war. There is no man on either side having to his credit an achievement so notable as that which has made the name of Stoessel a household word throughout the Czar's dominions and the subject of toasts throughout the German army. Stoessel is a bombastic chap, a picturesque hero, avid for military glory and a lover of the limelight, but he has "made good." He has relieved himself of a great deal of perfervid oratory, but it cannot be said of him that his utterances were clap-trap. Eighteen days after the beginning of hostilities, when Port Arthur seemed not to be in imminent danger, he issued a proclamation to the effect that he would never surrender. Military authorities pronounced the premature proclamation absurd and adjudged Stoessel a braggart. But since then there have been moving incidents by field and flood. In nine months of war his magnificent courage and marvelous genius in defense have saved Russia from overwhelming disaster. He has lived up to the spirit of his proclamation. He has kept fifty thousand of the enemy busy trying to capture Port Arthur, and if he had surrendered those troops would have been withdrawn and used in fighting against Kuropatkin. The latter left St. Petersburg to relieve Stoessel, and Stoessel has been busy protecting Kuropatkin. In the world's history there are few instances of valor equal to that of Stoessel at Port Arthur. Time and again he has been offered terms of surrender, and though he has been in the most desperate straits known to a military commander, under almost constant fire day and night, on short rations, threatened with disease from the infected air wafted over the bodies of the unburied dead in heaps on the hillsides, never once has he faltered. The besiegers have always found him on the alert, he has frequently met them more than half way, and despite his desperate situation he has served notice on them that the next Japanese officer who entered his lines with an offer of terms of surrender would be put to death the moment his purpose became known. His indomitable spirit inspires his troops with tireless energy and commands the admiration of the world.

Give Them Play Space

The newest scheme for the adornment of the city is that of enlisting the co-operation of the school children in planting gardens in their play grounds. There is nothing more attractive than a flower garden and no exercise is more enjoyable than that of digging and planting and weeding and watering. But what the children of our public schools need vastly more than they do school gardens is room in which to stretch their legs and swing their arms. There is not a foot of space to spare for planting in any school yard in this city, and what with sky-scrapers front and rear, and high buildings at each side, there is precious little sunlight to encourage vegetation. Some of the older school buildings, like the Horace Mann and the Columbia, were set back a few feet from the street line, and the space between planted with hardy varieties, but when new positions in the department were netting a fat income to the grafters, new school buildings were called for at a rate far in advance of necessity, and two overflow classes gave an excuse to organize a separate school with principal, janitor and all the other expenses. The Board of Supervisors refused to vote an appropriation to cover demands and the Board of Education thereupon threatened to put up shanties on the rear of the lots. The Supervisors did not weaken and the shanties were erected with a view to exciting public execration. But the public did not execrate. They probably congratulated themselves on saving the taxes and took it all philosophically enough. It was the children who suffered, being herded into cold, ill-lighted and worse ventilated barns and deprived of recreation space. Once the trick was learned, thereafter, when a new building went up, the old one was moved back, and when lots were purchased for school purposes, less concern was manifested for securing yard space. Meanwhile, the unoccupied lots which were appropriated as playgrounds after school and in vacation have been built upon and there is no place left but the street. As the children scarcely have room to walk comfortably now there is nothing to be gained by still further restricting them in order that a few languishing plants may be furnished with a place in which to die. Better organize a crusade against the old, tumbledown wooden rookeries, some of them in constant and continual use for half a century, and see that the little ones have the fresh air and sunshine that they need. Then it will be time enough to demand that they shall plant school gardens.

The Objection To Alger

In discussing children and books, the custodian of the Boston library had occasion to refer to Horatio Alger: "But we don't permit him here." And why not? one would like to inquire. What harm has ever resulted from the reading of Alger's juveniles? The boys, and the girls too, of the last generation, read Alger, Kellogg, Oliver Optic, Captain Mayne Reid and half a score more and were none the worse for them. They graduated from this school of juvenile literature, devoured in their intermediate and grammar school days, and took up Scott, Dickens, Bulwer, Thackeray and their Shakespeare, and were all the better for it. They laid away childish things with their childhood and were ready to go on. Those were the good old times before the advent of pre-digested foods, physical as well as mental. There were no solicitous grannies with a pull on educational officials, to foist milk and water imitations of classics on the compulsory list of supplementary reading. No one kindly put "Robinson Crusoe" through a sieve and mashed the lumps in "Ivanhoe," or sorted "Little Nell." The "Iliad" was not a nursery tale in one syllable nor "Hiawatha" a primer. It was not considered necessary to crowd all knowledge, and least of all, a knowledge of all books into the first years of life, but some provision was made for expansion. The very worst books that found their way to the shelves of school libraries in the days when Horatio Alger was not tabu were the brief histories by John and Jacob Abbott. The spirit in which they were produced was right enough and the language in which they were written less babyish than that of the juvenilized classics of today. The harm they did was in supplanting genuine history, the very same thing which is being accomplished by the "Red Cap Tales," "Dickens' Little Folks," and the thousand others of the same kind. A very large proportion of the adults who thought they were absorbing history when they read the brief biographies prepared by the Abbotts never read anything afterwards, and today they ignore facts which were omitted for obvious reasons from books intended for children, pass over later evidence or other authorities, and plant themselves firmly on the little red volumes which they regard somewhat as they would the testimony of an eye witness as against that of far-removed hearsay. This is precisely the effect which is to be looked for from the juvenilization of literature. The children who are crammed with infant versions, whether they want to read them or not, will acquire a loathing for the books as well as a false impression that they have read what they have barely peeped into. There is no use in railing at the quality of the boom books and best-sellers when the whole school population is being deliberately educated to a taste for dime novels in cloth bindings and rushed through a superficial acquaintance with what they would enjoy if it were left to them to discover for themselves. If boys of from nine to twelve years have minds above Horatio Alger they should be put in the way of reading something better as it is written, not as some fool educator thinks it ought to have been. If they want Alger, why not let them have it? Even a poor book read for pleasure is of more use than the best laboriously gone through under compulsion or a sense of duty. No boy of average intelligence will be satisfied with juvenalia all his life. Some one once explained the popularity of uniformed societies of semi-military organization by saying they attracted all those who were forbidden to play soldier when they were little boys. It is often said that the gayest old flirts are the women who were most prune-and-prismy in their youth. So we may expect the little boys whom pious Boston will not permit to read their Alger now to become the devourers of best sellers in their maturity.

A Sad Truth

The author of a literary lament begins his complaint by saying, "It is a sad truth that publishers say poetry has absolutely no market value." It is an obvious truth, but why particularly sad? There is no market for religious tracts, either, unless for gratuitous distribution. Nobody wants medical circulars or patent medicine almanacs, or ten thousand other printed documents. Nobody wants a last year's hat, or knee breeches or hoop skirts. It is every bit as sad a fact for those who can produce nothing else. Manufacturers who do not watch the market will find themselves with unsalable plaids on hand after fashion decrees stripes, and those who continue to furnish stripes when spots are in vogue and spots when they have been superseded by plain colors will be "up against" sad facts, too, but nobody will write elegies for them. On the contrary, they will be blamed for stupidity and short-sightedness, as they would, in turn, blame others who exhibited as little perspicacity. Literary fashion has changed, whether for better or for worse. Many readers do not want poetry, and not wanting it, they will not buy it. Publishers are not carrying on business as a philanthropic proposition, and they are wise in their generation not to deal with unsalable products. The day may come when fiction will have no market value, and the novelist who keeps on turning the crank of his machine will find himself in no better fix than the poet. There is some sort of an ill-defined notion that to "appreciate poetry" is to have a place among the elect, and with it goes the idea that what some one has described as prose cut in cordwood lengths and piled cap-side outward must be poetry because it looks that way. When any commodity is not marketable there must be one of two reasons for the condition — very likely both. Either the article itself is too far below grade to commend itself to purchasers, or else it is something which has no present use or esthetic value. We cannot have poetry without poets; we do not want Dresden china ornaments in a world of hard work. Besides, when we did have poetry, some genius discovered that it could be transposed into prose, pulled apart, parsed and analyzed and explained. Well, there you are! When we were defenceless little school children we were dragged behind the scenes. We saw what made the wheels go round, and we poked our little meddling fingers in here and there. We made them stop and we hurried them along. We broke the poems into words and we stuck them together again, any old way. We patched pieces of one on to pieces of another, and made whole crazy quilts from scraps, and poetry has no more market value than any other broken toy to the generation which was permitted, encouraged, aye, driven to the work of destruction. Perhaps it would have passed to a natural death by now, but at any rate it is gone — gone as the wild flowers are going, and as interest in all natural objects, animal and vegetable, will depart, done to death by over-zealous friends.

Why Chinese Hate Christians

BY EDWIN H. CLOUGH.

And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away; so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.—Micah, ii:2

The Rev. D. Z. Sheffield is an old man. He has grown gray in the mission service. He came to China in the days when the missionary was honest in his effort to convert four hundred million pagans to the special faith prescribed by the sect of which he was the foreign representative. This was in the days when the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Baptists, the Episcopalians, and the sub orders of these religions were tolerated by the Chinese and even encouraged—in conformity with the principle enunciated by Confucius when asked by his disciple, Tsz-kung, to define philanthropy. "A philanthropic person," said the Master, "desiring for himself a firm footing, is led on to give one to others; desiring for himself an enlightened perception of things, he is led on to help others to be similarly enlightened." Dr. Sheffield assisted in the foundation of the Presbyterian Mission at T'unghow, near Peking, when the missionaries in China were humble, when they deferred to the authorities, when they refrained from interference with the course of justice—before the grafter came grafting in the name of Christ and Him crucified.

Dr. Sheffield grew old in the practice of Christian virtues among a pagan people, and it was hard to break away from his life-long principles in the later days. But he did break away. Evil communication eventually corrupted even this good old man. When the Boxers burned the little chapel of the Presbyterians at T'unghow and destroyed the poor belongings of the missionaries, the spirit of greed and the mammon of covetousness entered into their hearts, and good Dr. Sheffield was tainted by the universal avarice. While Dr. Ament was pursuing his unholy career of blackmail, extortion, and robbery among the terrorized villagers in the country around Peking, Dr. Sheffield appeared before the American Commissioners appointed to fix the awards of indemnity and testified that the Boxers had destroyed a library worth five thousand dollars. Questioned as to the number of books in the library Dr. Sheffield said that there were probably five or six hundred. The Commissioners were shocked. Some of them had known Dr. Sheffield, and all of them had heard that he was an honest, upright missionary—not at all like his colleague, Dr. Ament, and the looting coterie of the Methodist concern in Peking. He was asked what sort of books were in the library, and he said they were all theological works. One of the Commissioners told him that he could buy theological works, second-hand, for a dollar a volume, and he wanted to know why Dr. Sheffield was charging ten dollars a volume for such books. Driven to his last resort the poor old man declared that the increased value of the old books was due to the fact that he had made some marginal annotations in them. Whereupon the Commissioners smiled derisively and awarded him six hundred dollars—the market value of second-hand theological tomes.

I have this incident on the authority of Consul-General J. W. Ragsdale, of Tientsin, one of the Commissioners who made the award.

It was unfortunate, perhaps, for Dr. Sheffield that he could not take his claim before the British Commission. This body was far more liberal in its awards than was the American Commission. It is recorded in the proceedings of the British Commission that they allowed the claim of an English newspaper correspondent for twelve hundred dollars for a manuscript novel upon no further evidence that the manuscript had ever existed than the uncorroborated testimony of the claimant, and without proof of any sort that the novel was worth publishing or that it would have been published if offered in the open market.

It is hard to teach old dogs new tricks, and I am sure that Dr. Sheffield's conscience rebukes him constantly for his attempt to loot an exorbitant amount from the indemnity fund in compensation for the loss of his annotations.

Out of the share of the indemnity awarded to the Presbyterian mission of T'unghow, known to the Chinese as "Mai-gwo-chiao," or "American religion," and sometimes called "the Tewksbury Chiao," (pronounced "jaw") to distinguish it from the "Lowrie Chiao" of Peking, was erected a theological seminary rivaling the splendor of the "Peking University." Associated with Dr. Sheffield in this missionary enterprise is E. G. Tewksbury and the notorious W. S. Ament. In the turmoil and terror that followed the occupation of Peking by the allied troops, the Tewksbury-Sheffield-Ament combination secured possession of large land holdings on both sides of the wall of T'unghow. When they began to build, the missionaries found that the city wall interfered with their purposes. The nearest gate was a long distance from the missionary domain and those living on either side of the wall were compelled to lose much time in going around from one section of the T'unghow vineyard to the other. They demanded of the city authorities that a gate be placed in the wall connecting the outside acreage with the city lots inside. The Chinese refused. They hated the missionaries and were only deterred by the presence of foreign troops from massacring them and again destroying their property. They declared that it was enough to rob the poor people of the city of a million taels with which to build palaces and mansions without seeking to destroy the historic walls of the ancient municipality. If the gate already provided was good enough for the Chinese it was good enough for the Christians. It would be excellent exercise for the missionaries, said the mandarins, and a partial cure for their chronic laziness. The Chinese are endowed with a sarcastic humor peculiarly their own.

The missionaries then defied the law by tearing down the wall between the two sections of their township and the Chinese magistrates appealed to Minister Conger for redress. The Minister has never acted on the appeal and the authorities of T'ungchow are helpless, for, if they should attempt to rebuild their wall the missionaries would probably call out the Legation Guard and drive away the workmen. Even the Americans resident in Peking and the neighborhood are loud in condemnation of the high handed action of Tewksbury and his associates, and some of them, I was informed, had reported the outrage to the American Board of Foreign Missions, but as the mission under its present direction is virtually independent of home control it is not likely that the wall will be restored until the next revolt of the Chinese against missionary aggression and tyranny.

It is actions such as this that have incensed the Chinese against the foreigners in that country. Before the American missionaries came there was peace in the land. The Chinese had been taught by the British that they must not object to the opium traffic; they had been compelled to open their ports to the commerce of the world; they had submitted to the rapacity of the trader and the commercial adventurer of every race; they had learned to meet the invader with his own weapons and were content with the profit of the intercourse. But when the American missionary arrived there was trouble and there has been trouble ever since. And there will be trouble as long as the American missionary is permitted to browbeat the magistrates, to swindle the peasantry, to exploit the country for his personal profit, to sneer at the religions already established in the empire and to conduct himself in his buccaneering, freebooting, and swashbuckling method of spreading the Christian gospel among a people who only ask to be allowed to mind their own business in their own way.

That this estimate of the evil arising from the missionary influence in China is not exaggerated is amply proved by the fact that the longest and most explicit article in the last commercial treaty between the United States and China deals exclusively with the missionary question and expressly prohibits these meddling aliens from interfering with the domestic affairs of the Chinese. If the evil did not exist there would have been no necessity for this effort to compel a remedy.

Middle Age

BY HARRY COWELL.

Youth, from time immemorial, has been likened to spring, the season of romance, of beautiful unrealities, given over by the One God of things as they are to the gods many of things as they ought to be, when the world seems truly, as one has said, "made by the singer for the dreamer." And old age, before it becomes one with winter, has its Indian summer, a second spring, as it were, not infrequently revisited by romance.

But Reality is the lord of middle age, the season of sophistication, when the world seems made by Chance for mediocrity, wherein men make the most of things, accepting like beggars, petty consolations at the hands of Fate, they who had once had pretensions to the place at the right hand of Jupiter, munching with no little satisfaction the scant crumbs fallen from the tables of the gods.

To have come thither at all — that is, to middle age — is, I am thinking, somewhat in the nature of a confession, an owning up to more or less adaptability to the planet we had so scorned, so desired to make over, that it might be a place, if not loveable, at least liveable. Had we been the superfluous godlings of our fond belief, beloved of the greater gods, and we had died long ago; but here we are — a fact to cover us with confusion. Here we are, like others, making the most of it. When we have failed of life's most coveted prizes, love and fame and the like, to fall back upon the so-called comforts of life is sorry comfort; and this is what middle age is forever doing, with many shameful "I thank Thee's." What was once enthusiasm, a gold-red flame leaping heavenward, is now indifference, a handful of gray ashes fallen to earth. The man of forty takes things as he finds them, foregoes fancy, grows fat on the good things of what after all is a very good world; yet ever and anon, she who gave birth to the Muses whispers a word in his ear and thereat he becomes uneasy in his ease, remembering that one of the mad days dead was more than a month of this sanity — yea, more than a month of Sundays, as the saying is.

The man of forty knows well the face of Love, and the face of Death he knows; and through familiarity they have lost for him a little of their beauty and their terror: he is sophisticated. He has seen, it may be, Death, the strong, struggle with Love, the stronger, and overcome him — the victory seemed, at least for the time being, to go to the lesser god; and on the morrow he ate and drank and slept. And in the life of every man, by the time he reaches two score years, are many morrows whereon to eat and drink and sleep is a shameful thing, an acknowledgment of unbelievable bestiality, an insult to the soul. But the man of forty is in love with mere life, has learned how to make concessions gracefully, to yield priceless points to the environment and unblushingly look his neighbor, the young reformer, in the face. Middle Age is pastmaster of compromise. Begging mercy, it bends the knee to Circumstance. "A whole skin and my comforts!" is its cry; and it adds, as though the victory of the Iron-handed had been incomplete: "On these conditions, gladly will I serve thee, great lord of this most practical world!" It thinks to save thus a shred or two of dignity.

Without the least recourse to the sophistry at its command, concession-making Middle Age demonstrates to uncompromising Youth that it too must bend upon occasion — and does — but lacking grace and graciousness; that to live at all is evidence of not living ideally; that the dead are the only possible practical idealists.

Marry young, or make a marriage of convenience. Thus to me the great teacher; and thus I to thee, reader, and to thee. At twenty we are crying: "My love and a cottage!" "My conscience and a crust!" and many the like; but at twice twenty the once significant cries are noise and no more, and noise, to borrow of Ambrose Bierce, is "a stench in the ear."

The future for youth, the present for mid-life and for old age the past. Yes, the present for mid-life, but nevertheless a man is then already beginning to look back; and strange are the things he sees — strange and sad.

A man is a bundle of potentialities tied together by Fate — now altogether at haphazard, and again with more or less care and artistry — and flung here and there upon the face of the globe, this one aimlessly, that with surpassing skill.

There is a homekeeping youth with its ever homely wit, as saith the poet, and there is a home-leaving youth that finds the lure of what lies beyond irresistible; in its blood is the wander lust and a restlessness is in its feet. In many lands it breaks strange bread and has sight of curious customs; doing its duty, or neglecting it, as the case may be, in states of life far other than the one in which it pleased God originally to call it; until finally all bread becomes familiar to it, all customs common; until, in a word, losing itself and its provincialism together, it becomes middle-aged and cosmopolitan, and begins, as I have said, to look back. Now, no matter how markedly, under all climes and circumstances, he has remained himself, nor how much he prides himself upon thus preserving his identity, the cosmopolitan of forty, free from bias, comes from his impartial introspections confessing to great changes wrought in him by the ghostly hand of Chance. He sees the thousand and one men he might have been, had things fallen out otherwise and not thus; he sees this potentiality — this soul seed — called by merest accident into actuality, and then watered and cultivated and come to full flowering; and this actuality, fading for lack of the nourishment thus drawn away from it, at length die down into nothingness. He sees what manner of man he would have been, had he married Mary instead of Jane. And had not that bank broken, Mary would not have jilted him; and that bank would not have broken had not the president become infatuated with a certain strange woman met by chance. He knows himself for a strong character, but that is Jane's handiwork, there's no denying it, and that: humors dormant when he met her now wide awake; others then active now sleeping or dead. He sees his personality change with changes in his spiritual proportions. These things he sees and many others, and seeing a great blindness falls upon his inner eye. The man of forty is a Fatalist. Not Fatalism, however, nor any philosophy, but the foreswearing of all philosophies in favor of physical comfort, is the mark of middle age. Then the commonplaces have a man, body and soul, and the day's work or the day's idleness, has wholly dispossessed the dream.

What I have said of the matter-of-factness of middle age, though true, is not the whole truth: matter-of-factness is the rule. Let's to the exception — here as elsewhere, of no little interest. Protesting youth to the contrary notwithstanding; protesting old age, the romance of exceptional mid-life is the right romance; the romance of maturity, of wide-open eyes, of head as well as heart; the romance of immortal mysteries ever more mysterious in a world ever more wonderful; the romance of love that lasts, of beauty that abides; the romance of flesh refined by sorrow, and redolent of soul. It is a miracle, the enchantment of the disenchanted. The romance of middle age, the exception, is no wind upon the surface of the sea, but a moving of the waters to their depths. Unlike that of youth, it is no mere playing of a pair of Nature's puppets, who has ever her own great end in view. The man of forty who proves the rule for middle age is never a marionette in his love making. But if, in his case, the Mother does not pull her wonted wire in behalf of that pathetic thing, reproduction, none the less is Fate mistress of the doll drama — life — and the Exception's feeling and appearance of freedom are but evidence of her astonishing skill. The power of choice made perfect by culture is the last and highest of human attainments; and yet, let a man capable of realizing the full meaning of his words but boast, saying: "I chose me a wife, and I did well," and you should hear the Sisters chuckle.

The Vicious Star System

BY THEODORE BONNET.

Eastern dramatic critics gleefully announce that the "star" system is on the wane. The "star" system has long been the object of reproach. Critics have railed at it, and for many years they have been predicting its early collapse, but each new season the theatrical firmament became more thickly studded with histrionic luminaries of more or less brilliance. That the system has been dreadfully over-worked and has become responsible for the degeneracy of the dramatic art, the vitiating of public taste, and the spread of mediocrity, is a fact known to all who have been close observers of the evolution of the stage in recent years. American managers have been obsessed with the delusion that American playgoers were partial to stars, whereas the patrons of the theatre were the pliant victims of the humbugging methods of the theatrical magnates. By various arts known to the Barnums of the Syndicate mummers were vested with prestige which they were incapable of winning by the exercise of their own talents. Believing that there was a demand for stars, the magnates created them, and then to insure success they had plays written down to their limitations. Playwrights were called upon not to create character but to dramatize the personality of favored actors and actresses. Actor-proof parts were demanded for stars, and companies were selected strictly with a view to precluding the eclipse of the central figure. With the employment of inferior talent came an endless procession of spineless dramas.

As a consequence of this perverse system the stage is crowded with actors in need of training in the intricate technique of their art, and who have yet to learn to interpret and vitalize great characters and great emotions in a way to render them credible. And we have become familiar with actors and actresses who are monotonous in their scrupulous fidelity to their own individuality, and who prefer to be themselves than to merge their identity in the parts assigned to them. Their versatility, if they have any, is an unknown quantity. Even the greatest of the stars are not permitted to give evidence of the imaginative faculty. Characters are selected to fit them like a glove, and they play themselves with a hungry attention to details. John Drew, a high priced star, reputed an artist, has degenerated into an actor of pleasing personality who shows wonderful skill in adapting the congenial creations of playwrights to the mannerisms of John Drew. His invariable Drewisms have been stereotyped into a polite classic. His hair, walk, gestures, inflections and glances are as unalterable as the spots of the leopard. If he were to join the Alcazar stock and play a new role every week he would become a sure cure for insomnia.

If an actor must forever remain himself, then what a small and mean art the art of acting is; how little it deserves to rank with painting, sculpture, literature and music. The modern star looks and acts always one way, and his popularity will last until his personality bores. He seems to fear that if he ever gets away from himself he is doomed.

I would not be intolerant of the star system if the air were not so full of dramatic meteors shooting from obscurity into oblivion. There are stars fresh every hour. Those of the feminine gender are particularly numerous. In musical comedy they shoot from the chorus into stellar-dom while you wait. This brand of luminary is usually the sweetheart of some manager or some generous New York broker, or some successful librettist. Star-making has been so easy that every manager in the country has tried his hand at it, and fortunes have been spent in booming women who are no more qualified for a stage career than a Japanese pug is for a university professorship. All New York has been laughing at the efforts of Manager Brady to persuade the public to take his wife, Grace George, seriously as a star. He has vowed that he would spend all that he made in the theatrical business in accomplishing his purpose, and it looks as though he is engaged in a rash undertaking. But he is game. His press agent keeps the newspapers bountifully supplied with laudatory notices of Grace George but she is yet to arrive even in the provinces.

If the star system is on the wane it is because the managers have begun to disagnose accurately the malady from which the box-office has been suffering in recent seasons. At the same time the public has grown wise and discriminating to a remarkable degree. The New York managers have been hit hard. There have been a few quasi-triumphs and a few semi-demi-successes, but falling stars have been quite numerous and the managers are beginning to realize that it does not pay to send out an unfledged mummer with big type and a generous angel. After awhile we shall be spared such fiascos as "San Toy" with one comedian and a bevy of chorus girls masquerading as soubrettes and prima donnas. We may even hope to escape the torture of musical comedies in which the legs of fair women move in graceful abundance, while tenors sing through the nose and sopranos shriek through a comb.

I read in an Eastern paper the other day that Lillian Russell was soon to return to legitimate comic opera, but that she had no intention of relying on her reputation for pulchritude. She had resolved to surround herself with competent vocalists. The airy fairy one is wise in her generation. I have taken note of the fact that Mr. Frohman no longer relies on the drawing power of John Drew and that he has given that gentleman the support of an all-star cast including Fanny Brough, the great English actress, Ferdinand Gottschalk, a tried and true artist, and Margaret Dale. He has also surrounded Henry Miller with high salaried people. No doubt Mr. Frohman has come to the conclusion that his stars are expensive luxuries. In order to pay them the salaries commensurate with the prestige he created for them, it became imperative to trench in the salaries of their supporting players, and in time his companies became so top-heavy with mediocrity that they ceased to draw. The stars will probably continue to be featured, but they will not be permitted to absorb all the receipts. They have suffered as well as the managers for they have figured in many failures, and they will have to content themselves with moderate salaries so that competent talent may be employed for their support.

The Voice of Silence

BY MABEL PORTER PITTS

Not things we say but those we leave unsaid
Discover beauty,
And not by voiced reproof are slack hearts led
But by some vague, unspoken work, each hears,
That pleads for duty.

'Tis not the sounds but silences of life
To which we hearken;
The wave-beats of the sea of daily strife
Raise clouds of sound, with silences between,
That light or darken.

Not in effulgence can those joys be found
That flood the senses,
They come but when the day kills clangorous sound
And night, all silent, calms the fevered blood
And rest dispenses.

We lose the theme where eloquence has burned
Nor long regret it—
It was a sound; but who of man has turned
And felt the thrill of silent, breathing art
And can forget it?

When wind-swept storms leave on the shivering palm
Great tears that glisten,
And rage-rent forces speak within the calm,
What wondrous words are whispered in the ears
Of those who listen.

As after passion comes serene repose,
Calm, after flurry,
So, after life comes silence. Ah, who knows
How we shall read the music of the void
To'ard which we hurry?

Ralston's Get-Rich-Quick Smelter

Senator Billy Ralston has some friends who are getting ready to rank themselves among the haughtiest plutocrats of the country. And Ralston is no Colonel Sellers. He is the son of his father, the much beloved William C. Ralston, who was one of the most enterprising financiers that ever manipulated the local money market, and he has inherited much of his parent's business sagacity. He is an expert mining man, and naturally the enterprise through which he expects to enrich his friends beyond the dreams of avarice is intimately connected with the business with which he is most familiar. For some months past he has spent most of his leisure time in a foundry exercising his mechanical ingenuity, not to speak of his muscles, in perfecting a contrivance with which he fondly hopes to revolutionize the business of smelting ore. Recently he finished his labors, and put his smelter to the test. It came fully up to his expectations, and immediately he organized a corporation to engage in the smelting business. From all accounts the Ralston smelter is a money-maker. It can get more gold out of a ton of ore than any other smelter that was ever made, and it can be constructed for one-third the cost of a machine of equal capacity.

Off To Tonopah

Among the people who have been taken in on the ground floor by Mr. Ralston are Post Master Fisk and Revenue Collector Lynch, and they are highly elated over the prospect of accumulating wealth while you wait. Senator Ralston is now in the new gold fields of Nevada negotiating for the erection of smelter plants. He is empowered to sell the machines outright or take a working interest in any of the mines. He has been all through the Tonopah and Goldfields districts, and he is very enthusiastic over what he has seen. The ore is richer than any that was ever discovered on this coast, and some of the mines give promise of becoming the richest in the world. Ore that does not assay over sixty dollars to the ton is not shipped, owing to the cost of transportation, and it is this rock that Ralston is prepared to handle with his new-fangled smelter.

The Knocker Was There

Some of our most successful men of trade and finance were summoned to a meeting in the Palace hotel last week to discuss ways and means of providing campaign sinews for the Republican party. It was a very successful meeting but the knocker was there in all his glory. He expressed a desire to have it distinctly understood that he would make no contribution to the campaign fund until one S. G. Murphy had been persuaded to separate himself from a small fraction of his hoard. The one S. G. Murphy referred to is none other than the thrifty President of the First National Bank, the institution which has the backing of the so-called High Irish. In a purely commercial sense, Mr. Murphy, who is Irish only in name, is an ardent Republican; that is, whenever there is a chance to enjoy the patronage of the party he does not overlook it, but judging from the sentiment of that business men's meeting he is not a giver of the species that the Lord loveth. So the knocker took occasion to get in his knock.

Even Buckley Is Staggered

Fancy Chris Buckley deploring the shameless cupidity of a boss! The suggestion is not in the nature of a witticism, though I know it appeals to the risibles. The famous "White Devil" who levanted to Canada once upon a time to avoid an unpleasant quarter of an hour or so with an inquisitorial body somewhat irregularly impaneled by Judge Wallace, confided in his friend Mose Gunst, the other night, that it shocked him to learn of some of the things that are being done nowadays. And Chris struck no pose while expatiating on the rottenness of the municipal government. He merely differentiated the graft of the period of his ascendancy from the graft of today, and he marveled in apparent solemn sincerity that the people should be so complaisant. But it must not be inferred that Buckley has turned reformer. He abominates political purists, but in his reminiscent moments, when he reflects on his forbearance in deference to public opinion, and contrasts the mildness of his predatory practices with the boldness of up-to-date buccaneering, he flatters himself that after all he was not quite so bad as he was painted.

"Can't you love me a little?" he pleaded as he pressed her hand tenderly and looked unutterable things into her soft gray eyes.

"Not any less than I do now," was the debutante's naive reply.

And it took him several minutes to figure it out.

Our Mexican Visitors

At the banquet last week, in honor of Ramon Corral, Vice-President of Mexico, General Torres was introduced as the great Indian fighter, and as a consequence he was regarded with a great deal of admiration. I am told that General Torres was never in an Indian fight. He is a great politician and is the boss of Sonora. Ramon Corral is his protegee. Corral was formerly a newspaper man. He became Torres' private secretary, and it was then that he received the political training that enabled him to become the logical successor to President Diaz. The banquet to the distinguished visitors was a stupid affair.

Scheffauer In Berlin

Herman Scheffauer, poet and architect, now communing with the artistic glories of the Old World, has written me an entertaining letter, a poem in prose, descriptive of a Rigo concert. Rigo, the gypsy, has long been town talk in the European capitals not only on account of his liaison with that fantastic sorceress, the Princess Chimay, once Clara Ward of Detroit, but because of his genius as a violinist, which Mr. Scheffauer informs me is considerable. "After a sojourn in London," writes the poet, "Berlin seems like a heaven full of harps and hosannahs and London a place of wailing—to a San Franciscan a veritable grave where the skies lower and weep everlastingly. The magnificent buildings, monuments, theatres, art galleries and museums are innumerable and wonderful. In one evening, for instance, you can take your choice in the drama of the following: 'Monna Vanna,' by Maeterlinck, 'Henry the Fifth,' by Shakespeare, 'Salome,' by Wilde, 'Egmont,' by Goethe, 'The Robbers,' by Schiller, 'The Judge of Zalamea,' by Calderon, 'The Woman of the Sea,' by Ibsen, 'Medea,' by Sophocles, 'Die Meistersinger,' or 'Tristan and Isolde,' by Wagner, and light opera, concerts and vaudeville performances by the score. Every night there is an entire change of program and all the great works of old and modern masters are presented to this art-loving and cultured public. There is more Shakespeare played in Germany than anywhere else. Altogether life is very delightful here, and apart from the art and culture there is everywhere the excellent cooking to commend itself to one who like myself was forced to live a month on Scotch and English fare! They claim roast beef as their natural dish, the English do, but I know better: it is ham-and-eggs—nothing more. I had it three times a day." But hearken to the concert:

Rigo Jancsi in Berlin

The luxurious restaurant of the Hotel Reichshof thick-thronged with an expectant crowd of typical and elegant Berliners. Lovely faces of women beneath flamboyant hats, the sparkle of gems and pale sheen of pearls, the stir and delicate rustle of ostrich plumes and fans, snowy boas that like feathery serpents coil closely and softly about slender throats and shoulders of alabaster, men of haughty and distinguished mien in evening dress, officers in their long, pale-gray military coats with their red collars, white gloves and flashing, clinking scabbards of swords. Here and there the light, intermittent artillery of champagne bottles uncorking. The musical tinkle of uplifted glasses, laughter low or loud, the ethereal odor of flowers and perfumes battling with the bouquet of wines or aroma of cigarettes,—all that is Berlin by night, all that is the fervid breath of the great and majestic capital, is here. The cymbals ring and clash, joyously or sadly rise and fall the strains of melody, the sobbing or rejoicing of gypsy violins in ecstasy. Over all, as though the genius loci, proud as a chieftain on his own Hungarian Pusta, stands Rigo in faultless black and white; a diamond upon his bosom blazes not less brightly than his eyes, his violin is pressed lovingly against his breast, on which, ah, so often, la princesse was fain to rest her head! There he stands, the short, swarthy hero of the unspeakable Clara's romance, the gypsy lover of the Princess Chimay, she who was erstwhile the wealthy eccentric American and set to wagging the light tongues of two hemispheres. It seems even the old love dieth not—not yet. Behold, an enormous lyre of resplendent roses is brought before Rigo, ordered by telegraph from a famous firm Unter den Linden and on broad, fluttering ribbons are printed in gold these words: "To my dear Jancsi—Clara." Rigo's band plays madly, weaving fiery and rapturous melody through the rich, aromatic air, higher and higher rise the mild and swinging measures in a towering triumph of sound. Flowers and wreaths are piled before the primus who bows and smiles and shows beneath his dark moustachios his white and gleaming teeth. Rigo's success in critical Berlin is now assured; Rigo fiddles his solos and a deep, appreciative silence does him honor,—not less so the salvos of applause at the close of his rendition. "Ja, ja, das wird sicherlich ein 'run' werden" is the public verdict as we make our way through the gay and brilliant place into the cool, fresh air of night to the wide and beautiful avenue, where now the trees from which it takes its name are shedding in incessant showers their russet, green and golden leaves under the pure stars and vast, autumnal moon.

their patronage, and there are others who manifest a stubborn disinclination to pay their bills. It is a singular fact that though the very rich are slow to settle their accounts with trade-folk, persons of ordinary income dread dunning reminders and have no peace of mind until such obligations of common honesty have been solaced. I have been told of several reputed possessors of large fortunes who seem to take peculiar delight in postponing, if not finally escaping payment of their bills for attire, adornment and even for the necessities of fashionable life. A prosperous merchant told me some time ago that he did his utmost within politeness to discourage the credit trade of the smart set. He said he much preferred the custom of people of a less exalted social rank because they pay more promptly than the self-adjudged lights of fashion. While the latter are responsible for their indebtedness, they feel privileged to take their time about paying, and consequently their trade is not desirable.

The Prince of Plutocrats

While on this subject I am reminded that the rich men of San Francisco are a picayunish lot. The only prodigal spenders among our rich are a few degenerate sons who are in ignorance of the higher pleasures of life. There is not a single man in this community of the spirit of the late Pierre Lorillard — "Prince Pierre" he was called — who said that a man needed "one thousand dollars a day and expenses to enjoy life." He so expressed himself on many occasions, and one day when a banker, with vastly greater wealth than he possessed, said that one hundred thousand a year would suffice for any man's wants, no matter how luxurious or extravagant he might be, Lorillard laughed and said "that's just about enough to keep a man uneasy. With a hundred thousand a year he just begins to see what a good time he might have if he had the money." Mr. Lorillard held to the rather socialistic idea that the rich were in duty bound to spend their money. He believed that they fulfilled a large part of their obligations to the community if they dispensed their incomes in an extravagant and even prodigal style. While appreciating the virtue of gifts for charitable and educational purposes, he thought that society and the State would get along very well and be able to supply all their own endowments if the rich like himself and his associates scattered their superfluous wealth in the lavish expenditures for which he became notable. There were few years when he did not spend all his income and some when he spent more. For the men who took pride in their economies, and that bent all their wits to increasing their useless hoards he had a lively contempt. He thought that the very rich man who did not spend money extravagantly for the encouragement of the industries and callings that depend on such patronage was very near to being a public nuisance. There are economists who entertain contrary views on the subject but they are mostly rich men or savants with exceptionally high respect for the rich.

No Reconciliation Effected

Claus Spreckels has returned from Europe, and once more there are lights in the windows of the big brownstone castle in Van Ness avenue. The aged sugar king looks quite feeble after his long absence from home, but he says that he feels much improved in health. When the Spreckelses started on their European trip it was thought that perhaps before their return a reconciliation with their widowed daughter would take place, but I am told that Mrs. Watson, who is still in Europe, did not meet her parents. It was reported in an Eastern daily about the time that Mr. and Mrs. Spreckels arrived in New York en route to this city, on the authority of an old acquaintance of the family, that the journey to Europe was taken for the purpose of effecting a reconciliation with Mrs. Watson, but the fact is that Mr. Spreckels made the trip solely for his health.

Some Inaccuracies

Ever since Mrs. Gus Spreckels began to court the recognition of New York's smart set, the social paragraphers of the metropolitan dailies and weeklies have been devoting space to the Spreckels family. And most of them seem to be laboring under the delusion that Mrs. Gus Spreckels has the backing of her father-in-law, and that the latter contemplates opening his sugar barrel for the purpose of furthering the social aspirations of his family. One of the papers recently estimated his fortune at one hundred million, and told how he used to make the Havemeyers walk a chalk line. It was also stated that it was Claus Spreckels who taught the steel crowd how to build small mills and sell them to the United States Steel Corporation at one thousand per cent profit.

She Owns a Rodin

Mrs. Will Crocker, like Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, brought home many rare works of art from Europe. Mrs. Crocker has an international reputation as a collector, and in London and Paris, I am told, the bric-a-brac sellers speak of her as being one of the most intelligent of American buyers. She knows the exact value of every article she looks at, and is quick to detect the spurious. Among the treasures she brought home with her this time is a Rodin. She is an enthusiast over the French artist and his work, and has visited his atelier in Paris. This is the second Rodin that has come to San Francisco. The other was a head of Minerva, and was exhibited at one of the art shops.

Mrs. Buckingham's Debut

Mrs. W. P. Buckingham, a well known club woman, made her debut as a professional reader last Tuesday evening. Her recital drew many club and society women. It requires considerable courage for an amateur to challenge criticism as a Shakespearean reader, but Mrs. Buckingham has confidence in her convictions. Unfortunately she is too lightly equipped to inspire the same confidence in her audience. She is handicapped both vocally and temperamentally for the heavy work of "Macbeth." Her rendition of the lines showed careful study, but the tragic note was missing. Mrs. Buckingham wore beautiful costumes, and she presented a series of effective pictures. But her recital served to emphasize the fact that it is a big stride from a cosy parlor to the stage of a theatre.

The Correspondent Erred

Some weeks ago, in commenting on the change of policy at the Vatican, I mentioned among other things significant of the Pope's attitude politically, that the principal organ of the Jesuit order in Rome had been suppressed. The statement was made on the authority of the New York Sun's correspondent at Rome. I have since learned from an authoritative source that the publication referred to, the Civiltà Cattolica, is still being issued, no order of suppression having been made.

Experts to Talk

That public spirited body, the Merchants' Association, which has done so much for the advancement of the welfare of this city, has secured some fine talent for its next social function. It has been announced that James D. Phelan and Gavin McNab, either of whom is entitled to head-liner distinction on any bill, have been engaged to expatiate on the subject of political corruption and to expound the evils that shake the integrity of the elective franchise. To what higher authority could the Merchants' Association appeal for technical exposition of the subject matter of the coming symposium? Mr. Phelan was a candidate for Mayor when the law strictly enjoined candidates for office from spending more than ten per cent of the salaries they would be entitled to in the event of their election. Mr. Phelan will be able to tell the Merchants just how conscientious candidates obeyed that law. When it comes to laying bare the methods of corrupt politicians at primary elections, Mr. McNab is entitled to precedence. It is a matter of record that never were the rights of citizens more ruthlessly disregarded than in the Thirty-seventh district at a primary conducted under the supervision of Mr. McNab. Honest citizens demanded, at a State Convention, that an investigation be made of the methods employed at that primary, and at the behest of Mr. McNab the matter was shelved. At the last primary held in this city Mr. McNab's faction suffered from fraudulent practices, and then that distinguished political leader became a champion of purity burning with indignation.

The Tuft Hunters were Disappointed

Though the Sequoia Club was originally instituted for the establishment of intimate relations between the social and artistic elect, it has developed, under judicious management, into something more dignified than it gave promise of becoming at its inception. The spirit of genuine culture predominates in the club, and its "at homes" are worth while, for on those occasions people who have done things in the world of art and letters commingle. Among the members are many lion hunters who are always on hand to burn incense at the feet of genius, but of course without them the laurel wreaths would be scarce. The lion hunters were sadly disappointed one night last week when it was reported that Gertrude Atherton would be on hand to radiate culture. Though she prefers the admiration of the multitude at long range she occasionally submits to having her mane stroked. There was a large attendance on the night on which it was understood that she would show what world-famed literary genius looked like in repose. Many of the women donned their smartest frocks and practiced their intellectual poses for the occasion. Everybody felt that the salon would look like the real thing as soon as the distinguished novelist contributed the exhalations of her personality to the atmosphere. But Gertrude came not to lend eclat to the occasion. The event of the evening was not pulled off, and though Professor Morse Stephens, the historian, dropped in after his lecture on "Browning and the Renaissance," he was an inferior substitute. However the salongites having come to acclaim genius accepted what seemed to be the next thing to it in the spirit in which it was offered, and as a consequence

Looks Like Revenge

When police officials begin wreaking revenges it is time for honest citizens to become alarmed. Vindictiveness armed with a club and clothed with authority is a serious menace to society. Some weeks ago Mr. Cuyler Lee was arrested in Golden Gate Park while automobiling with his wife, for a trivial transgression of some rule of which he was ignorant. The arresting officer was extremely rude and coarse in the presence of Mrs. Lee, and Mr. Lee complained to the Police Commissioners of the functionary's conduct. At the same time he reported that he had lost his license and asked that a new one be issued. He was told that the matter would be attended to, but days passed by and the new license was not received, though several requests were made for it. Last Sunday Mr. Lee again fell into the clutches of the officer who had previously arrested him. This time he was guilty of riding without a license. He explained why he was without it, but the officer reminded him that he had made complaint to the Commissioners, and then escorted him to the Park police station. There the license was found among the records, but the officer refused to deliver it. He preferred to lock his prisoner up. Mr. Lee seems justified in suspecting that his license was withheld to enable the officer to wreak revenge. In the circumstance it appears to me that he might find redress in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

The Hawaiian Maestro

Bandmaster Berger of Honolulu, leader of the Hawaiian Band, who recently came to town, and who handled Paul Steindorff's baton in one number at Golden Gate Park last Sunday, is an interesting character. He is the head and front of the musical cult of the islands, and in the days of the monarchy contributed largely to the success of the royal functions. It was by him that nearly all the familiar Hawaiian airs, from "Hawaii Poni," the national hymn, to "Aloha Oe," were arranged. He is much beloved by the people of Honolulu. Being of an highly artistic temperament he has a keen eye for the beautiful, and whenever there is a theatrical show in town he is always in a seat near the stage. When pretty girls are performing he unconsciously rises from his seat, so deep is his interest, while his eyes are trying to focus on wings and centre at one and the same time. His friends in the house watch him and at the psychological moment comes the admonition from all parts of the theatre, "Sit down, BERGER!!" and Berger meekly subsides, covered with confusion, while the show shows on.

Rich But Not Gaudy

Although Miss Russell's wedding, scheduled for this Saturday, is to be a very simple function, the bride will be in gorgeous array. The report has got into circulation that her trousseau surpasses that of any other bride of recent years. Her wedding gown, according to tea-table chatter, is a marvelous creation, a symphony of the modiste's art, and the lace on it is of rare workmanship. But of course it doesn't look its appraised value, which, I have been told—sub rosa, for it is vulgar to discuss such matters publicly—is something like five thousand dollars. Among the bride's wedding presents are two handsome necklaces presented by her stepfather, Mr. de Sabla, each of which is worth a small fortune.

The Colliers

Mrs. Atherton Macondray, who returned from the Philippines not long ago, is still visiting the W. B. Colliers in Pacific avenue. Mrs. Macondray was Maraquita Collier. The Colliers are among what our local bavardes call "the best families." They have many influential connections in the East, among them Secretary and Mrs. Hitchcock, Winston Churchill the author, and the John Jays.

To Debut at a Ball

The three debutantes who are to be introduced to society at balls are Elsa Draper, whose dinner dance is to take place next Monday night, Margaret Hyde-Smith and Irene Sabin. The arrangements have not been completed for the Hyde-Smith and Sabin dances but it is expected that they will take place some time during the latter part of November. The bud with the hyphenated name is a charming girl; like her sister Gertrude she has been educated abroad and is somewhat of a linguist. She has quite a bewildering wardrobe for the campaign and will be one of the best-dressed of the buds. The Smiths are domiciled in Green street, and will entertain largely for the debutante. Mrs. Hyde-Smith and her sister, Mrs. Garceau, are spending much time at the bridge tables nowadays and are experts at the game.

It is probable that California Cluff will not make her debut this winter after all. Her sister, Mrs. Jack Wilson, under whose chaperonage she was to enter the charmed circle, is still abroad with her husband, and may stay in Europe a year or so longer.

The Musical Powers

And still they come. There are to be buds galore this season. The latest to be added to the bouquet is Miss Ruth Powers, daughter of Dr. George Powers and sister of Miss Katherine Powers, who is well known in society, especially in the musical set. The Powerses are all very musical, and are parlor vocalists of distinction. They sing and play solos, duets, trios, quartets, quintets and sextets, and with considerable artistic finish. No rag-time for them either. They prefer the extremely classic composers, such as Bach, Beethoven and Gluck, and it is seldom that they are not in the mood to favor their friends with a few classic selections.

The Sheldon Bordens are up from Los Angeles and are being entertained by the ultra-Bohemians, whose society they prefer to that of the conventional. Mrs. Borden was a San Francisco girl, Margery Burnett. Her grandfather was General Alexander Burnett.

My Story Corroborated

When the fact was exclusively announced in these columns, many moons ago, that the real purpose of Mrs. Robledo's visit to San Francisco, so shortly after her marriage, was to obtain a legal separation, many readers of Town Talk cried "Fie, fie! it can't be so." Among these readers were intimate friends of Mrs. Robledo, Lottie Gashwiler that was. But my story was proved true last week when the Robledos were legally made two by a decree of the court. The marriage of Miss Gashwiler, who is Mrs. Sam Shortridge's younger sister, contained material for a novel. It was an Othello and Desdemona affair so far as the attraction of the heroine for the hero of many tales is concerned. In Senor Don Robledo's case the adventures turned out to be fairy tales. Mrs. Robledo is a very charming young woman and she had many wooers before the Senor Don came along, but she always asserted that she intended to remain a bachelor maid. Her decision melted before the impassioned wooing of the dark man from the South. Disillusionment did not follow until her journey to his home, when she discovered that all his tales of wealth and greatness were but figments of an excited imagination.

Isadora's Cult of Beauty

Miss Isadora Duncan, the San Francisco girl who has become responsible for the renaissance of the Grecian cult of beauty worship, is now the talk of Paris, I am told. Her cult has many devotees in the bizarre capital. A club has been formed by numerous pretty Parisiennes whose object is to carry out, as far as possible, Miss Duncan's ideas as to classic dress. They divest themselves of all garments except such draperies as are absolutely required by way of concession to the most elementary modesty. It is no unusual spectacle nowadays, that of the devotees of a classic renaissance, in the Bois de Boulogne, reclining gracefully in their victorias, with bare head, bare arms, bare legs, their feet encased in sandals and their hair en bandeaux. They have decreed that corsets, stockings and gloves must go, and the San Francisco dancing girl will have to answer for the undress innovation.

We Are Not Jay

In the matter of music, according to Josef Hofmann, San Francisco is no "jay" city, but, on the contrary, "away up in G." The great pianist would, he tells me, be right happy to live here. He likes the land, and the people thereof—people possessed of a finer appreciation of his art than are to be met with in the East. In no mining camp of California, for instance, could the following amusing incident have occurred—an incident which Hofmann enlarges upon with much gusto and artistry: 'Twas in a small town—the name is of no moment—and the strains of Schubert's deathless Serenade in Josef's dreamiest pianissimo were falling like rose leaves upon the ears, when suddenly from the gallery one who ought to have been listening to a lady lecturer at a woman's congress called out, fortissimo: "Louder, please, louder!"

Some Master Juggling

On another occasion, says the raconteur, with Girardy of cello fame, and Kreisler, the violin wonder who after the holidays will be heard here for the first time, he was playing a Rubinstein, I have forgotten just where, but not, of course, in California, when, without the least warning to his confreres, Kreisler began improvising on a then popular air which fitted in with the theme of the master—which was, perhaps, as is often the case with popular airs, an imitation more or less conscious. Not a whit taken aback—for both have the art of impromptu at their fingers' ends—the cellist took the cue as quick as a wink; likewise the pianist; and having played the rare game of follow my leader to their hearts' content, the trio wound up with Rubinstein as written. And the point of the story is that the audience, though it enjoyed the "piece" immensely, was none the wiser. That same Kreisler is coming, so the posters say, but that same Hofmann is gone, and we may never hear him more, for he has a mind to give up concertizing; and to think of the many who have not the least knowledge of Josef who are all for taking it up!

A Name That Looks Well

Count de la Rocca is the latest acquisition of local society. He has assumed the duties of vice-consul at this port, but he will find it somewhat difficult to take the place in society lately vacated by the Italian vice-consul, Count Grimani. However, De la Rocca is a very high-sounding name and it will look well in the lists of "among those present." The lionizing of the count will no doubt soon begin.

Victims of The St. Louis Burglary

Miss Helen Murison, who was the unfortunate victim of a burglary in St. Louis, is the niece of the Miss Murison who has charge of a fashionable finishing school for young ladies in this city. Miss Helen made her debut two years ago at a ball given by her aunt at Century hall. She is a vivacious blonde, one of the cleverest of the younger girls.

She is an accomplished musician and has decided literary talent. Miss Brann, who was robbed of some handsome gowns, is a teacher at Miss Murison's school. She is chaperoning Miss Helen Murison through the East.

Roasting the Bishop

Bishop Potter is catching fits from the good men of the pulpit across the bay. The Rev. E. E. Baker recently declared that though the Bishop was a gentleman his Christianity, being an Episcopalian, was not of the first water. And now comes the Rev. Homer J. Vosburgh, a Baptist clergyman who recently visited the "subway tavern" in New York. He says that Bishop Potter is undoubtedly consistent, being a member of several fashionable clubs that sell liquor, but the subway tavern will send countless young men to drunkards' graves despite the Episcopal benediction.

"She dresses like a genius."

"Case of continuous masquerade, I suppose."

The Wheeler Tea

The big tea given by Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler was a fashionable crush and a great success. It was like buying opera seats, standing in line to get at the host and hostess. Mrs. Wheeler was very pretty in pink, and her sister, Mrs. Marsh, was charmingly gowned in blue. The Wheelers set a new vogue by having no decorations—at least only a few cut flowers high overhead where they could be scarcely noticed. There was music faintly sighing somewhere, but it was unnoticed too. Nothing short of a brass band can be heard at a tea. There were many stunning new gowns at this first tea of the season and they were the principal objects of interest. The Wheeler house is very ornate with a gold-ceiled dining room like the St. Francis cafe. The house abounds in stunning portraits of the master and mistress. Orrin Peck did two fine ones, the one of Mrs. Wheeler in hunting costume of corduroy and fur being a very pleasing conception. A more conventional one of Mrs. Wheeler in evening dress but charming in pose was executed by Mary Curtis Richardson. Several of the Wheeler children have also been limned.

They Tired of London

Since the Withrow sisters—Eva and Marie—came back to San Francisco to live, one hears a great deal about their achievements in London. So successful are they reported to have been in the British metropolis that it is surprising that they ever thought of returning to the provinces. It is seldom that people voluntarily circumscribe their field of action, but competition is exceedingly brisk in London, and people in the art world there are constantly under forced draught. It is a case of the survival of the fittest with a vengeance, and to prove one's fitness one must be up and doing. But the Withrows have always been exceedingly active, and besides being talented they possess a very keen commercial sense. They enjoyed many social and commercial triumphs in this city long before they went to London. Years ago they lived in Pine street during the heyday of Mrs. "Billy" Brown's social career, and they entered into the social whirl with much zest. Miss Marie Withrow was always invaluable in helping along the little and big musicales conducted under the auspices of the St. Cecelia choir, prominent members of which were Mrs. Henry Wetherbee and Valentine Gadesden, the "silent tenor." At the same time Miss Eva Withrow stimulated a love of art among society people, and sold many pictures.

In Reminiscent Vein

Miss Marie Withrow was also very active in St. Luke's church, where she organized a boys' choir, and later in the Unitarian church. About that time Eva Withrow painted a portrait of Rev. Dr. Stebbins which was purchased by the ladies of the church by popular subscription. It was in those days that Leslie Martin bobbed up as a factor in our infant musical and art cult. San Francisco society had little cultivation in music or any of the arts in that remote period, so when Martin posed as a critic of foreign training he was gladly accepted at his own appraisal. He could put the finest instrument out of tune and lay up a grand piano for repair in no time. For some months he eked out a precarious existence as a teacher, but later he became musical critic of the now defunct Wave, and his criticisms were much in the same strain as his playing. But he attracted attention to himself and secured many pupils. Moreover he recognized the talents of the Misses Withrow and exploited them successfully. The present whereabouts of Mr. Martin are unknown, but the talented Withrow sisters are with us again, after a long and successful experience in London, where they perfected their art, and won many friends. They will no doubt renew their triumphs of earlier days.

May Lead to a Duel

Letters here to the club friends of George Crocker throw a droll light over the controversy of his twenty thousand dollar suit against Dr. Doyen, who administered the serum to Mrs. Crocker. So worked up have the French medicos and lawyers become over the professional and financial aspects of the case that several duels are seriously threatened. Of course as they are French affairs no blood will be shed but the principals are hurling threats at one another as though the issue would cost more lives than the Russo-Japanese war. Dr. Doyen is out with an ultimatum that "if the individual whom I have in mind as being responsible for Mr. Crocker's attitude toward me reiterates his charges at the next conference of physicians when this subject comes up I shall challenge him to a duel." To otherwise flank his enemies the irascible doctor is going to bring suits for defamation of character by the wholesale against his enemies. Dr. Rochard is the "individual" referred to above and he represents himself just as willing to fight as Dr. Doyen is to challenge. In the last newspaper broadside from the Crocker camp of physicians Dr. Doyen was charged with being the Barnum of his profession. He admitted having performed operations before a cinematograph but declared that the pictures were to be used only to spread surgical knowledge in the profession and that he was proud to have taken this initiative. Professional life in Paris is rent over the controversy and many a twenty thousand dollar reputation will be destroyed before it is over. The rich Americans there dislike the notoriety of the case and think that Mr. Crocker should have submitted to the "squeeze" rather than have invited so much publicity. The discussion has brought to light a number of similar stories showing that it is the regular practice in such cases to mulct the rich Americans visiting Paris for all that can be got out of them.

An Artist's Method

But the physicians of Paris are not the only professional sandbaggers. Recently I was told of the dastardly trick played on a San Francisco woman by one of the best known portrait painters of Paris. The woman is not blessed with a fortune, and she felt flattered when the artist invited her to sit for him. No mention of a fee was made, and she attributed the honor of his professional attention to her peerless profile. After the artist had done the head against a black velvet curtain he said, "Before I continue madame, you must pay three thousand francs." The woman in fine disdain whirled out of the studio. Then the artist finished the woman's head on a nude body and he invited a large gathering to see his new portrait. Two days later a gentleman from California called on the artist and by threatening to make pulp of his face persuaded him to eliminate the likeness to the American woman.

Smooth Sailing Now

The first big musicale of the Twentieth Century Club this season will be held at Century Club hall this Saturday (twenty-ninth). The club has gone through many vicissitudes since last spring, but the numerous feuds have been patched up and everything looks like smooth sailing for the most fashionable of the musical organizations. An effort will be made, I hear, to secure better talent for the invitational concerts.

The World's Fake

The story published in the Examiner the other day, about the "Ladies' Cabinet" established by Mrs. Roosevelt, was a New York World yarn. The World has been most malignant in its attacks on the President, and the purpose of the Cabinet story was to show that Mrs. Roosevelt had undertaken to make herself a social tyrant, wielding the same absolute power over women as her husband seeks to exercise over the nation. According to the story as printed in the World, no woman is to be permitted to have any social standing in Washington except by grace of the despotic "Ladies' Cabinet." Mr. Pulitzer, proprietor of the World, is the distinguished gentleman who recently endowed a college of journalism.

Last week I inadvertently confounded Mr. E. I. Wolfe with Mr. E. S. de Wolfe in my paragraph about the Newspaper Art Exhibition. It was the latter and not the State Senator who purchased the beautiful sketch in colors by Nahl, "Fishing at Night."

The hills of San Francisco are not, I hear, sufficiently attractive to Josephine Loughborough since her return from the seven-hilled city. Her heart turns longingly toward Rome, and she earnestly desires to return there. Mrs. Loughborough prefers San Francisco, but may decide to accede to her daughter's wish for a winter in the Eternal City. Miss Loughborough's supply of imported frocks seems to be inexhaustible, for she wears a new one at every function, each of the gowns, like those of the princess in the fairy tale, being more beautiful than its predecessor.

She Wanted To Meet Them

The Browning Club recently celebrated the anniversary of the marriage of the immortal Robert and Elizabeth Barrett. Each of the members brought a present to the club in honor of the event. A prominent society girl remarked to a Browning Club member at a tea the other day that she was "just dying to meet the Brownings" and begged for an invitation to their anniversary reception.

She's a San Franciscan

Marion Hill, who has the first of a series of child stories in the current McClure's, is a San Franciscan. She is the eldest daughter of Barton Hill, the veteran actor, and this is by no means her first contribution to literature. Twenty-two years ago she started her career as a writer by winning the first prize of two offered by Ira G. Hoitt for the best story written by a pupil in the San Francisco public schools. Later she wrote some good short stories, and a year or two ago had a serial in St. Nicholas. The children of Barton Hill are all very talented. Charles, the only son, was one of the most brilliant assistants of Professor Davidson in his astronomical researches a few years ago. After his marriage he resigned from the Lick Observatory staff and entered the insurance business. Clara, the second daughter, took up the practice of dentistry after leaving school, and Leila, the youngest, went on the stage, appearing with Nance O'Neil and others. The Hills are cousins of the Drows and Ethel Barrymore.

"She comes from one of the old families."

"I thought so; there's something of the antique in her appearance."

Our Dashing Troopers

The arrival of the Second squadron of the Fourth cavalry at the Presidio is something more than a mere item of military routine. This is an historic regiment, and this particular squadron is the principal history-maker in the organization, having been a part of the first army expedition that went to the Philippines after Dewey's victory. For three years thereafter, the Fourth cavalrymen marched and fought through all the hard campaigns in Luzon, from 1898 to 1901, against both Spaniard and Filipino. It is a hard riding, hard fighting regiment, and its representatives now at the Presidio look their parts. Seldom has there been seen here so soldierly looking a set of officers and men, an unusually large number of the latter being now in their second and even third enlistments. They are a devil-may-care, trim, dashing looking lot of troopers, typical beaux sabreurs, and Major C. H. Murray, their commander, is justified in his pride in his men.

Apropos the arrival of the Fourth, a story is going the rounds to the effect that they are sufferers from a sort of flim-flam bunko game at the hands of Colonel Morris and his coast artillery. The cavalrymen belong in quarters near the permanent barracks at the Presidio, but they are thrown into the infantry cantonment, a lot of flimsy shacks near the Greenwich-street gate. The cavalrymen made a roar at once. Their indignation was intensified when they learned that the Ninth cavalry, a few months ago, was quartered in the post proper. When they asked for a transfer, they were met with the reply that there was no room for them, the artillery post being occupied by two companies of coast artillery, and a big company of the hospital corps. It is thought that General Moore, the department commander, who is an old cavalryman, will not be deaf to the roar of his fellow "yellow legs."

The Baker Farewell

Harry Pendleton's farewell dinner to Captain and Mrs. C. T. Baker, at the St. Francis, was one of the most notable affairs of the season thus far. It was largely an army affair, but the creme de la creme of civilian society was there. The Bakers are Georgians, and are old friends of their host. Captain Baker made an enviable record during his tour of duty in this city as assistant depot quartermaster, and his zeal and thoroughness in the investigation of several reported irregularities in the transport service made him the terror of the grafters. He is a good fellow as well as an efficient officer. He leaves on Tuesday for his new post at Manila, which is a deserved promotion.

The Trenton Hero

Captain Henry W. Lyon, who has been recently ordered to take command of the naval station at Honolulu, is one of the best known as well as one of the most efficient officers of the navy. It was Lyon who, as Lieutenant-Commander, was executive officer of the ill-fated cruiser Trenton when that vessel was lost in the disastrous Samoan hurricane of 1889, and to his skillful work was mainly due the small loss of life on that vessel. Lyon performed his duties without dramatic display and his deeds were not exploited by the press-agent methods that made some people believe that R. M. G. Brown was the real hero of the occasion. If the truth were generally known, Brown and Lazarus L. Reamey, both of whom were loudly talked of in connection with the affair, would not figure in a very heroic light. During the Spanish war, Lyon had command of the Dolphin, on both the northern and southern blockades of Cuba, and did splendid work with that little vessel. During the stubborn fight of the marines at Guantanamo, Lyon, in the Dolphin, and McCalla, in the Marblehead, made sure the foothold of the marines, who, without the aid of the guns of those vessels, would have been in a sore plight.

Gayety on a Transport

The passengers on the transport Sheridan which arrived in Manila in September after a trip of nearly thirty-two days, had a very lively time, a correspondent informs me. The only male passengers were three Filipino lieutenants who, with the quartermaster, entertained the women. At Guam a navy doctor came aboard and assumed the role of lion. The second night out from Guam there was a bal masque aboard, and the costumes were both ravishing and picturesque. The twenty year old blonde daughter of a dashing grass-widow from San Francisco wore the navy doctor's uniform, and the wife of an army officer stationed at Zauntoanga and who was accompanied by a two months' old baby, dressed as a ballet girl. The other women wore officers' uniforms. The navy doctor did a female impersonating stunt with chemise and corset, and a ship's officer appeared in long white stockings tied with big bows of ribbon, dainty lingerie and a nightie over all. My correspondent says that this was the most sensational trip ever made by an American transport, and that is saying a good deal.

Harrison Chants of California

William Greer Harrison, veteran athlete, poet (beg pardon, Mr. Bierce), playwright, bon vivant, is once more between book covers, and this time it cannot be said that he has ventured beyond his depth. "The Outdoor Life of California" is the title of a little volume that came to hand this week. Its author modestly presents himself not as one of the literati but as President of the Olympic Club. Who is better qualified to write of the outdoor life of California than the man who has tramped all over it in all kinds of weather? But Mr. Harrison has not attempted a volume of reference, nor has he written for the trade. He has merely burst into a passionate chant of the glories of California outdoor life, seemingly inspired by the amiable purpose of persuading people to fill their lungs with fresh air. And he worked himself into a fine frenzy as he pushed his pen along. He writes of "Waterfalls, the joy tears of the mountain sprites"; of "Cascades in whose music you hear the weeping of wood nymphs over dead forest kings." He tells us that "California is the solarium of the world" and that "When the sun throws aside the robes of night and breathes his morning benediction, until his evening prayer, when his lingering blessing touches everything with his kiss, there is a golden dusk or a sun-charged atmosphere in which man may drink a newer, richer draught of life." He also tells us that the Pacific ocean is "a vast champagne bath, a universal salt glow," the roar of whose breakers is "an organ peal, the swell a flowing song, the spume an electric bath." Now Hermann Oelrichs, will you be good! Puny writer of miserable doggerel, go hide your diminished muse. But aside from the poetry of it I commend Mr. Harrison's brochure because he has come to the defense of our priceless, exhilarating fogs, those beneficent stimulants that every San Franciscan sighs for when he is away, and is always apologizing for as though they were a scourge. Our envious New England neighbors of Los Angeles have almost made some of us believe that we do not like our fogs. To the California Promotion Committee I heartily recommend "The Outdoor Life of California."

Mrs. Scratchem—Why did Reginald turn down the gas in the parlor?"

Miss Scratchem—He said that he had such a fine sense of touch the light was entirely superfluous, and besides he prides himself on his economy.

He Must Feed Them All

There was a great rumpus in the Bohemian Club when the announcement was made in the papers that Colonel Draper had sent out invitations to a dinner dance at the Sign of the Owl. Though dancing in the Jinks Room has always been winked at, it has been generally understood that it was tolerated sub rosa. So the directors were shocked when the papers gave publicity to Colonel Draper's intention to pull off a terpsichorean revel on the occasion of his daughter's debut. The Colonel was called upon for many explanations, and finally it was decided that the dinner should be the principal function of the evening, and that the dance should come as an afterthought. So it was decreed that the host should entertain at dinner everybody invited to the dance. Though the ultimatum of the directors was not punitive in its purpose that will be the effect, for the Colonel will have to dig a little deeper into his pockets.

A Little Premature

It is evident that Melba is coming, for her press-agent is beginning to pay a little attention to this neck of the woods. The other day I received a communication from him informing me that she was in doubt as to whether she would wear on her coming concert tour the decoration for science, art and music conferred upon her recently by King Edward VII. "Though she wears exquisite concert toilettes," he adds, "she is a bit adverse to displaying such a recognition of her abilities as that of King Edward's gift." When the noted diva learns of the character of "literature" her agent is sending out she will probably raise Cain, for that sort of advertising matter implies that she is getting into the Patti class, whereas her art is at its zenith. It is too early yet for Melba to seek to arouse interest by advertising her jewelry.

Greenway Dodging Climbers

The festive social season opens next week with two large balls, the Draper dinner dance and the Greenway "Friday Night Club" function. Mr. Greenway will return just a few days before his ball. It is his usual custom to remain away from town some time before a big ball to escape the importuning of the climbers, who, by the way, have never clamored louder for invitations to his series of entertainments than they have this year. The list, however, remains, with but few changes, the same as it was last year, a circumstance that has occasioned a great deal of surprise, for since Mr. Greenway added a brandy agency to his wine agency, petitions from the trade have been more numerous than ever. There is some talk of his taking a soap agency next year, and it is predicted that if he does the bars will surely come down. His first dance this year will be in honor of his own birthday, but which one he has not yet divulged. He has invited about fifty friends to dine with him at the Bohemian Club on that occasion. I hear that he is to be swamped with invitations to Christmas dinners this year, it having been learned that he dined alone last year, every one in society depending on every one else to dine the Czar, and the consequence being that he ate his turkey in solitude. Society gasped when it heard the dreadful news, for society owes much to the gallant Edward.

The latest dancing club, risen Phoenix-like from the ashes of the defunct Fortnightly, is the Saturday Evening Club. The dances of the new club will be held in the same hall that was the scene of the Fortnightlies. Two of the five balls outlined will be cotillions. The first dance will come shortly after the first Friday Night and before the first Assembly, which will be probably the third Saturday in November. The patronesses of these dances are Mrs. George Allen Moore, mother of Carol Moore, the debutante; Mrs. James Potter Langhorne, also mother of a debutante; Mrs. Wakefield Baker, Mrs. Louis Monteagle and Mrs. George Ashton. I hear furthermore that no wine will be served at the Saturday Evening Club's dances; the punch bowls will contain lemonade without the stick, and if supper is served fizz water will be the only beverage.

Gamble's Heliotropes

Some of the rooms in the St Francis are "flower" rooms, the panels having been painted by local "great" artists to conform with the color scheme. The story is current in artdom that Gamble was asked to paint a heliotrope panel for the lavender room. Now Gamble's specialty is not heliotrope, but eschscholtzias on green fields. However he accepted the order. But when the heliotropes were delivered they were found to be impossible, at least so said the critics, and the lavender room was finished without this contribution to its decorations.

The Brockton Shoe Store at 925 Market street opened last week with surprising patronage. The attractive display of up-to-date footwear was perhaps responsible for this. But they guarantee their shoes or your money back.

M. B. Mihran has just returned to San Francisco, bringing with him a large line of new importations. Mihran's is famous for beautiful antiques, and the latest additions in this line should not fail to be seen. Antiques have become very scarce and their value increases every day.

Colonel M. H. Hecht gathered a most delightful party for the World's Fair. His guests are his four daughters, three of whom are married. At the last moment Mrs. Mark Gerstle thought she could not go as her small son had come home from school with a broken arm on the day before the one fixed for the departure. But as the break was not serious and the little chap was suffering no pain Mrs. Gerstle was prevailed upon to go.

Enough For The Provinces

Society has been admiring Mrs. Peixotto's gowns, and the report is current that she has an income of three hundred and fifty a month with which to dress herself. Quite enough, I am told, to dress well on—in San Francisco. Mrs. Peixotto is an attractive woman of culture and so pleasing is her personality that it is predicted she will share the social vogue enjoyed by Mrs. Joseph Marks and Mrs. Mark Gerstle.

Distinctly a Family Affair

By the way, I am told that there was some surprise that society with a big S was not represented at the Gerstle-

Fleishhacker wedding at "Violet Terrace" in San Rafael. Though the Fleishhackers have not enjoyed that social prominence that breeds newspaperity, the Gerstle family has been very much in the limelight. And it was understood that the union of the two families meant the acquisition by the smart set of some new members. But the bride's family invited only their most intimate friends to the ceremony, and refrained from rounding up any of the Christian swaggers.

On Tuesday night a very delightful "surprise" birthday party was given Edward E. Drake. The rooms were beautifully decorated with roses, carnations and smilax, the table decorations being of maiden hair ferns. Games, music and dancing were the ordre du soir. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. William Healy, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. King, William V. M. Bay, Joseph P. White, Mr. and Mrs. Cress Unger, Dr. and Mrs. Burritt N. Daw, Frank Peterson, Miss Alice Harpham, Mrs. G. W. Ware, Lee W. Harpham, Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Drake.

A Smash at The Hastings

It has remained for Assistant Professor G. H. Boke to give a black eye to the Hastings Law College. He told the students of the senior class in a recent lecture that he would not advise them to study law at a college in preference to the university. Although he did not mention the Hastings college it was clearly understood by those who heard him that it was to that institution he referred. "The proper way to study law is to first learn the theoretical part," said Professor Boke. "That is what is taught here while in the regular college of law it is practice and if the student gets the theory it is picked up in a slipshod way."

To Honor Le Conte

Graduates of the University of California who are at present in South Africa have sent four hundred dollars as their contribution to the Le Conte Memorial Lodge in the Yosemite. The money was received by Professor Lawson, who announced the receipt at the banquet of mining men in Oakland a few nights ago. It is said that the lodge that is to be built in honor of the late Professor, who was the idol and hero as well as the friend of every student with whom he came in contact, will be one of the most beautiful structures in the State. It is to be of massive stone, raftered with heavy wood and will be as solid in character as was the one to whose memory it is dedicated.

Why The Ducks Are There

Professor Willis Jepson of the department of botany in the University of California, has made a discovery that promises to be of great benefit to duck-hunters, as well as to the fowl that is hunted. During a visit to the Suisun marshes for the purpose of studying the flora of that district, Professor Jepson found that the supply of food for ducks is virtually inexhaustible in that region. Hunters have known for years that the Suisun marshes were the favorite resort of canvas-backs as well as of wild geese, but they did not know the reason. Professor Jepson noticed that they seemed to find a rich food supply in the dry stalks of the fennel pond weed floating upon the surface of the water, and upon pulling it up found at the root of the stalk a number of small tubers, which secreted a rich, oily substance somewhat resembling the burr-clover. The marsh is full of this weed and it is for that reason that the ducks and geese make it their home during the winter seasons.

The "Fierceness" of It

Half a dozen gay young society girls were in the audience that gathered, two hundred strong, in Chabot hall, Oakland, last Thursday to hear the first lecture of Professor Henry Morse Stephens in the French Revolution course. Thursday's lecture was on the subject of Louis the Sixteenth and Marie Antoinette. Professor Stephens was at his best and the audience was spell-bound by the vivid descriptions of the eloquent speaker, when presently a faint whisper brought a smile to the faces of the assembled teachers, professors, club and society women with which the hall was filled: "I'm awful sorry that my name's Marie and, say, my new theatre coat is a Louis the Sixteenth. Isn't it fierce?"

A Cornell Romance

The engagement of Helen Adelaide Ellsworth of Hartford, Conn., with C. C. Van Loben Sels of Oakland, is said to be the outcome of a romance begun at Cornell, where the young people were students. The wedding will not take place until next June and then the couple will return to California to set up a home of their own. The young man is the son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Van Loben Sels, who are connected with the old De Fremery family of West Oakland.

The Fore-Hewlett Wedding

"Clad in white samite, mystic, wonderful," was the phrase upon which the whole scheme of Ione Fore's marriage with Eugene Hewlett was carried out by her poetical sisters. A touch of green was used in the decorations of the church, as it was remembered at the last moment that St. Paul's had once before, on the occasion of a baby's funeral, been in ghostly, "shuddery" white. The bride wore the most artistic as well as the costliest gown that has been seen at any wedding since Annie Clay's. It was of tulle, paneled with Bruges lace, and embroidered with ribbon in trailing garlands of orange blossoms, leaves and buds. On the deep, finely-shirred lace flounce, which fell upon the long train, was a design of true lovers'-knots and roses. There is a new fashion in the throwing of the bridal bouquet to the eager group of attendants to determine which will be Cupid's next victim. When the bride stands at the top of the stair, she is now required to cover her eyes with her hands in order that no favoritism shall creep into the flinging of the blossoms. It was the youngest of the group, this season's debutante, Gertrude Allen, who caught Ione Fore's lavender orchids. Chrissie Taft was considered the prettiest girl at the wedding. She is the Gibson girl of Oakland.

A Marriage in Tokio

It is not safe for a pretty girl to go to the Orient these days. She will either announce her engagement to some army or navy man or to a missionary. The latest to fall a snare to Cupid's wiles is Miss Lucy E. Wilcox, whose marriage to Herbert C. Cheek was solemnized in Tokio, Japan, on the fifteenth of June. Miss Wilcox was a member of the exclusive Oakland set and went to Tokio a year ago on a visit to friends. She fell in love with Japan, and then a resident fell in love with her, the sequel being the Wilcox-Cheek marriage. The Cheeks are to live in Tokio but will return to California next year to visit the Wilcoxes.

The Society Blanchisseuse

Newest of all the fads of the Oakland society woman is that of doing her own washing. There is but one reason given when the women and girls talk over household matters in the clubs and at the "teas" and "bridge" parties and that is "They are too delicate — hand-made you know! That dreadful laundry actually starched them and tore off yards of that sweet lace." But a woman whose purse is not always gold-lined told me that the truth of the new industry springing into favor lies in the fact that laundries have fairly doubled their prices. So the most exclusive ones of the trio of cities on the Alameda shore gather in groups and have washing and ironing bees. It is prime fun, the belles declare, and pretty cheeks are as red as roses over the ironing board and shapely, dimpled hands and arms are distracting as they rise from the foam of the tub. For once, the fathers and husbands are delighted with the whims of their womenkind.

In Financial Circles

The week's business shows a fair volume of transactions. Dealings in bonds amount to $591,000, and in stocks 6,841 shares, divided as follows: 1,680 lighting, 550 water, 3,336 miscellaneous, 215 bank and 1,060 sugars. The bond market showed material strength, several classes gaining advances of from one to two points.

Interest in the stock market was confined to Alaska Packers' Association and San Francisco Gas and Electric. At the corresponding day last week Alaska Packers' Association closed $105; since then it advanced to $106, from which there was a constant decline to $98.1-2, closing at $100. The condition of the company is by no means precarious. The directors seem to have committed the error of allowing the company to treble its business without increasing its means to do the business with. But in the face of ample assets on hand and furthermore in the face of the fact of the company having yielded enormous profits, which it is still making, I believe a modus should easily be found to put the company on a more satisfactory financial basis. San Francisco Gas and Electric still suffers from the danger of a competing rival. The stock had a further decline from $58 to $56.1-2.

—The Financier.

Guests arriving at Del Monte during the week ending October twenty-third included Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Mills, Miss Elizabeth Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lewis, J. B. Murphy, F. E. Booth, Harry Coleman, H. M. Black, of San Francisco; Dr. Oronhyteka, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. S. Hambleton, of Mexico.

A Jesuit "Dante"

Victorien Sardou, the French wizard of the drama, wrote a play to order for Sir Henry Irving, last year, to give the distinguished actor an opportunity to appear in the role of Dante. It purported to be a dramatization of the life of the Florentine poet; but it wasn't. It was pure fiction, but it was more dramatic than was the life of Dante. The French playwright put the divine poet through many theatric paces and served up hell-fire in a series of beautiful tableaux, but to subserve his purpose he dragged the name of the pure Florentine in the dust, and Irving, despite his boasted artistic conscience, was the Frenchman's accomplice. In a spirit of resentment, Rev. Father J. F. X. O'Connor of St. Ignatius College, a student of literature and an author of several valuable text-books, wrote a play dealing with historic incidents in the life of Dante, and idealizing the poet. It was produced in the college theatre on Monday night, and was a most ambitious effort viewed as an amateur production. Scenically it was a surprise, and though the actors, being novices, were incapable of doing it full justice, on the whole it was a creditable performance. The literary merit of the play is of a high order, and it contains much of interest to the student. But it is not deftly constructed, its dialogue is of interminable length and its slender threads of narrative fail to arouse interest. The only drama in Dante's life found expression in his poetry, which is dramatized with the aid of tableaux, and in that feature Rev. Father O'Connor's play resembles the Sardou work. Both playwrights were generous with hell-fire, but Sardou, finding insufficient romance in the poet's life for stage exploitation, invented a mistress for him, and endowed him with an illegitimate daughter who figures as one of the principal characters in the Frenchman's drama. Father O'Connor has given us a sympathetic study of the poet, and it should be worth while as a contribution to literature. Fortunately the Sardou travesty was a failure and is never again likely to call for serious rebuke.

Theodore Bonnet.

The Fourth Edition

"When We Were Twenty-One" promises to become as popular in its stock presentations as when Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott starred in it. It is a charming play, full of interest, the comedy and pathos evenly balanced. The Majestic presents the play this week in pleasing manner, with Amelia Gardner and Howard Gould in the Goodwins' roles. Miss Gardner is a delightful Phyllis and her changes from grave to gay, from lively to severe, show the artistic temperament of the actress to pleasing advantage. Mr. Gould is always interesting as Carewe, and is ably balanced in his rather serious role by George Woodward as "Waddles." Woodward reminds one in his looks and manner of Frank Michaels's chum, the society and club wit, jolly, fat Lansing Mizner. Eleanor Gordon as Firefly wears a beautiful gown and makes a fascinating adventuress, but I liked her much better as the bright young girl in "A Japanese Nightingale." Her temperament is far better adapted to the parts of nice young women than the bold bad ones which are usually allotted her. The best acting in the piece comes in the last act, and it is there that Harry Mestayer as the Imp has his best opportunities. We have seen this part charmingly exploited, but Mr. Mestayer does not excite invidious comparison. His Imp is an artistic performance.

Esmond Again

The Alcazar has another of Esmond's pretty comedies. It is not likely that anybody has forgotten "The Wilderness" as presented by Margaret Anglin and Henry Miller not so many seasons back. Its heart interest is not so compelling as in the stronger play, but it is a good picture of modern life and manners and the dialogue and situations are clever. The prettiest scene is that where the children appear and talk of the "fairy ring." As a whole it is well acted by the Alcazar players. Mr. Craig is much more plausible in the role of the elderly hero than Henry Miller was, and puts much more genuine feeling into his acting. In the last scene, a real thrill goes through the audience, when the husband discovers that he is not unloved, and clasps his wife to his manly breast. Miss Lawrence is not so well adapted to the portrayal of the young heroine of "The Wilderness" as she was to Lady Algy and last week's heroine, but her acting is pleasing and her manner always gracious and charming. Conness as the amiable villain and the rest of the cast are all more than acceptable.

Fischer's theatre has been sold to the dime vaudeville syndicate.

The Bowery Girl On Top Again

The coon seems to have permanently retired into the background, and the Bowery Girl is in the ascendancy again. "Tough" skits are the thing nowadays, and have permeated vaudeville almost to the utter exclusion of ragtime artists. Clarice Pasquelena is the Bowery Girl disporting herself on the Orpheum's stage this week, in a clever arrangement dubbed "A Newsboy's Appeal." She has a partner, one Sullivan, who has a better voice than hers and who sings well, but Miss Pasquelena is the feature of the stunt. The Harvey company has a rather good sketch, "Wanted, a Groom," which contains some amusing incidents. Harvey is the star of the company and does a butler turn that is capital. Owley and Randall are the usual things in crockery-smashing comedy jugglers.

A Theatrical Shake-Up

There is keen rivalry between our stock company magnates, and it will be interesting to watch developments. Only the other day it was announced that Amelia Gardner was to become the leading lady of the Majestic, and now I am informed that she has given the management three weeks' notice and is going back to Los Angeles to become the leading lady of the Belasco theatre. Thomas Oberle joined that organization this week, and made a hit in "We 'Uns of Tennessee." There has been a big shake-up in the company since Manager Price went down. Adele Block, Martin Alsop, Louise Mackintosh and Robert Rogers have all been released, and Marie Howe, for six years at the Alcazar, is going down to open next week in "Lovers' Lane." Joseph Galbraith is to be the new leading man.

"Paul Kauvar"

Like "The Silver King," "Michael Strogoff" and "Around the World in Eighty Days," Steele Mackaye's "Paul Kauvar" has become a melodramatic classic. Its revival at the Central this week is therefore of more than usual interest. The play's scenes are laid in France during 1794, and the incidents are of the Revolution. There is a mob scene in the last act which reminds one of the mobs in "The Only Way" and "Du Barry."

but Mackaye wrote his play long before the Dickens story was dramatized, or Belasco arranged his sketches from the life of the king's mistress. "Paul Kauvar" is in five acts, with little change of scenery but much exciting incident. Mayall in the title role has a part that suits him well, the heroic, diplomatic painter-patriot. In the brown silk tights of the artist, and later in the uniform of a colonel on General Kleterre's staff, he is a picture to gladden the heart of the matinee girl. Shumer, too, is very happily cast as the Marquis de Vaux, the titled villain. His death in the last act is managed with considerable dramatic finesse. Corrigan invests the part of Potin, the one humorous touch in this sombre drama, with the spirit of true comedy. This is the first time Ethel Clifton has had a part that gives her any scope for emotional work. Hitherto her labors as leading lady have been small, and chiefly confined to changing her costume. But the part of Diane de Beaumont is fully as important as those of Paul and the Marquis, and Miss Clifton does not lessen its importance in any particular. She is a young actress, much younger than the average leading woman, but her talent and reserve force are not to be questioned.

Next Week's Bills

The scenes of "Glittering Gloria," which will be presented here with Isadore Rush in the title role, at the Columbia, are laid in London at the present time. The first act takes place in a Bond street jewelry shop; the second act shows the interior of Gloria's apartments, and the last act the baggage room at the Easton Station, with the train shed in the background. Miss Rush has a strong supporting company, including George Parsons, Wilton Heriot, Edward M. Favor, Burt G. Clark, Channez Olney, Lulu Loudon, J. Gunnis Davis, Thos. A. Kierman, Irma Davis, George Jackson and W. S. Freeman.

"Drusa Wayne," by Franklin Fyles, will be produced at the Alcazar for the first time in this city. There is a peculiar interest centred about this piece for the reason that it was originally written for Florence Roberts. At that time, however, there was some dispute over a certain point in the dialogue and the play was rejected. When the author heard of this he refused to permit the production to go in any stock company, preferring to hold it out until next season when he could select a star to take it on the road. Hearing, however, that Lillian Lawrence and John Craig were to lead the Alcazar stock, Mr. Fyles consented that the piece be produced here and he stated at the time that he could not have selected two stronger leading people.

"When We Were Twenty-One" will bring its most successful run of a week to a close at the Majestic tomorrow evening. Beginning Monday "Hamlet" will be the attraction, offered on a scale of magnificence so far as its scenic embellishment is concerned, equal to the far famed revivals given to the great Shakespearean dramas in New York. J. H. Gilmour will appear in the role of the Danish prince and Howard Gould will portray the part of Laertes while the other characters will be depicted by the pick of Mr. Morosco's clever players.

One of the most noteworthy attractions of the coming week will be the first presentation here of "Pretty Peggy," in which Jane Corcoran will be seen at the Grand for a two weeks' season beginning tomorrow (Sunday) matinee. "Pretty Peggy" is from the pen of Frances Aymar Mathews, writer of brilliant short sto-

A man of very interesting character is now stopping in San Francisco on his way to Arizona. It is C. H. Wilkie, the Pittsburg detective. For years past South Dakota has been the head and centre of the notorious "Circle Society" of cattle rustlers. A strip of fat cattle country extending from Canada to Mexico seemed to be at the mercy of this well organized gang. In this extremity a number of cattle raisers determined to clean out the bandits, so they employed Mr. Wilkie and a number of famous gun-fighters to tackle the job. Wilkie describes his exciting experiences and how he finally succeeded, in next Sunday's Bulletin. In the same issue is detailed the surprising adventure of a well-known Englishman who recently attempted to discover the identity of that mad masked beauty who created so much discussion when her picture in the "altogether" was exhibited in the Paris Salon. Madame Bavarde has her usual exclusive society chat, there are special articles on the making and preservation of beauty, the latest Paris fashions, the best cablegrams on European society and pages of other capital features in next Sunday's Bulletin.

The Sunday Call tomorrow will be strengthened by the addition of one of the very highest class four-page comic sections published in the United States, in addition to its usual excellent articles. "The Grafters," by Francis Lynde, is concluded. Following "The Grafters" will appear, complete in one installment, "The Second Mrs. Jim," by Stephen Conrad. Other features are: "The Adventures of Reuben," by Edward W. Townsend; "On and Off the Bread Wagon," by Charles Dryden; "No Man's Land," by Izolia Foresster, and a page of stories; "New Cloaks for Autumn," by Augusta Prescott; "The Bashful Girl and her Predicaments," by Madge Moore, the puzzle page and many shorter articles. In addition the great fifty dollar local fiction contest is inaugurated, full details of which appear in the Sunday Call.

ISADORE RUSH,

Who will be seen in John C. Fisher and Thomas W. Ryley's production of "Glittering Gloria," is notably one of the cleverest comediennes today upon the American stage. She has had a long and varied stage career, playing in a score of different pieces the last few years. She was joint star with the late Roland Reed for several seasons; following this she played Lady Holyrood in "Florodora" and last season was in "The Medal and the Maid." Her present characterization of Gloria enables her to be seen at her best and also permits of the display of some of those marvelous gowns for which she has always been noted. "Glittering Gloria" will be seen at the Columbia next week.

ries and novels. So well was the play received in the East that its engagement in New York endured for almost an entire season, first at the Herald Square and later at the Madison Square. Miss Corcoran is supported by a large company which includes many prominent players. Her leading man is Andrew Robson, who has himself been a successful star for some four or five years.

On Monday evening the Tivoli will offer, for the first time here, "The Messenger Boy," by the authors of "The Toreador." "The Messenger Boy" was originally produced in America in New York and ran there for over six months. The New York engagement followed a two years' run at the London Gaiety. From a scenic and costuming standpoint the Tivoli production of "The Messenger Boy" will rival the representation of the piece made in the East. It is a far more ambitious affair than "The Toreador" and the scenes of the piece are laid on the river Thames, on the quay of Brindisi, in Cairo, Egypt and Paris. The cast includes Simms, Schuster, Addison Braidwood, Harry Wiegand, Ben Dillon, Dora de Philippe, Aimee Leicester, Bessie Tannehill, Marie Young and Annette Barman.

"The Worst Woman in London," a highly sensational melodramatic play, will be produced at the Central for the first time in this city. The piece abounds in thrilling situations. The scenic effects include a burning building and one of the acts shows a circus with sawdust ring and trick horses, including a dozen or more performers who will do their various acts in full view of the audience. Mayall and all the Central favorites will be in the cast.

Watson, Hutchings, Edwards and Company, a clever aggregation of fun-makers, will make their first appearance in this city at the Orpheum next week, in "The Vaudeville Exchange." The Delmore Sisters, who made a great hit when last here, will return with an entire novelty. Halley and Meahan will give a few samples of Southern singing and dancing. The Petching Brothers will provide varied harmonies on all kinds of instruments.

At the Chutes the new ones will be the three Avolos, acrobatic marvels, direct from London; Robinson and Jones, colored comedians, singers and dancers.

Greet's Players at Mills College

Has anybody forgotten that bleak, gray day when Nance O'Neil played Rosalind on Sutro Heights while the fog rolled in and spoiled everything? The elements were more propitious when Ben Greet and his players produced "As You Like It" at Mills College last Saturday. The day was perfect; the place an ideal setting for Shakespeare's woodsy play. Just that morning the beautiful lawn had been cut and it was like walking on velvet, moving over the green turf. The tall hedge of trees in the background one could easily fancy was the famous forest of Arden. The audience was in keeping with play, day and players. Whoever missed seeing "As You Like It" last Saturday missed something that he will regret all his life not having seen. I have known better casts, as a whole, than that of Saturday, but never such a charming setting. The company seemed to breathe in the beauty of the day, and to be inspired by it. Constance Crawley was a new type of Rosalind, sweet and serious at times, then all alive with gayety and sportiveness. Agnes Scott was a pleasing Celia, and that is all Celia needs be. Orlando was just the mate for his Rosalind, and Ben Greet made an amazing Touchstone. After the performance the young women who attend Mills College served supper to those of the audience remaining over for the evening production. The girls were delightful hostesses, doing everything possible for the comfort of their guests. The evening affair was in Lisser hall, and barring the waits and cut-offs, was a good production of "The Merchant of Venice." As it was half after eight o'clock, however, before the play began, and ten-thirty when it ended, it can be seen that the "Merchant" was somewhat clipped to meet the situation. The audiences were large and enthusiastic both afternoon and evening.

The Burton Holmes "Travalogues" for this season include two on London, one being devoted to the city and the other to the suburbs, beautiful Ireland, Japan and the Russian empire. By special request the splendid lecture on Yosemite valley will be repeated at a matinee.

Poems in Prose

BY OSCAR WILDE.

(PUBLISHED BY REQUEST).

The Master

Now when the darkness came over the earth Joseph of Arimathea, having lighted a torch of pinewood, passed down from the hill into the valley. For he had business in his own home.

And kneeling on the flint stones of the Valley of Desolation he saw a young man who was naked and weeping. His hair was the color of honey, and his body was as a white flower, but he had wounded his body with thorns and on his hair had he set ashes as a crown.

And he who had great possessions said to the young man who was naked and weeping, "I do not wonder that your sorrow is so great, for surely He was a just man."

And the young man answered, "It is not for Him that I am weeping, but for myself. I too have changed water into wine, and I have healed the leper and given sight to the blind. I have walked upon the waters, and from the dwellers in the tombs I have cast out devils. I have fed the hungry in the desert where there was no food, and I have raised the dead from their narrow houses, and at my bidding, and before a great multitude of people, a barren fig tree withered away. All things that this man has done I have done also. And yet they have not crucified me."

The Artist

One evening there came into his soul the desire to fashion an image of The Pleasure that abideth for a Moment. And he went forth into the world to look for bronze. For he could only think in bronze.

But all the bronze of the whole world had disappeared, nor anywhere in the whole world was there any bronze to be found, save only the bronze of the image of The Sorrow that endureth for Ever.

Now this image he had himself, and with his own hands, fashioned, and had set it on the tomb of the one thing he had loved in life. On the tomb of the dead thing he had most loved had he set this image of his own fashioning, that it might serve as a sign of the love of man that dieth not, and a symbol of the sorrow of man that endureth for ever. And in the whole world there was no other bronze save the bronze of this image.

And he took the image he had fashioned, and set it in a great furnace, and gave it to the fire.

And out of the bronze of the image of The Sorrow that endureth for Ever he fashioned an image of The Pleasure that abideth for a Moment.

A Woman's Way

BY ROBERT MACE.

She leaned back languidly in her chair, and looked at Tom Austin through her half-open eyelids. She blew a dainty whiff of cigarette smoke in the air, and watched the white cloud mounting upward to the bronze chandelier.

"I'm afraid, dear boy, that your friends would be shocked," she said, a faint smile parting her lips.

The smoke faded away slowly. Then she looked at the toe of her slipper.

"Oh, what do I care for my friends," said Austin impatiently. "You're free from Branson now, and—"

"I didn't know that he made much difference."

"He made a great deal of difference. And now that you are divorced you must marry me. I know you love me and I want you to make me happy."

The smoke made Mrs. Branson's face indistinct for a moment, and when it had cleared away Austin noticed that her countenance wore an expression of earnestness.

"But your friends know that he obtained the decree, and they would be shocked at your imprudence."

"Oh, hang my friends. I know you better than they do."

"But I am afraid you would be an exacting husband; that you would want to keep me caged. You know I like my freedom."

She walked across the room and looked in a cheval glass. She gazed at the reflection like a woman looking into the eyes of a lover. Her rounded arms crept forward from out of her flowing sleeves, and she began fastening into place the vagrant strands of auburn hair which had escaped.

Austin was gazing passionately at her. She smiled at him in the mirror, and he arose and went over and put his arms around her.

"I know you would never do anything indiscreet if you were my wife," he said softly. He took both her hands and squeezed them until the blood burned in the finger tips.

"I'm afraid that if we married you would cease to be my lover," said Mrs. Branson. "Husbands are never sentimental toward their wives."

"But I shall be both lover and husband," urged Austin, and he embraced her fervently.

"And you won't mind what your friends think?"

"Hang my friends!"

"But they think you are such an innocent, virtuous boy, and they may say that I trapped you. People are unkind, you know, and they invariably sympathize with the model young man who marries the gay young widow." Mrs. Branson surveyed Tom through her half-open eyelids again and lighted another cigarette.

"But you know that I am not so innocent, don't you?" And Tom Austin stretched his six feet of manhood and surveyed himself proudly in the mirror.

"I have met more sophisticated men," was Mrs. Branson's playful rejoinder.

"I am wiser than you think, and I can read a woman. I know that you love me, and I want you to marry me." Again he indulged in affectionate demonstration, and between puffs of her cigarette Mrs. Branson indulged him.

"So you really won't be satisfied unless I become your wife?" she said in a despairing tone.

"I'll kill myself if you refuse," was his tragic response.

A generous offer. The Tourist Outfitting Co., 227 Montgomery St., will allow 10 per cent off all goods if this ad. is presented when purchase is made.

"Then let us have a home wedding," said the charming widow, and she winked at herself in the mirror over Tom's shoulder.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Department No. 3. No. 92728.

MAY HARVEY ELY,

Plaintiff.

vs.

FRANCIS H. B. ELY,

Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the Complaint filed in said County in the office of the Clerk of the said Superior Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to:

FRANCIS H. B. ELY, Defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, upon the ground of Defendant's willful desertion of Plaintiff for the period of more than one year continuously, next immediately preceding the date of the commencement of this action, and also upon the ground of Defendant's failure to provide for Plaintiff the common necessities of life he having the ability so to do, for the period of more than one year continuously next preceding the date of the commencement of this action; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

All of which will more fully appear in the Complaint on file herein to which you are hereby referred.

AND YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

GIVEN under my hand and the Seal of said Superior Court at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 7th day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and four.

JOHN J. GREIF, Clerk.

Music

A Dialogue Not on the Program

Some people go to concerts and plays for the purpose of "knocking" them afterwards. Some go because they think it is the correct thing to be there. Very few, I should judge from my observations, go solely for the purpose of enjoying the music or the acting. At Sousa's concert last Thursday night I sat two seats back of a couple who talked audibly through the entire program. Their conversation was animated and not a little annoying to those in their neighborhood who had come to the hall to hear Sousa's band and not a dialogue. It seemed perfectly absurd that the couple should have attended the concert at all. On a bench in the park, or on the veranda of the Cliff House, they could have pursued their conversation with ease. The only time they stopped their chat for an instant was when Miss Liebling sang the "Hamlet" aria, and the pianissimo passages awed them to silence. But they were up again and doing as soon as the applause began at the conclusion of the aria.

I wonder, by the way, why Sousa still retains a vocalist on his programs? I do not think any one really cares for the soloists. What the majority goes to the Sousa concerts for is to hear the band and watch the leader's poses. If Sousa only had his own compositions on the bill I believe he would please his audience just as well. Miss Liebling has a voice that has received good cultivation but it is sharp and shrill, the effect perhaps of trying to sing above the band. Miss Straus, the violinist, is a very pretty young girl and a witch at the bow.

The Kopta Recital

Wenzel Kopta's violin recital of last Sunday was a complete artistic success. Kopta is not only master of the technical resources of his instrument, but has the gift also of calling out its power of emotional expression. The program of Sunday's concert made demands upon the artist in both of these directions. Bazzini's concerto for violin, (Op. 15) led the program very auspiciously, and was followed by a most interesting group consisting of Beethoven's "Romance" in F Major, a Becker "Gavotte," one of Dvorak's Slavic dances, and a canzonetta from the Tchaikowsky Concerto (Op. 35). It would be difficult to say which of these was most beautifully played. If the Romance had the most breadth and feeling, the Dvorak dance had the most color, and yet nothing could be more charming than the fluent Canzonetta with its whispered ending. Mr. Kopta seemed to me least at home in the Paganini Campanella. I do not care for its empty fireworks, but the audience clamored for more, and the artist reappeared with "The Cascade," to play which he must own a bow arm of flexible steel. The Vieuxtemps Ballad and Polonaise ended Mr. Kopta's part of the program. I have had many occasions to praise Mr. Gyula Ormay's talent as an accompanist. He plays easily and always does the right thing at the right time. Miss Maude Hohman, the soprano, is disappointing. Her voice is brilliant and its range is good, but her method is faulty and she shows no trace of feeling. Her style is that of an amateur, lacking artistic finish. She was altogether inadequate in Chaminade's "Summer," and Oscar Weil's "Spring Song." Mr. Kopta's recital was a good introduction to the series of chamber concerts which begin next Sunday, and which students and music lovers can not afford to miss. Special rates are offered to students.

Ex-Californian in New York

W. H. Keith, a former San Franciscan, at present the baritone of the Washington Avenue Baptist church in New York, scored another triumph at the October monthly musical service, a correspondent informs me. In "Crucifixus," by Faure, the duet for tenor and baritone, Mr. Keith was heard to advantage, but his solo was the feature of the service. In the selection "Why do the nations rage and the people imagine a vain thing" from Handel's "Messiah," Mr. Keith surpassed himself, executing the difficult runs and crescendo passages with ease and great sweetness of tone. The church was packed to the doors, as it always is when it is known that Mr. Keith is to sing, reminding his auditors from San Francisco of the old days in St. Luke's, when Martin Schultz was the organist and his wife the soprano. Then the newspaper announcement, "Keith will sing the offertory," filled every pew in the fashionable yet devout St. Luke's on the avenue.

Equip yourself for that trip at the Tourist Outfitting Co., 227 Montgomery St. Present this ad. and you will get 10 per cent discount off everything you buy.

Mrs. Lillie Birmingham was soloist at the symphony concert in Festival hall, St. Louis, on October seventh. The St. Louis Republic said of her: "With the greatest ease, power and resonance, she sang from E flat to B flat. Her voice is rich, dramatic and of intense sympathetic quality." Miss Genevieve Moroney accompanied Mrs. Birmingham. They both go to New York next and possibly thence to Germany.
